Robert enlisted in the service of the country, and bade farewell to the "dear ones at home." Not being able to bear the hardships of the army, he was discharged from service, and expected soon to be at home again; but death had marked him for his victim, and far from the dearest objects of his love he sleeps, to awake when Jesus' voice shall penetrate the grave and bid the sleepers rise. A dear companion, one beloved child, and other grief-stricken ones, mourn his loss. May God's grace support them in this trying hour. R. R. YORK.

EUGENE C. TAYLOR.

Died in Lafayette, April 24th, of diphtheria, Eugene C., son of Thomas C. and Elizabeth Taylor, aged ten years and four months.

His father and little brother sleep by his side. He leaves a mother to mourn his loss. May the Lord sustain her in her deep afflictions.

Services were attended by Bro. Edwin Wood.

A. G. HOLLAND.

MARY W. CARPENTER.

Died in Providence, R. I., May 9th, 1864, Mary W. Carpenter, aged sixteen years, one month, and twenty-one days.

The subject of this notice experienced religion soon after she was taken sick. She desired very much to be baptized, but never became sufficiently strong to go to the water. She has left a brother, about fourteen years of age, who very much feels his loss. The funeral was attended by Eld. B. F. Sumerbell, who delivered a very consoling discourse. C. H. SWEET.

POPULATION OF ROME.—By a recent statistical account, there are included 48,000 cardinals, prelates, priests, abbes, monks, and persons receiving greater or less income from the church; 10,000 women of religious orders; 1000 beggars, who pay for a first class patent, empowering them to exercise their professions upon the steps of St. Peter's; 6000 beggars who pay for a second class patent, admitting them to practice at the doors of the other churches, before the theatres, in the streets, and other public places; 2000 women who live by serving as models to painters and sculptors, or by begging when that resource fails; 4000 soldiers of all nationalities; 30,000 servants; 20,000 Jewish "pariahs;" 50,000 Romans, called citizens, but having no part in administering the government, and most of them in a condition bordering closely on misery.

JEWS.—Jacob Saffi, a Jerusalem Rabbi, is in Australia, collecting funds for erecting Jewish buildings on Mount Zion. The Rabbi speaks English, and converses fluently in Hebrew, German, Spanish, Italian, and Arabic. There are now nearly 8000 Jews at Jerusalem. An opinion prevails amongst them that Scripture warrants a belief that the Holy City is to be re-established on Mount Zion.

RECEIPTS.—A hot shovel held over varnished furniture will take out white spots.

Ribbons of any kind should be washed in cold soap-suds and rinsed.

If your flat-irons are rough, rub them well with fine salt, and it will make them smooth.

Oat straw is the best for filling beds, and should be changed once a year.

A bit of soap rubbed on the hinges of doors will prevent their creaking.

Scotch snuff put in the holes where crickets come out will destroy them.

Half a cranberry bound on a corn will soon kill it.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Liverpool May 14th, Queenstown 15th.

THE DANO-GERMAN WAR.

The Conference met again in London on the 12th. The Daily News says the Conference approached the question of the political future of the Duchies. The discussion which took place, however, did scarcely more than to make evident the immense divergencies of views of the several powers, and the difficulties which would attend the arrangement of acceptable terms of peace.

After sitting thirty-one hours, the Conference adjourned to May 18.

It was rumored at Paris that Austria and Prussia, in the Conference, declared that under the events of the war they considered themselves released from the treaty of 1852. Russia and England maintain that treaty.

Three Austrian war vessels had arrived at Cherbourg.

It is estimated that there are now lying blockaded in the Baltic ports of Germany no less than eight hundred vessels; and the whole grain traffic of the north of Germany has been thrown into complete disorder. A fall of 70 per cent in the price of grain has taken place in consequence of this condition of things.

Liverpool May 18th, Queenstown 19th.

The Conference held a three hours session on the 17th inst. All the members were present. The Daily News says they can hardly be said to have advanced a single step and the prospect of an agreement is as distant as ever. No common basis of discussion has yet been agreed upon. The Germans repudiate altogether the treaty engagements. The Conference adjourned to May 26, when more than half the time fixed for a truce will have expired.

It is asserted on good authority that Prince Frederick Charles of Prussia has been appointed commander-in-chief of the Dutch.

DOMESTIC.

North Anna River, May 25th. The army of Gen. Grant is gradually working its way toward the South Anna River.

There was a good deal of sharp skirmishing last night between the Second and Ninth Corps and the enemy. Cannonading had been kept up all day between the rebel rear-guard and our advance—evidencing that Lee intended to contest every point of our forward movement, but Gen. Grant moved too rapidly and determinedly to allow obstructions materially to hinder his advance.

Fortress Monroe, May 25. The steamer George Washington, from Bermuda Landing, reports that yesterday afternoon at 2 o'clock, Fitzhugh Lee with 2000 cavalry attacked our garrison at Wilson's Landing, and came near overpowering our forces, though they fought valiantly with the aid of one gunboat. At 4 o'clock reinforcements arrived from Fort Powhattan, and the fight continued with great severity until 7 o'clock, when the enemy were repulsed in great disorder, leaving 200 or 300 wounded on the field. Our loss was 40 wounded.

New York, May 27. The Times' dispatch says the rebels have been discovered in a strong position covering Saxton's Junction, with their right resting on Little Swamp and the left on Little River, a rapid and rugged stream. Thus situated they can make a strong resistance to Gen. Grant's advance, though there is no reason why the position cannot be flanked.

The World's dispatch says Lee's army is between the stream called Little River and South Anna. Yesterday morning there was every indication that the enemy intended to give battle, but our reconnoissances gave evidence that Lee was retreating to the south bank of the South Anna river; but whether to make a stand there or fall back to the defenses of Richmond was unknown.

The Herald's correspondent says the struggle for Taylor's Bridge, over the North Anna, was severe and contested on the rebel side with much spirit. Law's and Longstreet's corps were posted in strong earthworks, and appeared to think that they could hold them, but Gen. Birney's division advanced against them. The rebels opened a terrible fire; still our troops advanced, and at the point of the bayonet carried the redoubt, bayoneting the rebels in the intrenchments and taking many prisoners. Gen. Hancock congratulated Gen. Birney and his men for their bravery.

The rebels retreated across the river on Taylor's Bridge, and an assault on the bridge was immediately made by the 4th Maine regiment. A sharp skirmish ensued and the bridge was carried.

At 11 P. M. the rebels returned to recover the bridge, but in twenty minutes were driven back. At midnight they came again in stronger force and drove our men away, but the 7th N. Y. heavy artillery came up and the rebels were soon forced to retire.

At 7 o'clock next morning Gen. Birney crossed his division, and soon after the whole of Gen. Hancock's corps was on the other of the North Anna, one part within 400 yards of the rebel intrenchments.

The Herald's correspondent says our losses on the 23d and 24th do not exceed 500 in killed, wounded and missing, while that of the rebels amount to that in killed and wounded, and we have about 1000 prisoners.

The World's dispatch, dated 25th, says the entire army is on the south bank of the North Anna.

LATER.

There is considerable picket firing on our centre, but no batteries have opened yet. The Fifth and Sixth corps are advancing, and will soon determine if there is to be a fight.

New York, May 28th. The Tribune's headquarters dispatch, dated May 25th, 11 A. M., says at the time Gen. Birney's division carried the rifle pits and North Anna bridge, our right wing, under Gen. Warren, advanced, cutting the Virginia Central Railroad and establishing himself in position at Noel's Station. The rebel line forms two sides of a triangle, its apex being opposite Oxford, where Gen. Burnside crossed on the night of the 24th.

Gen. Hancock confronts the enemy's right wing on our left, and his line extends parallel with that of the enemy across the railroad.

Gen. Burnside's line is in a position opposite the apex of the enemy's works, and faces southward. The enemy's works front Gen. Hancock and can only be carried with great loss.

The Tribune's dispatch dated near Hanover Junction, 25th, 9 A. M., says Gen. Hancock, on crossing the North Anna, was in position before night along the Bull Marsh Creek, half a mile beyond the river.

Preparations for an assault upon the enemy's works were made, but a tremendous thunder storm prevented its execution.

Gen. Warren holds a position along the Gordonsville Railroad.

Several lines of the enemy's works, abandoned by them, are in our possession. They are very strong in front of us, however.

Gen. Grant's headquarters are beyond the North Anna, near Jericho Mills.

Gen. Sheridan and his cavalry have been heard from. He destroyed a large amount of property and rendered useless some distance of the Danville Railroad. The enemy's cavalry were unable to offer any opposition.

WASHINGTON, May 30—0.30 A. M.

To Maj. Gen. Dix:

No official dispatches from the Army of the Potomac have been received since my telegram of Saturday evening.

A telegram from Gen. Sherman, dated near Dallas, yesterday 29th, 7.30 A. M., reports that on Saturday an engagement took place between the enemy and McPherson's corps, in which the rebels were driven back with a loss to them of 2500 killed and wounded left in our hands and about 300 prisoners, Gen. McPherson's loss being not over 300 in all.

(Signed) E. M. STANTON.
Secretary of War.

The Herald's correspondent says the wounded rebel officers say their losses in the late battles reach 30,000; also that the rebel army did not expect such persistent fighting by our army, and attribute the change to Gen. Grant. They are much dissatisfied with it.

New York, May 30. The Tribune learns from Washington that the disagreements existing between the French and their allies in Mexico are daily increasing. The Mexican forces were constantly augmenting, and are all ready for action. The French and their allies instead of gaining any advantages lately, had been routed in the States of Tobasco, Chiapas, Campeachy, Oaxaca, Jalisto, and Tamaulipas. Their communications are interrupted, and the patriotic Mexicans are far from submitting to the French.

NEWS FROM REBELDOM. All the actors in the Richmond theatres have been impressed into the rebel army and the theatres closed.

A special correspondent of the Richmond Enquirer is very much dissatisfied with the conduct of Gen. Grant, and says that any other General but him would have retreated and acknowledged himself whipped.

A company of two hundred and fifty criminals has been raised in the Richmond jails and sent into the field.

The Southern Churchman says if Lee and Johnston meet with disaster the Confederates may reach the conclusion that longer strife on their part is vain. Even a drawn battle, it says, would be disadvantageous to the rebels, for the resources of the United States would prove too much for them in the end.

☞ Another "crisis" is apprehended in Canada and another ministerial change, the tenth within two years. The public securities of Canada, which five years ago were sixteen per cent, premium, today are only worth ninety, and things in the province are in a bad way generally.

For the World's Crisis.

"WATCHMAN, WHAT OF THE NIGHT?"

"The burden of Dumah. He calleth to me out of Seir, Watchman, what of the night? Watchman, what of the night? The watchman said, The morning cometh, and also the night: if ye will inquire, inquire ye: return, come."—Isa. 21: 11, 12.

Watchman, tell us what thou seest
Peering through the shades of night;
At what mean these shouts of battle?
Whence this strange, portentous light?
Hoarsely cannon bay to cannon,
Shrieks and groans affright the sky,
Quivers earth with tread of millions
Doomed by brother's arm to die.

Answering—The morning cometh,
Clad in vestments red with blood;
Fearfully the light revealeth
Where night's baleful horrors stood.
Still the smoking sacrifices
Rise in blasphemy to God,
And fell war—a conflagration
Spreads wherever man has trod.

And also the night is coming,
Fraught with dreadful, dark dismay,
Hear you not the rush of angels
Through the terror-stricken day?
Feel you not the breath of demons,
Hot and baleful as they roam?
Trembling mortal, haste! inquire!
Come! return! avoid the doom!

HAILSTONES.—Rev. 16: 21.

BRO. GRANT:—I have been designing for some time past to write an article on the hailstones of Rev. 16: 21, endeavoring to show from past instances the probability that they will be meteoric stones, such as have fallen frequently in our day, and in former times. The late article of Bro. Taylor called up the matter afresh, and I concluded to write.

Q. What is an ærolite?

A. It is a stone falling from the air.

Q. Have stones ever been known to fall from the air?

A. They have, and in great numbers.

He then gives some of the most remarkable falls of stones in the following table, showing description, place and time of each fall:—

Large stone, near the river Negos, Thrace, second year of the 78th Olympiad.
A stone of 59 lbs., on Mount Vasier Provence, Nov. 27th, 1627.
Two large stones, weighing 20 lbs., Liponas in Bresse, Sept., 1753.
Two stones, 200 and 300 lbs., near Verona, in 1762.

In the table he mentions other falls of stones, but they are of less importance than those which I have given. He also mentions a "shower of mercury," a "shower of sulphur" on several occasions, a "shower of fire," a "shower of iron," a "mass of iron 70 cubic feet," a "mass of iron fourteen quintals," a "stony mass," etc., while there are many other important falls of stones which he has not given. Humboldt, in his Cosmos, states that the Chinese records mention "sixteen falls of ærolites for the epoch from the middle of the seventh century before Christ, up to 333 years after Christ." Vol. 4, p. 206. Without attempting to enumerate instances, he alludes in the course of his remarks to six falls of meteoric stones in the present century, namely, 1803, 1807, 1821, 1822, 1843, and 1847. Dr. Dick mentions one as taking place in 1810, and another in 1814. And our papers in the last few years record several instances occurring in our country. One happened in Boylston, N. Y., on June 14th, 1859, attended with a most terrific noise, breaking glass in its vicinity, and tearing up the ground for rods. Another happened in New Concord, Ohio, in May, 1860, when several stones fell, the heaviest weighing 56 lbs. I have learned of others in the few years past, but have not the accounts before me.

Humboldt thinks that "two-thirds of the meteoric stones lie at the bottom of the sea, and escape our observation." He thus describes the usual phenomena:—

"Meteoric stones are in some instances thrown from dark clouds, suddenly formed in a clear sky, and fall with a noise resembling thunder. Whole districts have thus occasionally been covered with thousands of fragmentary masses, of uniform character, but unequal magnitude, that have been hurled from one of these moving clouds. In less frequent cases, as in that which occurred on the 16th of Sept., 1843, near Mukhausen, a large ærolite fell with a thundering crash while the sky was clear and cloudless."—Vol. 1, p. 114.

He says "the largest meteoric masses as yet known are those of Otumpa in Chaco, and Bahia in Brazil, described by Rubi de Celis as being from seven to seven and a half feet. The meteoric stone of Ægos Petamos, celebrated in antiquity, and even mentioned in the chronicle of the Parian marbles, which fell about the year in which Socrates was born, has been described as of the size of two millstones. The huge ærolite which in the beginning of the tenth century fell into the river at Narni, projected between three and four feet above the surface of the water."—Vol. 1, p. 117.

The greatest number which he speaks of as falling at any one time, is three thousand; and the largest number exceeding a hundred pounds, in any one shower, so far as noticed by him, is ten.

Dr. Dick, after describing several instances of stones falling, attended by a fearful noise resembling the roar of artillery or the discharge of musketry, adds: "Several hundreds of instances similar to the above might be produced of large masses of stone having fallen from the upper regions upon the earth. These stones, although they have not the smallest analogy with any of the mineral substances already known either of a volcanic or any other nature, have a very peculiar and striking analogy with each other. They have been found at places very remote from each other, and at very distant periods. The mineralogists who have examined them agree that they have no resemblances to mineral substances, properly so called, nor have they been described by mineralogical authors. They have, in short, a peculiar aspect and peculiar character which belong to no native rocks or stones with which we are acquainted. They appear to have fallen from various points of the heavens, at all periods, in all seasons of the year, at all hours both of the day and night, in all countries of the world, on mountains, and in places most remote from any volcano."—Celestial Scenery, Sec. 5.

These showers of stones have killed individuals in their fall frequently; as, a monk at Crema, Sept., 1511, and another monk at Milan, in 1650; two Swedish sailors, on their ship, in 1674; and a considerable portion of the army of the Ammonites while engaged in a battle with Israel; Josh. 10: 11.

Some suppose because the word "hailstones" is used in the account of the last fall as we find it in the Bible, that we must therefore regard it as frozen rain. But the account speaks of them expressly as "great stones," and Dr. Parkhurst says that the original indicates our ordinary stones. But it would be very natural for us to speak of a shower of stones from heaven as hailstones, whatever might be their substance. So the term hailstones in Rev. is used, I judge, not so much to designate the substance, as the idea that they shall fall from heaven in a shower.

Hence I conclude that, since these showers have been real and frequent, since they have fallen to the number of thousands in a shower, varying in weight from ounces to tons; and since God has on one occasion sent a a shower of them to destroy his enemies, calling them "hailstones," we may more reasonably look for a shower of real stones—meteoric stones—rather than frozen rain.

Another consideration in support of this view is, that the "mighty thunderings," and the "great noise," with which the heavens shall "pass away," invariably attend this phenomena; whereas, the freezing of rain, especially to the extent of filling the air with stones of more than an hundred weight each, could hardly consist with the earth burning "as an oven," and the elements melting "with fervent heat," at the same time. May we have Christ for our refuge amid the terrors of that dread day, is my prayer.

For the World's Crisis.

STIFF NECKS AND STRAIT JACKETS.

The Lord passes them by unblessed! How can he do otherwise? How can he bless them? How can salvation come where sectarian walls remain, like pillars of brass, immovable? where the different evangelical sects stand aloof from each other, refuse to unite in saving souls? This absence of God's Spirit is remarkable in the visitations of God's special mercy. Wherever God's people have laid aside all party spirit, all sectarian biases, and united honestly and heartily in promoting a general revival, there God has met them, poured out his Spirit overflowingly! Consequently nearly every soul, in some villages, has bowed humbly to the Prince of Peace!

While in other places, where the brazen walls of sectarianism remain adamantinely, there the Spirit has been measurably withheld.

"Is it for sect or creed to fight,
To call our zeal the rule of right,
When what we wish is, at the best,
To see our church excel the rest?"

How clearly and forcibly has God manifested his displeasure at these divisions and subdivisions, this selfishness of the sect! Thousands on thousands of souls perish annually, go down to the pit, that might be saved everlastingly, were it not for this wicked abomination. And who is responsible for these souls lost, forever lost? Whose skirts are stained with blood? Whose? "Now I beseech you, brethren, by the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye all speak the same thing, and that there be no divisions among you."

"Let party names no more
The christian world o'erspread;
Gentile and Jew, and bond and free,
Are one in Christ their head."

Reader, are you in this strait jacket? with a stiff neck? Is it pleasant, well pleasing to your heavenly Father to remain thus in a nutshell religion? a pent up, conservative, sectarian atmosphere?

John Wesley, the celebrated founder of Methodism, in his preface to Notes on the New Testament, uses the following prayer, which deserves the serious and candid consideration of every admirer of that distinguished man, and servant of God.

"Would to God that all the party names and unscriptural phrases and forms which have divided the christian world were forgotten; and that we might all agree to sit down together as humble, loving disciples at the feet of our common Master, to hear his word, imbibe his Spirit, and to transcribe his life in our own."

Such was the language of that great and good man at an age or time of life when his thoughts had matured and ripened into fixed principles; and when experience had taught him the evil of "party names," and divisions among the humble, loving disciples of Christ.

We have no love or veneration for any name applied to the disciples of Christ, but that which expresses our relationship to him; and our oneness with the Father, and with his Son Jesus Christ. Much depends upon a name. A mere name is often of more importance than many are aware. We have long believed, and experience has confirmed us in the opinion, that the christian world is more divided in name than in feeling and principle. In feeling, true and devoted christians cannot be divided. Their feelings are one and the same.

The great matter with all of us should be, to cultivate a spirit of true christian fellowship with all who love our Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity. There is a religion—alas, how common—which never rises above sectarian prejudices. But there is also, blessed be God, a religion which rises above all merely human distinction, and finds fellowship with kindred spirits without regard to denominational distinctions. Examples of this character we have seen. Holy hearts are drawn together naturally, by heavenly attraction. Oh, it is pleasant to mingle in the society of such—the very atmosphere seems melted into love, and we all seem to breathe the element which sustains the spiritual life of angels. True and entire holiness, and this alone, will produce such union.

"It would not be easy to estimate adequately the value of this union in promoting love among brethren, making prayer acceptable to God, in preparing christian hearts for the indwelling of the Spirit, and in removing from christianity an indefinite amount of scandal. It reminds us of the prayer of our Savior 'that they all may be one;' and of the great end to be gained by this union, viz., 'that the world may believe that thou hast sent me.' The tendency and the power of this union to enforce conviction as to Christ's divine mission, and thus to promote a saving faith in him, have been shown to be very great. Only let this union become complete—then shall we see the way of the Lord prepared for salvation to our world."

Here we stand on common ground, and nothing but the spirit of this blessed book, the Bible, will finally eradicate forever this sectarian spirit, this monster with many heads.

"Away then with this evil, ye who love
The holy principles of God's blessed word,
And to the truthful pattern there inscribed
Study to bear resemblance. Use no more
Your 'shibboleths,' and rods, or measuring lines,
But make alone the perfect law of love
The testing point, standard of fellowship;
So shall ye flourish like the 'bay trees' green,
And freshly watered, and the word of life
Like rivers flow unfettered, while the Lord
Shall be well pleased, and smile approvingly."

The absorbing question should be always (not the building of sects,) how can we most honor God in doing good to all? What shall we do to save sinners, redeem a world of rebels lost! deliver them from the wrath to come?

"Behold how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity."

"How beautiful is christian love!
How sweet the fellowship we prove
Of kindred hearts—in Jesus one,
O, this is heaven on earth begun!
This glorious Christian Union!"

THAT CARPET.

"What carpet?" Why, the one the good Sister did n't buy. "Why did n't she buy it?" Oh! she made a sacrifice for the cause of God. Say, Sisters, would you have done so? Carpets are a convenience; they save a great amount of hard work, and this Sister, as she spends her time as much as possible for the cause of Christ, needs all the labor-saving fixings. But she could do without the new carpet, if God's cause required it. The old one was worn thread-bare, holes in it, perhaps, and the new one was needed, if a carpet was ever needed; but it was n't bought. The Sister said, without intending to represent that she had made any great sacrifice,—

"Husband promised me the carpet, but he found a use for the money for the glory of God, and it went that way"; and she added her sanction to the act by saying, "All do not know how much he sacrifices." I learned more of him after that, when I found him preaching at his own expense and giving away money, or that which was worth money, and to do so wearing ordinary clothes.

"What, was this Sister a preacher's wife, Bro. M.?" Yes, and I suppose preachers' wives have natural tastes for comforts and good appearances as much as others; but many of them have caught the spirit of self-sacrifice like this Sister; and some of them must sacrifice any way, for they do not get support enough unless "husband" works with his hands, and then the preaching is like the "lean kine," small and weak.

But I commenced this to say a word about sacrifices in ordinary things. There is a difference in people about that. Some of the good brethren and sisters can make the old carpet or none at all do; the old dress can be fixed over a little, and the old bonnet is made to answer even when there are means at hand to buy another, and the means are used for good. If there are not means, of course the "ripping, pieceing and pulling" must be done; but in either case it is done cheerfully for the glory of God. Oh! how much of this spirit there is in some hearts. The last great day will reveal more than these days can how much such patiently suffer privations, laying themselves and their all on the altar, making "a covenant by sacrifice."

But there are others who seem to forget, or who never have learned, what is meant by it. They can have their extra dresses if they want them, and their new bonnets every time the fashions change, and—now don't start, Sisters; I'll say it in the fear of God,—as though God had not made their ears long enough, or of the proper color, or put fancy work enough about their necks, they put on the jewelry, contrary to God's word, and so hang out the sign that there is pride in the heart and a love of the world, and it is done, too, when God's cause needs the extra time spent and the cost of these extra and ornamental things.

Such do not realize that some of God's ministers and their wives are pinched by poverty and shiver in the cold wintry blasts, and money is needed to keep them free to work, with fresh energies and courage, and so enable them to give "each his portion in due season." Nor is this all. There are many ways of doing good that the self-sacrificing find, and they are blessed; and at the same time "lay up their treasures in heaven."

Now, brethren and sisters, I want you to pray over this matter, and see if you are not taking some ease and comfort at the expense of God's cause, and if you find you have not done as much as you should, go and do, and do not simply what you can and not feel it, but make some sacrifices. Brethren, give up your tobacco and other indulgences. Sisters, give up your extra dresses and jewelry, and if God's cause requires it, even "that carpet" you want so much, and bring your tithes into God's storehouse, and get a blessing that there will not be room enough to receive it.

THE INCREASE OF KNOWLEDGE.

The prophecy declared by Daniel through inspiration two thousand four hundred years ago, of the increase of knowledge, was to be fulfilled in the "time of the end," when wickedness was coming to the full. This prophecy was to be a sign of the times, and connected with the near coming of Christ, which we are commanded to discern (Matt. 16: 3); thus proving it to be a christian's duty still to watch the signs of the times. It is not every epoch or crisis that is preceded by signs, only those of paramount importance to man; such as the first and also the second advent of Christ.

That the above prophecy has a direct reference to this time, no candid mind can dispute; for it is fully proved, beyond the possibility of a doubt, that we have entered into the time of the end. It occupies a prominent place not only in prophecy but as a present truth, acting as a shining light to the weary pilgrim as he journeys on to the perfect day.

This period of time is marked out by God for the comfort of his church, that they might lift up their heads and rejoice in view of redemption near.

The vast increase of knowledge within the past forty-two years has completely revolutionized all the arts and sciences, and knowledge of all kinds. Instance the printing press. Instead of the old Franklin press, we have the revolving cylinder, whereby books, papers, and tracts can be made by the million. Then there is the Telegraph, where the lightnings of heaven are used to transmit intelligence from one part of the world to another, almost destroying both time and distance. Dr. Cumming states that he heard a person make the critical remark that these words are literally translated—"Knowledge shall be darted"—like lightning. It would exactly describe the phenomenon of the electric wire.

A late writer in the Advocate and Witness suggests that "an interesting thought connected with this subject is, that the Hebrew word translated in this prophecy 'increased,' may be rendered 'shooting forth as the lightning.' In view of this, some have supposed that the Telegraph was really intended. Whether it is so or not, it is sufficiently wonderful to claim a place in prophecy." But is it not true to the very letter that knowledge is darted like the lightning, when the messages from Queen Victoria to James Buchanan, etc., were passed from continent to continent in a few seconds of time? Is it possible, I ask, to have a better fulfillment of the prophecy of Daniel?

A Sandwich Island paper has the following on this passage—"Many shall run to and fro":—"The time would appear to have arrived when this portion of the prophet Daniel's vision was to be fulfilled." The American Messenger for March, 1860, has the following, in an article headed, "The Electric Telegraph." "A recent English author, in commenting on the passage, 'Many shall run to and fro,' says, that there are two Hebrew verbs, which differ from each other only in a letter; if one verb is used, the translation will be as we have it; if the other, then it means—'Knowledge shall be flashed like the lightning flame.' If this be the correct translation, it would be a striking prediction fulfilled in the present age."

In these days our air is almost netted over with wires. In the small isle of Great Britain alone, there were in use four years ago fifty thousand miles of telegraph wires, over six times the diameter of the globe. And what is this compared with the number in this country? The Morse line alone has over thirty-seven thousand miles of telegraph line.

As an illustration of what may be conveyed to the mind by the expression, "run to and fro," let us bear in mind the modern inventions in steam and rail cars, which rails almost net the earth, as if to keep it from falling to pieces. The prophet Nahum has declared that, "in the day of his preparation," "The chariots shall seem like torches, they shall run like the lightning."—Nahum 2. Place by the side of this our advertisements for the "Lightning Trains," and we can hardly fail to be impressed with the thought that this is very like that spoken by the prophet. In a poem by Dr. J. Holmes, published in the Maine Farmer, entitled "The Locomotive," he says—

"Knowledge flies like lightning";

And—

"Locomotives preach."

It was time that brought us out as a people; and I think that time, or growing in the knowledge and grace of Jesus Christ, ought to distinguish us until we realize our hope—the redemption of the body, and the possession of our eternal crown of glory. Although the world thinks it an awful thing for this dispensation to close, the christian is commanded to "lift up (his) head, and rejoice," in view of redemption near. And it is passing strange that there are some who would sooner cling to the aches, pains, and dying groans, the bitter partings, and all the ills that flesh is heir to, than exchange this world for another and happier, better world, when a better genesis shall come, making Paradise more glorious than before, knowing no death, but where all is one eternal sunshine of health and life, with unalloyed happiness for eternity. It is strange that people object to hear of the end of this generation, when they know that the vast population of the globe is numbered with the dead in a generation of time; when but a few years place us in the cold, icy hand of death. Every family has lost some dear one in this our scattering time.

But the gathering time is coming, when the shout will be, "Lo, this is our God; we have waited for him." "O death! where is thy sting? O grave! where is thy victory?"

MR. MILLER AND THE METHODIST MINISTERS.

A Sister, eighty-four years old, requests the insertion of this.

In September, 1844, Mr. Miller was passing down the Muskingum river to Marietta, to take a boat from thence to Philadelphia. On going on board the boat for Marietta, he found between forty and fifty Methodist ministers, who were on their way to that city, to attend the M. E. Conference. Mr. M. noticed some sly glances from one to another, which seemed to say, "We will have some sport with the old gentlemen." He however took no notice of them, but went to a retired part of the deck, and commenced reading. Soon a dandy-looking minister walked past him several times, and finally asked him if his name was Miller? Mr. M. replied in the affirmative, and kept on reading. He then asked him if he was the Miller who had prophesied the end of the world? Mr. M. said he did not prophesy, but supposed that he was the one to whom he referred. The minister then said, that he did not believe we could know when the world was to end. Mr. M. thought he had a right to his unbelief, and made no reply. The minister then said, he did not believe God had revealed the time. Mr. M. replied, that he could prove by the Bible that God had revealed it, and if he was an honest man, he would make him acknowledge it, by asking him a few questions in reference to the Bible, if he would answer them. The man retired, procured his Bible, and returned with about twenty other ministers, who gathered around him. An elderly one, who looked like an honest man, took his seat in front on the capstan. All were attention. Mr. M. told the man to read the first three verses of Dan. 12th. This he did aloud. He was then asked by Mr. M., if the resurrection was brought to view in those verses? The man looked at them for awhile, and said he did not know that it was. Mr. M. then asked him if he would tell what they did mean?—He said he did not choose to do so. "O! very well," said Mr. M., "we have nothing more to say together; for I did not agree to convince you, if you would not answer a few questions."

The elderly minister then asked him why he would not answer? "Because I do not choose to do so." "Why?" said the old gentleman, "I should have no objection to answering that question." "Well, father," said Mr. M., "I perceive you are an honest man. I will, if you please, ask you a few questions." The old gentleman said he would answer them if he could. Mr. M. then asked him to read the 6th verse—"How long shall it be to the end of these wonders?"—and asked him what wonders were referred to? The dandy minister then spoke—"Don't answer that question; he will make a Millerite of you." The elderly minister said he was not afraid of the Bible, let it make what it would of him; and replied, that the "wonders" referred to must mean the resurrection, etc. "Well," said Mr. M., "is the reply of the one clothed in linen, who sware 'that it should be for a time, times, and an half,' given in answer to the question, how long will it be to the resurrection?" Here the dandy minister again spoke—"Don't answer that question; for if you do, he will make a Millerite of you." The other, however, gave him to understand, that he was afraid of no result to which an honest investigation of the Scriptures might lead, and that he should answer any questions he chose. The admission of the dandy minister, that honest answers could not be given to a few simple questions on a portion of Scripture, without making men "Millerites," excited the interest of all to the highest point. The elderly minister replied, that he thought it must be given in answer to that question. On hearing the answer, the dandy minister shrunk back, closed his mouth, and interfered no more. Mr. M. then asked who it was that gave this answer? The other readily replied, that he was undoubtedly the Lord Jesus Christ. "Well, then," said Mr. M., "If the Lord Jesus Christ, in answer to the question, how long it should be to the resurrection, has sworn with an oath, that it shall be for a time, times, and an half, is not the time revealed?" "But," said the other, "you can't tell what that time, times, and an half mean?" "I did not agree," said Mr. M., "to do that; our understanding of it is another thing. But has not God there revealed the time, and sworn to it with an oath?" "Yes," said the other, "he has." "Well, then," said Mr. M., "I have proved all I agreed to."

"Why," said the minister, "I never saw this in this light before, can you tell what is meant by time, times, and an half?"

Mr. M. I will try. Read if you please the 6th verse of Rev. 12.

Min. "And the woman fled into the wilderness, where she hath a place prepared of God, that they should feed her there a thousand two hundred and three score days."

Mr. M. Now read the 14th verse.

Min. "And to the woman were given two wings of a great eagle, that she might fly into the wilderness, into her place where she is nourished for a time, and times, and half a time."

Min. Yes.

Mr. M. Then must not the time given in answer to the question be the same as the 1260 days?

The minister acknowledged it must be; and Mr. M. pointed him to the various places where the same period is presented under different forms,—forty-two months, 1260 days, time, times, and half a time—and showed him how 30 days to a month, and 12 months to a year, would make 3 1-2 years equal to 1260 days. He then asked him if we might not know that God had revealed the time to the resurrection in days? He said yes; but asked if we could know how to reckon them? M. M. then pointed him to Dan. 7: 25, the time of the continuance of the saints in the hands of the Little Horn, a period of the same length, and asked him if that could denote simply 1260 literal days; for, said he, you know that they persecuted the saints more than so many literal days. This he admitted; but asked, if they were not literal days, what they were? Mr M. then showed him that the language was symbolical; that if it had been given in literal time, it would have had a bad effect on past generations, as they would have seen the judgment could not come in their day, and they might not have lived in continual readiness for it as they should do. He then referred him to Num. 14: 34 and Ezek. 4: 6, where God has appointed a day for a year, showed him how the 70 weeks were fulfilled in 490 years, as many years as there were days in 70 weeks, and showed there were just 1260 years from the time the decree of Justinian went into effect A. D. 538, to 1798 when the Papacy was subverted by Napoleon. The minister acknowledged the pertinency of those references, and confessed that the time sworn to by Christ, must denote 1260 years.

Mr. M. then showed how the 2300 days and the four great kingdoms etc., bring us down to the end, and how they must terminate about this time; confessed that the expected time had gone by, but showed how an error in chronology would account for its passing by. He spoke about an hour during which the strictest attention was given by those who stood around, many confessed they never thought that "Millerism" was anything like that.

On arriving at Marietta, Mr. M. was detained a part of the next day in the boat, and the inhabitants came down with a request that he would stop and lecture, offering him the Methodist house. But he was obliged to hasten on, and could not comply with their invitation.

THE TOILET.

Let the Bible be thy looking-glass; the meekness and humility of Jesus thy attire; the wisdom of the Lord the crown of thy head and the light of his countenance the joy of thine own. A word fitly spoken the health of thy lips; the righteousness of faith thy robe; the salvation of the gospel thy shield of defense; truth thy beautiful girdle; the precepts of the Lord the sandals of thy feet. Now let the graces of the Spirit be thine ornaments; love and peace the gems to sparkle amid thy hair; long-suffering and gentleness, goodness and temperance, the chain about thy neck; the pearl of great price the diadem upon thy breast; the Savior's last command the bracelet on thy arm; and charity, which is the bond of perfectness, its clasp yet stay. Snatch up that golden key, and wear it closely pressed unto thy heart. It is prayer, the key to unlock the day, the key to lock out the night.

GARDENING.

EASY METHOD OF PROPAGATING PLANTS FROM CUTTINGS.—The following communication from one of our most successful cultivators, will be valued not only from the simplicity of its directions, but for their source also: "In the January American Agriculturist I observe a correspondent from Paris, C. W., making inquiry in relation to a work on Propagation of Plants. As a few simple directions may be acceptable to others of your readers, amateurs as well as professional florists, I will briefly give one of the simplest plans we pursue. We use what we here term 'pans'—that is, the saucer used to hold water below flower-pots—but common kitchen saucers or plates will do equally well. These are filled with sand (any kind that is most convenient), and the cuttings inserted just thickly enough to touch each other, then watered until the sand becomes in a state of mud. This is the only condition of success: that the sand be kept in this half-fluid state until the cuttings are rooted, which will be in from ten to twenty days, according to the condition of the cuttings, and the temperature of the greenhouse or parlor in which they are placed. The best temperature is from 70° to 75°, but it may range from 50° to 80°. If placed in the greenhouse, the saucers should stand on a stage or shelf fully exposed to the sun; if in the parlor, then in the lightest and sunniest spot, and never be shaded, for so long as the sand is kept in a state of mud, the most tender cutting will not wilt. But once allowed to dry, the whole operation will be retarded, if not entirely defeated. When rooted, the cuttings should be potted off at once into good soil, in the smallest sized pots, and kept well watered until they begin to grow.

I may further state that the best cuttings to use are what we term 'young wood'—that is, the young shoot in the succulent state, before it attains its woody or hard character. In this way roses, geraniums, fuchsias, carnations, verbenas, heliotropes, etc., in fact almost any cutting will root, if treated as above, without a loss of more than five per cent. Your most inexperienced readers can perform the operation of making a cutting and inserting it in the sand, just as well as I can. They may cut it where they please, at a joint, or otherwise, in length from two to four inches, and if the foregoing directions are strictly attended to, success is certain. There is but little mystery about any garden operation; a few simple laws understood, and the whole thing becomes easy. But a host of charlatans have endeavored to envelop the most simple operations in a maze of words filling quarto volumes, which would have been better understood if compressed into one page of the Agriculturist. The above is not our manner of propagating on a large scale, but it is the most simple and safe for those who have not the facilities of a regular propagating house."

GIVING UP SMOKING.—A workman, writing to the editor of the British Workman, states:—"Since I gave up smoking I have put into a box the amount that I formerly spent every week in tobacco. At the end of the year, on opening the box, I have counted out a sum of money sufficient to provide myself with periodicals and newspapers for the year, which sum I called "solid smoke." A friend one day called and asked me, "Have you found the philosopher's stone?" "No," I replied, "I don't turn the smoke into gold, but prevent the gold from turning into smoke."

A TIGER STORY.

Lucy and Fanny were two little girls who lived with their papa and mamma in London. When Lucy was six and Fanny five years old, their uncle George came home from India. This was a great joy to them; he was so kind, and had so much to tell them about far-away places, and strange people, and animals, and things, such as they had never seen. They never wearied of hearing his stories, and he did not seem to weary either of them.

One day, after dinner, they both climbed on his knees; and Lucy said,—

"O, uncle, do tell us a tiger story! We have seen a living tiger in the Zoological Gardens; and what a fierce-looking animal it was! We were afraid to go near the bars of its iron house. Uncle, did you ever see them in India?"

"Yes, indeed, I have, both alive and dead; and very fierce they were."

"Do tell us about them then, uncle. Do not the tigers sometimes run away with little children?"

"Yes, if they are very hungry, and can get near them without being seen. I will tell you a story about a tiger and a baby, which happened to some friends of my own."

"O, that will be so nice!"

"Well, this gentleman and lady had one sweet little baby, and they had to take a very long journey with the child through a wild part of India. There were no houses there, and they had to sleep in a tent. That is a kind of house make of cloth, by driving high sticks firmly into the ground, and then drawing curtains all over them. It is very comfortable and cool in a warm country, where there is no rain; but then there are no doors or windows to shut, as we do at night, to make all safe. One night they had to sleep in a very wild place, near a thick wood. The lady said, 'O, I feel so afraid to-night; I cannot tell you how frightened I am. I know there are many tigers and wild animals in the wood; and what if they should come upon us?' Her husband replied, 'My dear, we will make the servants light a fire, and keep watch, and you need have no fear; and we will put our trust in God.' So the lady kissed her baby, and put the child into the cradle; and then she and her husband knelt down together, and prayed to God to keep them from every danger; and they repeated that pretty verse, 'I will both lay me down in peace and sleep; for thou, Lord, only makest me to dwell in safety.'

In the middle of the night the lady started up with a loud cry, 'O, my baby! my baby! I dreamed just now that a great tiger had crept below the curtains, and run away with my child!' And when she looked into the cradle the baby was not there! O, you may think how dreadful was their distress! They ran out of the tent, and there in the moonlight they saw a great animal moving towards the wood, with something white in his mouth. They wakened all the servants, and got loaded guns, and all went after it into the woods. They went as fast, and yet as quietly as they could; and very soon they came to a place where they saw through the trees that the tiger had lain down, and was playing with the baby, just as pussy does with a mouse before she kills it. The baby was not crying, and did not seem hurt. The poor father and mother could only pray to the Lord for help; and when one of the men took up his gun, the lady cried, 'O, you will kill my child!' But the man raised the gun and fired at once, and God made him do it well. The tiger gave a loud howl, and jumped up, and then fell down again, shot quite dead. Then they all rushed forward, and there was the dear baby quite safe, and smiling, as if it were not at all afraid."

"O, uncle, what a delightful story! And did the baby really live?"

"Yes; the poor lady was very ill afterwards, but the baby not at all. I have seen the child often since then."

"O, have you really seen a baby that has been in a tiger's mouth?"

"Yes, I have, and you too."

"We, uncle! When have we seen it?"

"You may see him just now."

The children looked all round the room, and then back to uncle George, and something in his eyes made Lucy exclaim, "Uncle, could it have been yourself?

"Is it true you were once in a tiger's mouth?" But you do not remember about it?"

"Certainly not; but my father and mother have often told me the story. You may be sure that often, when they looked at their child afterwards, they gave thanks to God. It was He who made the mother dream, and awake just at the right minute, and made the tiger hold the baby by the clothes, so as not to inflict any hurt, and the man fire so as to shoot the tiger, and not the child. But now good night, my dear girls, and before you go to bed pray to God to keep you safe, as my friends did that night in the tent."

"But, uncle, we do not live in tents; our nursery door shuts quite close, and there are no tigers going about here. The man in the gardens told us that his was quite safe locked up."

"Yes, my love, but there are many kinds of danger in this world, and we need God to take care of us here quite as much as in India. Good night, and learn by heart my mother's favorite verse, 'I will both lay me down in peace, and sleep: for thou, Lord, makest me to dwell in safety.'"

"JOHN DUPPS."

It was Charley Edwards' birth-day, and his mother, to please him, gave him the liberty to invite a number of playmates to spend the afternoon with him. Children never forget engagements of this kind, and all the little fellows were early at the house. For a while they played about the garden—first at one thing, then, when tired of it, at another. Then some one proposed going into the house, to play blind man's buff, and so the large dining-room was cleared for the fun.

There was one boy, John Dupps, at this party of whom I wish particularly to tell you. He was not a very bad boy—no worse than most boys—and yet he was not a good boy, always good, as you will see.

The privilege of going where they pleased was given to the children, provided they disturbed nothing. It is oftentimes a very hard matter, for boys especially, to keep "hands off." John Dupps, while the play was going on, became tired of it, and went into the parlor, adjoining the room they were in. How many beautiful things were there! What pretty books, and shells and ornaments! What beautiful birds! far more beautiful than he had ever before seen! How many nice little things! "Surely Mrs. Edwards can scarcely know what a quantity she has. And the books, so full of pictures! That is a beauty with the crimson back on it—Stories for Little Folks. I would like a book like that. I wonder if she would miss the little bit of a one?" So John Dupps was thinking. "I should love to have it. There ain't anybody about there to see me"—and John slipped the book into his pocket. Quickly he returned to the dining-room. "Here is John," said one of the boys; and immediately John's face turned as crimson as the book in his pocket.

"Johnny, you blush like a girl," said Mrs. Edwards.

"I am so hot," replied John. That was an untruth.

"If you are," said the boy next him, "why don't you keep your hands out of your pocket?"

Something kept saying to John, "They all know you are a thief—your face looks like a thief's, John Dupps. Take that book out of your pocket. What a shame, John Dupps, to steal from so kind a lady." Poor boy, he was now so uncomfortable that he took his cap and left the house. It would have been far better if he had returned at once to the parlor and replaced the stolen book. But he soon reached his home, and going to his room as quietly as he could, he sat down and drew from his pocket the cause of his trouble. "Perhaps," thought he, "they won't miss it, and I'll keep it locked in my little box; and no one shall know it is there. I'll look at the pictures a while. Poetry in it, too."

"It is a sin to steal a pin,
As much as if a greater thing."

Instantly he let the book drop. The first words in the stolen treasure were words of conviction. "I won't keep it there. I can't have such about me. The good man placed those lines just there for me." O, how well he thought so!

John Dupps' mortification was complete. There could be no disguising facts now. There lay the stolen book on the floor, and its owner before him.

"Will you forgive me, Charley?"

"Certainly. What for, John—for leaving so soon?"

"No, no. For taking your book!"

"Yes."

"But you didn't mean to keep it, John?"

"Yes, but I did, though, and that's what makes me so sorry."

"Ma prizes this book more than any other. It was sister Jane's book, and she is dead, John. Ma would have felt sorely the loss of it."

"Ain't I a bad boy, Charley?"

"Not if you won't do so again. And come, I'll take the book and put it myself in the parlor, and no one shall know of it—not even ma; and I'll never, never speak of it again."

And generous Charley kept his word. The book was placed on the table where it had long been kept by the hand of affection. The boys returned together to their sports—Charley to enjoy himself, but John to think over what he will never forget, that

"It is a sin to steal a pin,
As much as if a greater thing."

"WATCHMAN, WHAT OF THE NIGHT?"

"The burden of Dumah. He calleth to me out of Seir, Watchman, what of the night? Watchman, what of the night? The watchman said, The morning cometh, and also the night: if ye will inquire, inquire ye: return, come."—Isa. 21: 11, 12.

Watchman, tell us what thou seest
Peering through the shades of night;
What mean these shouts of battle?
Whence this strange, portentous light?
Hoarsely cannon bay to cannon,
Shrieks and groans affright the sky,
Quivers earth with tread of millions
Doomed by brother's arm to die.

Answering—The morning cometh,
Clad in vestments red with blood;
Fearfully the light revealeth
Where night's baleful horrors stood.
Still the smoking sacrifices
Rise in blasphemy to God,
And fell war—a conflagration
Spreads wherever man has trod.

And also the night is coming,
Fraught with dreadful, dark dismay,
Hear you not the rush of angels
Through the terror-stricken day?
Feel you not the breath of demons,
Hot and baleful as they roam?
Trembling mortal, haste! inquire!
Come! return! avoid the doom!

HAILSTONES.—Rev. 16: 21.

Bro. Grant:—I have been designing for some time past to write an article on the hailstones of Rev. 16: 21, endeavoring to show from past instances the probability that they will be meteoric stones, such as have fallen frequently in our day, and in former times. The late article of Bro. Taylor called up the matter afresh, and I concluded to write.

Q. What is an ærolite?

A. It is a stone falling from the air.

Q. Have stones ever been known to fall from the air?

A. They have, and in great numbers.

He then gives some of the most remarkable falls of stones in the following table, showing description, place and time of each fall:—

Large stone, near the river Negos, Thrace, second year of the 78th Olympiad.
A stone of 59 lbs., on Mount Vasier Provence, Nov. 27th, 1627.
A stone of 72 lbs., near Lorissa, Macedonia, Jan., 1706.
Two large stones, weighing 20 lbs., Liponas in Bresse, Sept., 1753.
Two stones, 200 and 300 lbs., near Verona, in 1762.

In the table he mentions other falls of stones, but they are of less importance than those which I have given. He also mentions a "shower of mercury," a "shower of sulphur" on several occasions, a "shower of fire," a "shower of iron," a "mass of iron 70 cubic feet," a "mass of iron fourteen quintals," a "stony mass," etc., while there are many other important falls of stones which he has not given. Humboldt, in his Cosmos, states that the Chinese records mention "sixteen falls of ærolites for the epoch from the middle of the seventh century before Christ, up to 333 years after Christ." Vol. 4, p. 206. Without attempting to enumerate instances, he alludes in the course of his remarks to six falls of meteoric stones in the present century, namely, 1803, 1807, 1821, 1822, 1843, and 1847. Dr. Dick mentions one as taking place in 1810, and another in 1814. And our papers in the last few years record several instances occurring in our country. One happened in Boylston, N. Y., on June 14th, 1859, attended with a most terrific noise, breaking glass in its vicinity, and tearing up the ground for rods. Another happened in New Concord, Ohio, in May, 1860, when several stones fell, the heaviest weighing 56 lbs. I have learned of others in the few years past, but have not the accounts before me.

Humboldt thinks that "two-thirds of the meteoric stones lie at the bottom of the sea, and escape our observation." He thus describes the usual phenomena:—

"Meteoric stones are in some instances thrown from dark clouds, suddenly formed in a clear sky, and fall with a noise resembling thunder. Whole districts have thus occasionally been covered with thousands of fragmentary masses, of uniform character, but unequal magnitude, that have been hurled from one of these moving clouds. In less frequent cases, as in that which occurred on the 16th of Sept., 1843, near Muklhausen, a large ærolite fell with a thundering crash while the sky was clear and cloudless."—Vol. 1, p. 114.

He says "the largest meteoric masses as yet known are those of Otumpa in Chaco, and Bahia in Brazil, described by Rubi de Celis as being from seven to seven and a half feet. The meteoric stone of Ægos Petamos, celebrated in antiquity, and even mentioned in the chronicle of the Parian marbles, which fell about the year in which Socrates was born, has been described as of the size of two millstones. The huge ærolite which in the beginning of the tenth century fell into the river at Narni, projected between three and four feet above the surface of the water."—Vol. 1, p. 117.

The greatest number which he speaks of as falling at any one time, is three thousand; and the largest number exceeding a hundred pounds, in any one shower, so far as noticed by him, is ten.

Dr. Dick, after describing several instances of stones falling, attended by a fearful noise resembling the roar of artillery or the discharge of musketry, adds: "Several hundreds of instances similar to the above might be produced of large masses of stone having fallen from the upper regions upon the earth. These stones, although they have not the smallest analogy with any of the mineral substances already known either of a volcanic or any other nature, have a very peculiar and striking analogy with each other. They have been found at places very remote from each other, and at very distant periods. The mineralogists who have examined them agree that they have no resemblances to mineral substances, properly so called, nor have they been described by mineralogical authors. They have, in short, a peculiar aspect and peculiar character which belong to no native rocks or stones with which we are acquainted. They appear to have fallen from various points of the heavens, at all periods, in all seasons of the year, at all hours both of the day and night, in all countries of the world, on mountains, and in places most remote from any volcano."—Celestial Scenery, Sec. 5.

These showers of stones have killed individuals in their fall frequently; as, a monk at Crema, Sept., 1511, and another monk at Milan, in 1650; two Swedish sailors, on their ship, in 1674; and a considerable portion of the army of the Ammonites while engaged in a battle with Israel; Josh. 10: 11.

Some suppose because the word "hailstones" is used in the account of the last fall as we find it in the Bible, that we must therefore regard it as frozen rain. But the account speaks of them expressly as "great stones," and Dr. Parkhurst says that the original indicates our ordinary stones. But it would be very natural for us to speak of a shower of stones from heaven as hailstones, whatever might be their substance. So the term hailstones in Rev. is used, I judge, not so much to designate the substance, as the idea that they shall fall from heaven in a shower.

Hence I conclude that, since these showers have been real and frequent, since they have fallen to the number of thousands in a shower, varying in weight from ounces to tons; and since God has on one occasion sent a shower of them to destroy his enemies, calling them "hailstones," we may more reasonably look for a shower of real stones—meteoric stones—rather than frozen rain.

Another consideration in support of this view is, that the "mighty thunderings," and the "great noise," with which the heavens shall "pass away," invariably attend this phenomena; whereas, the freezing of rain, especially to the extent of filling the air with stones of more than an hundred weight each, could hardly consist with the earth burning "as an oven," and the elements melting "with fervent heat," at the same time. May we have Christ for our refuge amid the terrors of that dread day, is my prayer.

STIFF NECKS AND STRAIT JACKETS.

The Lord passes them by unblessed! How can he do otherwise? How can he bless them? How can salvation come where sectarian walls remain, like pillars of brass, immovable? where the different evangelical sects stand aloof from each other, refuse to unite in saving souls? This absence of God's Spirit is remarkable in the visitations of God's special mercy. Wherever God's people have laid aside all party spirit, all sectarian biases, and united honestly and heartily in promoting a general revival, there God has met them, poured out his Spirit overflowingly! Consequently nearly every soul, in some villages, has bowed humbly to the Prince of Peace!

While in other places, where the brazen walls of sectarianism remain adamantinely, there the Spirit has been measurably withheld.

"Is it for sect or creed to fight,
To call our zeal the rule of right,
When what we wish is, at the best,
To see our church excel the rest?"

How clearly and forcibly has God manifested his displeasure at these divisions and subdivisions, this selfishness of the sect! Thousands on thousands of souls perish annually, go down to the pit, that might be saved everlastingly, were it not for this wicked abomination. And who is responsible for these souls lost, forever lost? Whose skirts are stained with blood? Whose? "Now I beseech you, brethren, by the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye all speak the same thing, and that there be no divisions among you."

"Let party names no more
The christian world o'erspread;
Gentile and Jew, and bond and free,
Are one in Christ their head."

Reader, are you in this strait jacket? with a stiff neck? Is it pleasant, well pleasing to your heavenly Father to remain thus in a nutshell religion? a pent up, conservative, sectarian atmosphere?

John Wesley, the celebrated founder of Methodism, in his preface to Notes on the New Testament, uses the following prayer, which deserves the serious and candid consideration of every admirer of that distinguished man, and servant of God.

"Would to God that all the party names and unscriptural phrases and forms which have divided the christian world were forgotten; and that we might all agree to sit down together as humble, loving disciples at the feet of our common Master, to hear his word, imbibe his Spirit, and to transcribe his life in our own."

Such was the language of that great and good man at an age or time of life when his thoughts had matured and ripened into fixed principles; and when experience had taught him the evil of "party names," and divisions among the humble, loving disciples of Christ.

We have no love or veneration for any name applied to the disciples of Christ, but that which expresses our relationship to him; and our oneness with the Father, and with his Son Jesus Christ. Much depends upon a name. A mere name is often of more importance than many are aware. We have long believed, and experience has confirmed us in the opinion, that the christian world is more divided in name than in feeling and principle. In feeling, true and devoted christians cannot be divided. Their feelings are one and the same.

The great matter with all of us should be, to cultivate a spirit of true christian fellowship with all who love our Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity. There is a religion—alas, how common—which never rises above sectarian prejudices. But there is also, blessed be God, a religion which rises above all merely human distinction, and finds fellowship with kindred spirits without regard to denominational distinctions. Examples of this character we have seen. Holy hearts are drawn together naturally, by heavenly attraction. Oh, it is pleasant to mingle in the society of such—the very atmosphere seems melted into love, and we all seem to breathe the element which sustains the spiritual life of angels. True and entire holiness, and this alone, will produce such union.

"It would not be easy to estimate adequately the value of this union in promoting love among brethren, making prayer acceptable to God, in preparing christian hearts for the indwelling of the Spirit, and in removing from christianity an indefinite amount of scandal. It reminds us of the prayer of our Savior 'that they all may be one;' and of the great end to be gained by this union, viz., 'that the world may believe that thou hast sent me.' The tendency and the power of this union to enforce conviction as to Christ's divine mission, and thus to promote a saving faith in him, have been shown to be very great. Only let this union become complete—then shall we see the way of the Lord prepared for salvation to our world."

Here we stand on common ground, and nothing but the spirit of this blessed book, the Bible, will finally eradicate forever this sectarian spirit, this monster with many heads.

"Away then with this evil, ye who love
The holy principles of God's blessed word,
And to the truthful pattern there inscribed
Study to bear resemblance. Use no more
Your 'shibboleths,' and rods, or measuring lines,
But make alone the perfect law of love
The testing point, standard of fellowship;
So shall ye flourish like the 'bay trees' green,
And freshly watered, and the word of life
Like rivers flow unfettered, while the Lord
Shall be well pleased, and smile approvingly."

The absorbing question should be always (not the building of sects,) how can we most honor God in doing good to all? What shall we do to save sinners, redeem a world of rebels lost! deliver them from the wrath to come?

"Behold how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity."

"How beautiful is christian love!
How sweet the fellowship we prove
Of kindred hearts—in Jesus one,
O, this is heaven on earth begun!
This glorious Christian Union!"

THAT CARPET.

"What carpet?" Why, the one the good Sister did n't buy. "Why did n't she buy it?" Oh! she made a sacrifice for the cause of God. Say, Sisters, would you have done so? Carpets are a convenience; they save a great amount of hard work, and this Sister, as she spends her time as much as possible for the cause of Christ, needs all the labor-saving fixings. But she could do without the new carpet, if God's cause required it. The old one was worn thread-bare, holes in it, perhaps, and the new one was needed, if a carpet was ever needed; but it was n't bought. The Sister said, without intending to represent that she had made any great sacrifice,—

"Husband promised me the carpet, but he found a use for the money for the glory of God, and it went that way"; and she added her sanction to the act by saying, "All do not know how much he sacrifices." I learned more of him after that, when I found him preaching at his own expense and giving away money, or that which was worth money, and to do so wearing ordinary clothes.

"What, was this Sister a preacher's wife, Bro. M.?" Yes, and I suppose preachers' wives have natural tastes for comforts and good appearances as much as others; but many of them have caught the spirit of self-sacrifice like this Sister; and some of them must sacrifice any way, for they do not get support enough unless "husband" works with his hands, and then the preaching is like the "lean kine," small and weak.

But I commenced this to say a word about sacrifices in ordinary things. There is a difference in people about that. Some of the good brethren and sisters can make the old carpet or none at all do; the old dress can be fixed over a little, and the old bonnet is made to answer even when there are means at hand to buy another, and the means are used for good. If there are not means, of course the "ripping, pieceing and pulling" must be done; but in either case it is done cheerfully for the glory of God. Oh! how much of this spirit there is in some hearts. The last great day will reveal more than these days can how much such patiently suffer privations, laying themselves and their all on the altar, making "a covenant by sacrifice."

But there are others who seem to forget, or who never have learned, what is meant by it. They can have their extra dresses if they want them, and their new bonnets every time the fashions change, and—now don't start, Sisters; I'll say it in the fear of God,—as though God had not made their ears long enough, or of the proper color, or put fancy work enough about their necks, they put on the jewelry, contrary to God's word, and so hang out the sign that there is pride in the heart and a love of the world, and it is done, too, when God's cause needs the extra time spent and the cost of these extra and ornamental things.

Such do not realize that some of God's ministers and their wives are pinched by poverty and shiver in the cold wintry blasts, and money is needed to keep them free to work, with fresh energies and courage, and so enable them to give "each his portion in due season." Nor is this all. There are many ways of doing good that the self-sacrificing find, and they are blessed; and at the same time "lay up their treasures in heaven."

Now, brethren and sisters, I want you to pray over this matter, and see if you are not taking some ease and comfort at the expense of God's cause, and if you find you have not done as much as you should, go and do, and do not simply what you can and not feel it, but make some sacrifices. Brethren, give up your tobacco and other indulgences. Sisters, give up your extra dresses and jewelry, and if God's cause requires it, even "that carpet" you want so much, and bring your tithes into God's storehouse, and get a blessing that there will not be room enough to receive it.

THE INCREASE OF KNOWLEDGE.

The prophecy declared by Daniel through inspiration two thousand four hundred years ago, of the increase of knowledge, was to be fulfilled in the "time of the end," when wickedness was coming to the full. This prophecy was to be a sign of the times, and connected with the near coming of Christ, which we are commanded to discern (Matt. 16: 3); thus proving it to be a christian's duty still to watch the signs of the times. It is not every epoch or crisis that is preceded by signs, only those of paramount importance to man; such as the first and also the second advent of Christ.

That the above prophecy has a direct reference to this time, no candid mind can dispute; for it is fully proved, beyond the possibility of a doubt, that we have entered into the time of the end. It occupies a prominent place not only in prophecy but as a present truth, acting as a shining light to the weary pilgrim as he journeys on to the perfect day.

This period of time is marked out by God for the comfort of his church, that they might lift up their heads and rejoice in view of redemption near.

The vast increase of knowledge within the past forty-two years has completely revolutionized all the arts and sciences, and knowledge of all kinds. Instance the printing press. Instead of the old Franklin press, we have the revolving cylinder, whereby books, papers, and tracts can be made by the million. Then there is the Telegraph, where the lightnings of heaven are used to transmit intelligence from one part of the world to another, almost destroying both time and distance. Dr. Cumming states that he heard a person make the critical remark that these words are literally translated—"Knowledge shall be darted"—like lightning. It would exactly describe the phenomenon of the electric wire.

A late writer in the Advocate and Witness suggests that "an interesting thought connected with this subject is, that the Hebrew word translated in this prophecy 'increased,' may be rendered 'shooting forth as the lightning.' In view of this, some have supposed that the Telegraph was really intended. Whether it is so or not, it is sufficiently wonderful to claim a place in prophecy." But is it not true to the very letter that knowledge is darted like the lightning, when the messages from Queen Victoria to James Buchanan, etc., were passed from continent to continent in a few seconds of time? Is it possible, I ask, to have a better fulfillment of the prophecy of Daniel?

A Sandwich Island paper has the following on this passage—"Many shall run to and fro":—"The time would appear to have arrived when this portion of the prophet Daniel's vision was to be fulfilled." The American Messenger for March, 1860, has the following, in an article headed, "The Electric Telegraph." "A recent English author, in commenting on the passage, 'Many shall run to and fro,' says, that there are two Hebrew verbs, which differ from each other only in a letter; if one verb is used, the translation will be as we have it; if the other, then it means—'Knowledge shall be flashed like the lightning flame.' If this be the correct translation, it would be a striking prediction fulfilled in the present age."

In these days our air is almost netted over with wires. In the small isle of Great Britain alone, there were in use four years ago fifty thousand miles of telegraph wires, over six times the diameter of the globe. And what is this compared with the number in this country? The Morse line alone has over thirty-seven thousand miles of telegraph line.

As an illustration of what may be conveyed to the mind by the expression, "run to and fro," let us bear in mind the modern inventions in steam and rail cars, which rails almost net the earth, as if to keep it from falling to pieces. The prophet Nahum has declared that, "in the day of his preparation," "The chariots shall seem like torches, they shall run like the lightning."—Nahum 2. Place by the side of this our advertisements for the "Lightning Trains," and we can hardly fail to be impressed with the thought that this is very like that spoken by the prophet. In a poem by Dr. J. Holmes, published in the Maine Farmer, entitled "The Locomotive," he says—

"Knowledge flies like lightning";

And—

It was time that brought us out as a people; and I think that time, or growing in the knowledge and grace of Jesus Christ, ought to distinguish us until we realize our hope—the redemption of the body, and the possession of our eternal crown of glory. Although the world thinks it an awful thing for this dispensation to close, the christian is commanded to "lift up (his) head, and rejoice," in view of redemption near. And it is passing strange that there are some who would sooner cling to the aches, pains, and dying groans, the bitter partings, and all the ills that flesh is heir to, than exchange this world for another and happier, better world, when a better genesis shall come, making Paradise more glorious than before, knowing no death, but where all is one eternal sunshine of health and life, with unalloyed happiness for eternity. It is strange that people object to hear of the end of this generation, when they know that the vast population of the globe is numbered with the dead in a generation of time; when but a few years place us in the cold, icy hand of death. Every family has lost some dear one in this our scattering time.

But the gathering time is coming, when the shout will be, "Lo, this is our God; we have waited for him." "O death! where is thy sting? O grave! where is thy victory?"

New Sharon, Me. John Taylor.

MR. MILLER AND THE METHODIST MINISTERS.

In September, 1844, Mr. Miller was passing down the Muskingum river to Marietta, to take a boat from thence to Philadelphia. On going on board the boat for Marietta, he found between forty and fifty Methodist ministers, who were on their way to that city, to attend the M. E. Conference. Mr. M. noticed some sly glances from one to another, which seemed to say, "We will have some sport with the old gentlemen." He however took no notice of them, but went to a retired part of the deck, and commenced reading. Soon a dandy-looking minister walked past him several times, and finally asked him if his name was Miller? Mr. M. replied in the affirmative, and kept on reading. He then asked him if he was the Miller who had prophesied the end of the world? Mr. M. said he did not prophesy, but supposed that he was the one to whom he referred. The minister then said, that he did not believe we could know when the world was to end. Mr. M. thought he had a right to his unbelief, and made no reply. The minister then said, he did not believe God had revealed the time. Mr. M. replied, that he could prove by the Bible that God had revealed it, and if he was an honest man, he would make him acknowledge it, by asking him a few questions in reference to the Bible, if he would answer them. The man retired, procured his Bible, and returned with about twenty other ministers, who gathered around him. An elderly one, who looked like an honest man, took his seat in front on the capstan. All were attention. Mr. M. told the man to read the first three verses of Dan. 12th. This he did aloud. He was then asked by Mr. M., if the resurrection was brought to view in those verses? The man looked at them for awhile, and said he did not know that it was. Mr. M. then asked him if he would tell what they did mean?—He said he did not choose to do so. "O! very well," said Mr. M., "we have nothing more to say together; for I did not agree to convince you, if you would not answer a few questions."

The elderly minister then asked him why he would not answer? "Because I do not choose to do so." "Why?" said the old gentleman, "I should have no objection to answering that question." "Well, father," said Mr. M., "I perceive you are an honest man. I will, if you please, ask you a few questions." The old gentleman said he would answer them if he could. Mr. M. then asked him to read the 6th verse—"How long shall it be to the end of these wonders?"—and asked him what wonders were referred to? The dandy minister then spoke—"Don't answer that question; he will make a Millerite of you." The elderly minister said he was not afraid of the Bible, let it make what it would of him; and replied, that the "wonders" referred to must mean the resurrection, etc. "Well," said Mr. M., "is the reply of the one clothed in linen, who sware that it should be for a time, times, and an half,' given in answer to the question, how long will it be to the resurrection?" Here the dandy minister again spoke—"Don't answer that question; for if you do, he will make a Millerite of you." The other, however, gave him to understand, that he was afraid of no result to which an honest investigation of the Scriptures might lead, and that he should answer any questions he chose. The admission of the dandy minister, that honest answers could not be given to a few simple questions on a portion of Scripture, without making men "Millerites," excited the interest of all to the highest point. The elderly minister replied, that he thought it must be given in answer to that question. On hearing the answer, the dandy minister shrunk back, closed his mouth, and interfered no more. Mr. M. then asked who it was that gave this answer? The other readily replied, that he was undoubtedly the Lord Jesus Christ. "Well, then," said Mr. M., "if the Lord Jesus Christ, in answer to the question, how long it should be to the resurrection, has sworn with an oath, that it shall be for a time, times, and an half, is not the time revealed?" "But," said the other, "you can't tell what that time, times, and an half mean?" "I did not agree," said Mr. M., "to do that; our understanding of it is another thing. But has not God there revealed the time, and sworn to it with an oath?" "Yes," said the other, "he has." "Well, then," said Mr. M., "I have proved all I agreed to."

"Why," said the minister, "I never saw this in this light before, can you tell what is meant by time, times, and an half?"

Mr. M. I will try. Read if you please the 6th verse of Rev. 12.

Min. "And the woman fled into the wilderness, where she hath a place prepared of God, that they should feed her there a thousand two hundred and three score days."

Mr. M. Now read the 14th verse.

Min. "And to the woman were given two wings of a great eagle, that she might fly into the wilderness, into her place where she is nourished for a time, and times, and half a time."

Min. Yes.

Mr. M. Then must not the time given in answer to the question be the same as the 1260 days?

The minister acknowledged it must be; and Mr. M. pointed him to the various places where the same period is presented under different forms,—forty-two months, 1260 days, time, times, and half a time—and showed him how 30 days to a month, and 12 months to a year, would make 3 1-2 years equal to 1260 days. He then asked him if we might not know that God had revealed the time to the resurrection in days? He said yes; but asked if we could know how to reckon them? M. M. then pointed him to Dan. 7: 25, the time of the continuance of the saints in the hands of the Little Horn, a period of the same length, and asked him if that could denote simply 1260 literal days; for, said he, you know that they persecuted the saints more than so many literal days. This he admitted; but asked, if they were not literal days, what they were? Mr M. then showed him that the language was symbolical; that if it had been given in literal time, it would have had a bad effect on past generations, as they would have seen the judgment could not come in their day, and they might not have lived in continual readiness for it as they should do. He then referred him to Num. 14: 34 and Ezek. 4: 6, where God has appointed a day for a year, showed him how the 70 weeks were fulfilled in 490 years, as many years as there were days in 70 weeks, and showed there were just 1260 years from the time the decree of Justinian went into effect A. D. 538, to 1798 when the Papacy was subverted by Napoleon. The minister acknowledged the pertinency of those references, and confessed that the time sworn to by Christ, must denote 1260 years.

Mr. M. then showed how the 2300 days and the four great kingdoms etc., bring us down to the end, and how they must terminate about this time; confessed that the expected time had gone by, but showed how an error in chronology would account for its passing by. He spoke about an hour during which the strictest attention was given by those who stood around, many confessed they never thought that "Millerism" was anything like that.

On arriving at Marietta, Mr. M. was detained a part of the next day in the boat, and the inhabitants came down with a request that he would stop and lecture, offering him the Methodist house. But he was obliged to hasten on, and could not comply with their invitation.

THE TOILET.

Let the Bible be thy looking-glass; the meekness and humility of Jesus thy attire; the wisdom of the Lord the crown of thy head and the light of his countenance the joy of thine own. A word fitly spoken the health of thy lips; the righteousness of faith thy robe; the salvation of the gospel thy shield of defense; truth thy beautiful girdle; the precepts of the Lord the sandals of thy feet. Now let the graces of the Spirit be thine ornaments; love and peace the gems to sparkle amid thy hair; long-suffering and gentleness, goodness and temperance, the chain about thy neck; the pearl of great price the diadem upon thy breast; the Savior's last command the bracelet on thy arm; and charity, which is the bond of perfectness, its clasp yet stay. Snatch up that golden key, and wear it closely pressed unto thy heart. It is prayer, the key to unlock the day, the key to lock out the night.

GARDENING.

Easy Method of Propagating Plants from Cuttings.—The following communication from one of our most successful cultivators, will be valued not only from the simplicity of its directions, but for their source also: "In the January American Agriculturist I observe a correspondent from Paris, C. W., making inquiry in relation to a work on Propagation of Plants. As a few simple directions may be acceptable to others of your readers, amateurs as well as professional florists, I will briefly give one of the simplest plans we pursue. We use what we here term 'pans'—that is, the saucer used to hold water below flower-pots—but common kitchen saucers or plates will do equally well. These are filled with sand (any kind that is most convenient), and the cuttings inserted just thickly enough to touch each other, then watered until the sand becomes in a state of mud. This is the only condition of success: that the sand be kept in this half-fluid state until the cuttings are rooted, which will be in from ten to twenty days, according to the condition of the cuttings, and the temperature of the greenhouse or parlor in which they are placed. The best temperature is from 70° to 75°, but it may range from 50° to 80°. If placed in the greenhouse, the saucers should stand on a stage or shelf fully exposed to the sun; if in the parlor, then in the lightest and sunniest spot, and never be shaded, for so long as the sand is kept in a state of mud, the most tender cutting will not wilt. But once allowed to dry, the whole operation will be retarded, if not entirely defeated. When rooted, the cuttings should be potted off at once into good soil, in the smallest sized pots, and kept well watered until they begin to grow.

"I may further state that the best cuttings to use are what we term 'young wood'—that is, the young shoot in the succulent state, before it attains its woody or hard character. In this way roses, geraniums, fuchsias, carnations, verbenas, heliotropes, etc., in fact almost any cutting will root, if treated as above, without a loss of more than five per cent. Your most inexperienced readers can perform the operation of making a cutting and inserting it in the sand, just as well as I can. They may cut it where they please, at a joint, or otherwise, in length from two to four inches, and if the foregoing directions are strictly attended to, success is certain. There is but little mystery about any garden operation; a few simple laws understood, and the whole thing becomes easy. But a host of charlatans have endeavored to envelop the most simple operations in a maze of words filling quarto volumes, which would have been better understood if compressed into one page of the Agriculturist. The above is not our manner of propagating on a large scale, but it is the most simple and safe for those who have not the facilities of a regular propagating house."

Giving up Smoking.—A workman, writing to the editor of the British Workman, states:—"Since I gave up smoking I have put into a box the amount that I formerly spent every week in tobacco. At the end of the year, on opening the box, I have counted out a sum of money sufficient to provide myself with periodicals and newspapers for the year, which sum I called "solid smoke." A friend one day called and asked me, "Have you found the philosopher's stone?" "No," I replied, "I don't turn the smoke into gold, but prevent the gold from turning into smoke."

A TIGER STORY.

Lucy and Fanny were two little girls who lived with their papa and mamma in London. When Lucy was six and Fanny five years old, their uncle George came home from India. This was a great joy to them; he was so kind, and had so much to tell them about faraway places, and strange people, and animals, and things, such as they had never seen. They never wearied of hearing his stories, and he did not seem to weary either of them.

One day, after dinner, they both climbed on his knees; and Lucy said,—

"O, uncle, do tell us a tiger story! We have seen a living tiger in the Zoological Gardens; and what a fierce-looking animal it was! We were afraid to go near the bars of its iron house. Uncle, did you ever see them in India?"

"Yes, indeed, I have, both alive and dead; and very fierce they were."

"Do tell us about them then, uncle. Do not the tigers sometimes run away with little children?"

"Yes, if they are very hungry, and can get near them without being seen. I will tell you a story about a tiger and a baby, which happened to some friends of my own."

"O, that will be so nice!"

"Well, this gentleman and lady had one sweet little baby, and they had to take a very long journey with the child through a wild part of India. There were no houses there, and they had to sleep in a tent. That is a kind of house make of cloth, by driving high sticks firmly into the ground, and then drawing curtains all over them. It is very comfortable and cool in a warm country, where there is no rain; but then there are no doors or windows to shut, as we do at night, to make all safe. One night they had to sleep in a very wild place, near a thick wood. The lady said, 'O, I feel so afraid to-night; I cannot tell you how frightened I am. I know there are many tigers and wild animals in the wood; and what if they should come upon us?' Her husband replied, 'My dear, we will make the servants light a fire, and keep watch, and you need have no fear; and we will put our trust in God.' So the lady kissed her baby, and put the child into the cradle; and then she and her husband knelt down together, and prayed to God to keep them from every danger; and they repeated that pretty verse, 'I will both lay me down in peace and sleep; for thou, Lord, only makest me to dwell in safety.'

In the middle of the night the lady started up with a loud cry, 'O, my baby! my baby! I dreamed just now that a great tiger had crept below the curtains, and run away with my child!' And when she looked into the cradle the baby was not there! O, you may think how dreadful was their distress! They ran out of the tent, and there in the moonlight they saw a great animal moving towards the wood, with something white in his mouth. They wakened all the servants, and got loaded guns, and all went after it into the woods. They went as fast, and yet as quietly as they could; and very soon they came to a place where they saw through the trees that the tiger had lain down, and was playing with the baby, just as pussy does with a mouse before she kills it. The baby was not crying, and did not seem hurt. The poor father and mother could only pray to the Lord for help; and when one of the men took up his gun, the lady cried, 'O, you will kill my child!' But the man raised the gun and fired at once, and God made him do it well. The tiger gave a loud howl, and jumped up, and then fell down again, shot quite dead. Then they all rushed forward, and there was the dear baby quite safe, and smiling, as if it were not at all afraid."

"O, uncle, what a delightful story! And did the baby really live?"

"Yes; the poor lady was very ill afterwards, but the baby not at all. I have seen the child often since then."

"O, have you really seen a baby that has been in a tiger's mouth?"

"Yes, I have, and you too."

"We, uncle! When have we seen it?"

"You may see him just now."

The children looked all round the room, and then back to uncle George, and something in his eyes made Lucy exclaim, "Uncle, could it have been yourself?

"Is it true you were once in a tiger's mouth?" But you do not remember about it?"

"Certainly not; but my father and mother have often told me the story. You may be sure that often, when they looked at their child afterwards, they gave thanks to God. It was He who made the mother dream, and awake just at the right minute, and made the tiger hold the baby by the clothes, so as not to inflict any hurt, and the man fire so as to shoot the tiger, and not the child. But now good night, my dear girls, and before you go to bed pray to God to keep you safe, as my friends did that night in the tent."

"But, uncle, we do not live in tents; our nursery door shuts quite close, and there are no tigers going about here. The man in the gardens told us that his was quite safe locked up."

"Yes, my love, but there are many kinds of danger in this world, and we need God to take care of us here quite as much as in India. Good night, and learn by heart my mother's favorite verse, 'I will both lay me down in peace, and sleep: for thou, Lord, makest me to dwell in safety.'"

"JOHN DUPPS."

It was Charley Edwards' birth-day, and his mother, to please him, gave him the liberty to invite a number of playmates to spend the afternoon with him. Children never forget engagements of this kind, and all the little fellows were early at the house. For a while they played about the garden—first at one thing, then, when tired of it, at another. Then some one proposed going into the house, to play blind man's buff, and so the large dining-room was cleared for the fun.

There was one boy, John Dupps, at this party of whom I wish particularly to tell you. He was not a very bad boy—no worse than most boys—and yet he was not a good boy, always good, as you will see.

The privilege of going where they pleased was given to the children, provided they disturbed nothing. It is oftentimes a very hard matter, for boys especially, to keep "hands off." John Dupps, while the play was going on, became tired of it, and went into the parlor, adjoining the room they were in. How many beautiful things were there! What pretty books, and shells and ornaments! What beautiful birds! far more beautiful than he had ever before seen! How many nice little things! "Surely Mrs. Edwards can scarcely know what a quantity she has. And the books, so full of pictures! That is a beauty with the crimson back on it—Stories for Little Folks. I would like a book like that. I wonder if she would miss the little bit of a one?" So John Dupps was thinking. "I should love to have it. There ain't anybody about there to see me"—and John slipped the book into his pocket. Quickly he returned to the dining-room. "Here is John," said one of the boys; and immediately John's face turned as crimson as the book in his pocket.

"Johnny, you blush like a girl," said Mrs. Edwards.

"I am so hot," replied John. That was an untruth.

"If you are," said the boy next him, "why don't you keep your hands out of your pocket?"

Something kept saying to John, "They all know you are a thief—your face looks like a thief's, John Dupps. Take that book out of your pocket. What a shame, John Dupps, to steal from so kind a lady." Poor boy, he was now so uncomfortable that he took his cap and left the house. It would have been far better if he had returned at once to the parlor and replaced the stolen book. But he soon reached his home, and going to his room as quietly as he could, he sat down and drew from his pocket the cause of his trouble. "Perhaps," thought he, "they won't miss it, and I'll keep it locked in my little box; and no one shall know it is there. I'll look at the pictures a while. Poetry in it, too."

"It is a sin to steal a pin,
As much as if a greater thing."

Instantly he let the book drop. The first words in the stolen treasure were words of conviction. "I won't keep it there. I can't have such about me. The good man placed those lines just there for me." O, how well he thought so!

"What are you doing here?" cried Charley Edwards, rushing unheralded into the room.

John Dupps' mortification was complete. There could be no disguising facts now. There lay the stolen book on the floor, and its owner before him.

"Will you forgive me, Charley?"

"Certainly. What for, John—for leaving so soon?"

"No, no. For taking your book!"

"Yes."

"But you didn't mean to keep it, John?"

"Yes, but I did, though, and that's what makes me so sorry."

"Ma prizes this book more than any other. It was sister Jane's book, and she is dead, John. Ma would have felt sorely the loss of it."

"Ain't I a bad boy, Charley?"

"Not if you won't do so again. And come, I'll take the book and put it myself in the parlor, and no one shall know of it—not even ma; and I'll never, never speak of it again."

And generous Charley kept his word. The book was placed on the table where it had long been kept by the hand of affection. The boys returned together to their sports—Charley to enjoy himself, but John to think over what he will never forget, that

"It is a sin to steal a pin,
As much as if a greater thing."

SPRING-TIME.

How happy, how lovely its beauties appear,
Attracting the mind, yes, and charming the heart,
With new hope its sweetness and freshness impart.

The Spring-time, delightful, we truly may say,
For blessing, it points to a happier day,
And blessing, it leads to the blessings foreseen,
And joys the glad moments that so intervene.

Of the Spring-time of Grace, when in its rich flow
Of mercies and blisses it sweetly doth tend
To that day of Glory that never shall end.

That bright day of glory, what will it display?
More splendor indeed than mortals portray;
When the fullness celestial ever shall shine,
And superlative glow with the lustre divine.

That bright day of glory, who will it enjoy?
Only those who their hours and powers employ
In living for glory, by living to Him
Who once died to save, and now lives to redeem.

And, my reader, are you? Or is it the case
No beauties you see in the fullness of grace;
That holy enjoyments you never obtain,
But living to die, are yet living in vain?

If so, when with time earth's joys shall be past,
The pleasures then gone will be ever the last;
For having no taste for religion, you'll find
That death mends not the heart, nor alters the mind.

Now wont you go with us, the Savior to meet,
Give your service to him, in him be complete?
"The times" now are closing, no room for delay;

THE PILGRIM'S PROGRESS

AMID THE PERILS OF THE LAST DAYS.

We can but expect that amid the perils of the last days, trials will thicken and foes abound. Here, especially, we may expect that the snares of Satan will be laid for us, and his wiles exerted to seduce us. If we "escape the pollutions of this world" in these times, it can be only by obeying the word of God, and trusting him for grace to help in every time of need. If we overcome at last, it will be no matter of accident, but only by the most diligent and untiring pursuit of our object, amidst stern difficulties and inveterate foes.

We need, therefore, to buckle on the whole armor of God, and prepare to encounter all the wiles of the devil. We need to know our own weakness, and our only source of strength. We need to have our loins girt about with truth, familiar with our enemies' stratagems, our Leader's tactics, our Constitution, and our Chart. We need to know who our Captain is, and that we can succeed only by implicit obedience to his commands. We should be ever watchful against the insidious attempts of the enemy to bribe us, for he will sometimes appear as an angel of light.

We should not forget that we are not of this world, but are strangers and pilgrims here, and that he who is not for us is against us. We should not forget that as strangers in this world, we are only passing through it as pilgrims; and hence, a little of its goods will do, an abundance will burden our progress. As a stranger here, and a pilgrim traveling through this world, we may not entangle ourselves with the affairs of this life, but should labor only to get as many to join us in our pilgrimage as possible. Though we shall need food and raiment, we are to seek first the kingdom to which we are traveling and obey its laws, and all these things shall be added. We are to be careful, therefore, for nothing, but by prayer and supplication, commit all things unto our Guide, for he careth for us.

While passing through this world as pilgrims, we shall often be invited to tarry on the way. They will wonder that we should be ever traveling, and will plead with us to consider how much better we should enjoy a rest. Here we are in great danger of being overcome. If we can be invincible to our enemies on this point we shall be pretty sure to overcome all other obstacles to our progress. On this point they have a variety of specious "devices," seemingly framed to seduce us, if it is in any wise possible.

They will first try us, perhaps, by appealing to our natural love of ease and rest from toil, and if we are in any wise tired of the way, their pleadings will have a peculiar charm, and we shall hardly escape falling a victim to their seductions. If they fail on this point they will be likely to appeal to our generosity, as they in their blindness will regard it. They will remind us that we are allowed by them to travel through their land with various privileges, and that now their country and her laws being threatened, perhaps seriously, by a cruel and rapacious foe, we ought in gratitude to lend our assistance. Seemingly just, this snare has been a fruitful source of doubt and uncertainty to inexperienced pilgrims, for they wish to be just by all means. If not successful here, they will appeal to our timidity, telling us that if the enemy succeeds, we, as being in the country, shall suffer with it, in the loss of our goods, our liberty, and perhaps our lives.

Some have been frightened by this effort to intimidate, but if they escape the two former snares there is but a little danger from this one. If they fail in this, they will then threaten to deal with us as enemies of their country, deserving the respect of none, but the contempt of all. They will even threaten personal violence, and will carry it out, to the discouragement of some. But in such cases, only the timid grow weak and retire, while the strong grow stronger, and the spectators are often drawn to them in sympathy, increasing their numbers, and encouraging their hearts.

If we encounter any of these difficulties, so specious in their appearance, and therefore so liable to ensnare us, we should ever appeal to our Chart and Constitution, telling them "it is written," so and so, according to the demand of the circumstances, for this was the policy of our Leader, who has once passed successfully through the same difficulties. Besides, he has commanded us expressly to search our Chart and Constitution, and assured us that we shall at last be judged by that.

So when they would have us stop with them, tarrying by the way, we should answer: "It is written, 'Come out from the world and be separate.'" When they plead that we should not be singular in religion, tell them: It is written of those who have traveled before us on this way, that they "were strangers and pilgrims on the earth," "a spectacle and gazing stock to the world." If they tell us it is just as well to enjoy the comforts and blessings of life as we go along, tell them It is written, "If any man love the world the love of the Father is not in him;" that we are to deny ourselves daily and take up our cross and follow our Leader. If they invite our attention to the honors of the world in store for those who seek them, admonish that it is written, "How can ye believe which receive honor one from another?"

If they think you ought to labor to maintain the stability of earthly governments, by voting for judicious legislators and sovereigns, tell them it is written, "The Most High rules in the kingdom of men," and does not especially need my co-operation. If they say he works only by means, tell them it is written he "gives it to whomsoever HE will." If they tell us we should not charge God with choosing those bad men who sometimes reign in a kingdom, answer, it is written he sets up over it even "the basest of men." If you are told that you ought to take an interest in your own government, tell them it is written, "My kingdom is not of this world." If they say the enemy is threatening us, come with us and fight them, answer, "He that taketh the sword shall perish with the sword," and that the weapons of our warfare are not carnal.

If they say, "Then you would suffer the enemy to come and take your goods without resistance, would you?" tell them "Father is at the helm." If they persist, But you do not think he would work a miracle to save you, do you? Tell them it is written, "I will never leave nor forsake you," "be careful for nothing but in every thing by prayer and supplication let your requests be made known to God, and the peace of God shall keep your hearts."

If they still protest that his children are often deprived of their goods, tell them, yes; and if need be we also can take joyfully the spoiling of our goods, knowing that we have in heaven a better, and an enduring substance. If they ask, How then will you get your daily bread, as you are a stranger here, and surrounded by enemies? Tell them we have a rich Father in heaven, who has promised us that if we ask him. But, he may add, what if those enemies should set upon you and abuse you, what protection would you have? Tell them, "all things shall work together for good with those who love the Lord." You would not suffer them to kill you, would you? "He that seeketh to save his life shall lose it." But you would not be so foolish as to throw your life away to an assassin? "He that will lose his life for my sake and the gospel, shall save it unto life everlasting."

Well, you are a foolish man. I desire to "be a fool for Christ's sake." The whole community is down upon you. So Christ "was despised and rejected of men." But the more respectable part of community are disgusted with your religion. The wisdom of this world is foolishness with God. None but the lower classes of society have any favor with your doctrine. It was "the common people," too, that "heard Christ gladly," and James says, "God hath chosen the poor of this world." But I have heard several preachers say they thought most of you were crazy. Well, they thought so of Christ, and Paul too. I think such a people as you are ought to be mobbed out of town. We look for such treatment. Paul says, "they that will live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution." I believe a man would be justified in the sight of God, if he should rid society of such a nuisance as you are. It may be so, for Christ tells us, "the time will come when he that killeth you will think he doeth God service.

The above conflict but faintly suggests the difficulties which a pilgrim has to encounter in these days of degeneracy. Indeed, in any age, the "old man" must be "crucified" in order for Christ to dwell in the heart, which implies a most trying death. We do well to remember this, lest we think "strange concerning the fiery trial which is to try" us, "as though some strange thing had happened to us." Our love for the world and its charms must be killed out, which will result in making us strangers and pilgrims here.

The opposition we have from the world is calculated to wean our affections from it, and place them on the world to come, as a relief from the sad picture of vanity, pride, and strife. The Lord says, "As many as I love I rebuke and chasten." And Paul says, "Whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth, and scourgeth every son whom he receiveth." No sacrifice should be regarded as too great, in view of the glory awaiting us. We may since our race here is short, and the glory shall be "far exceeding and eternal." Our Master was a man of sorrow and acquainted with grief, and we should esteem it a privilege, to have in some degree the fellowship of his sufferings for us.

May our short pilgrimage here be one of meekness, humility, patience and love, and the love of Christ reign in us. Amen.

THE COMING OF CHRIST.

BRO. GRANT:—I have thought while perusing the first chapter of Acts, and especially the second, tenth and eleventh verses, what a theme for contemplation to the christian, what a thrill of joy pervades his whole being while he looks forward and anticipates the day when Jesus shall return again to earth in the same manner he went up into heaven, not invisible to mortal eyes, but visible, so that every eye shall see him (Rev. 1: 7), not only his friends, but his enemies. What abundant testimony is found in the sacred Scriptures that. He who is seated at the right hand of the Majesty on high, now interceding for sinners, shall leave that high abode and come again, not in lowly form as once he came, but as a conqueror and a judge. Who shall be able to stand? Those only who have pure hearts and clean hands.

God in his infinite wisdom and goodness has given us erring mortals these written oracles to be a lamp to our feet and a light to our path. Dark indeed would be our way without them. A chart is our blessed Bible to guide the way-worn traveler o'er life's tempestuous ocean,—yet how many reject its holy precepts, admonitions and warnings, and had rather lean to their own understandings and blind reasonings, than listen to the teachings of God's holy word, or in the light of the infinite God to see light in his light.

"Thus men go wrong with an ingenious skill;
Bend the straight rule to their own crooked will;
And with a clear and shining lamp supplied
First put it out, then take it for a guide;
Halting on crutches of unequal size,
One leg by truth supported, one by lies;
They sidle to the goal with awkward pace,

O for the faith Abraham was inspired with to believe God and take him at his word!

GAIUS AND DIOTREPHES.

A man by the name of "John"—simply, plainly, "John"—without any surname, as I have ever heard, lived about eighteen hundred years ago. He was a remarkable man, being particularly characterized as "that disciple whom Jesus loved." He was, what all affectionate, christian dispositions are, humble, and could not tolerate egotism, vain-glorying, officiousness, or anything like self-aggrandizement. He was commissioned, by the Nobleman (Jesus), whose special friend he was, to go and preach the gospel; and he was an earnest, faithful preacher. He used the influence of love to induce men to repent, and keep the church in a prosperous condition. He sometimes found things wrong in the church, and, if he did, he kindly, candidly, and earnestly pointed out the difficulty, and explained the nature of the offence.

I have before me one of his letters. It is characterized by its brevity, simplicity, and the loving, candid spirit which it breathes. It was written to Bro. Gaius, a man who had "the truth in his heart," and lived it; and, as Bro. John made some statements in his letter with reference to the character of Bro. Gaius, and of another man who it seems belonged to the same church with Gaius, Diotrephes by name; and as there are some strong contrasts in their characters,—I felt like saying a word about them, as the study of the subject has been interesting, instructive and profitable to me.

Gaius was a man John loved; and, from the description given of him, there was reason to love such a man. He was a consistent christian. He had "the truth in his heart," and as a natural effect he "walked" in it. He was one of John's spiritual children, and was thoroughly instructed in the "truth." He had the "light," and he did not let it "go out" or burn so dimly that it could scarcely be seen; but it was so light that he could see how to walk and not "walk in darkness," but have the light of life.

Bro. Gaius was not a preacher, so he did not travel about from one place to another, sometimes getting nothing for preaching, so that like Paul he was obliged to hire a house and make tents to get his subsistence. Neither was he a stingy, uncharitable brother, but, when the preachers came around there to fill their appointments, he "helped them," as John says, "after a godly sort," i. e., just as a man ought to who professed to love God (margin—worthy of God). He did not simply pray for them and say "God bless you," and satisfy himself that he had done his duty. A man like him would pray for the preacher, he would welcome him to his pilgrim's home after he had come a long journey on foot, or on the "Castor and Pollox" line of sailing vessels, and make the preacher feel at home at once, and he would be cheered so that when he preached he would feel like a new man, and could preach with some life.

Some christians seem to think in these days, and perhaps we shall find one by and by who thought so then, that a man must preach well any way, whether he is made welcome at his appointment and has their prayers, or not. It may be that the poor pilgrim is having a hard time; perhaps he feels that his efforts are small, and of not much account; and, but for Father's promise to be with him and give him a place in the kingdom with Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob, and all the redeemed ones, he would be so burdened with discouragement, in view of his weakness, that he would give up. But he is expected to cheer the pilgrims by his cheerful, hopeful words, and give each a portion in due season, when it is as much as he can do, he is so coldly received, to do anything at all.

Bro. Gaius knew this, and he was faithful to the preaching brethren. They had taken nothing of the Gentiles, and were needy, but they did not leave the place where Bro. Gaius lived without having all their wants supplied; and even strangers were not forgotten. All this, his having the truth in his heart and living it, living it so fully that his money was given freely to help the cause along, and supply the evangelist preachers with means to "bring them forward on their journey," was of so decided a character that, when the preaching brethren met Bro. John, they told him of it, and they "bore witness before the church" too, because their hearts were so much cheered that, like the man whom Jesus healed, they felt like telling every one they met.

John says that such preachers as had been thus received should be, "that we might be fellow-helpers to the truth." So Gaius had by his faithful efforts been of real service to the cause of truth. But it was all natural to him; he "had the truth in his heart," and, like our brethren now who love the "present truth" that "the Lord is coming," and the sweet, consoling truth that we have "immortality through Christ alone," and shall come up at the resurrection blooming with immortal youth, to die no more, he (Gaius) wanted the people to hear, and he knew they could not hear without preachers, and that they could not preach except they be sent. So he did just what every christian should do, as much as lieth in him, and helped along the cause wonderfully.

He is a good model for us, brethren and sisters, and we should do what we can in these "last days" to send the truth everywhere. There is Bro. Dow, going West. Give him a call to your place, brethren; he will do you good, and be glad to find the followers of Gaius who love and live "the truth" there. And there are many others who are trying to preach; whoever they are, if God calls them he has a work for them. So let us cheer them on. They will feed some one with the bread of life, and take new courage to go on and be able to preach a great deal better than they can if we do not help them.

But I promised to say something about Diotrephes. I do not know exactly who he was, but he might have been the "angel of the church," secretary, or something of that sort; at any rate, when Bro. John wrote to the church, this man, Diotrephes, would not receive him. Perhaps the man had no authority but his own for so doing; but one thing is certain, he loved the pre-eminence among them. "Pre (before)-eminence"—height; he loved to be before and above his brethren in every thing.

It was not so with Gaius, although he did much for the cause, while Diotrephes hindered it all he could. He wanted to have every thing done just according to his mind. He was self-conceited, and thought that none of the brethren could plan or decide as well who should come there to preach as he could. He was a proud professor, and so could not have anything done unless it was of a character to suit him. He would not receive John, the humble servant of God, when he wrote perhaps to make arrangements for an appointment there; but he went "prating about with malicious words"; and I suppose there was nothing too bad for him to say. He doubtless defamed their character all he could.

Perhaps if Bro. Apollos had written about coming there he would have liked the idea, because Apollos was "an eloquent man and mighty in the Scriptures," and it would have given the church the name of having a smart preacher, if he had not preached any "life and death" or said the Lord would give no reward till Jesus comes. But perhaps Diotrephes would consent to have the Scriptures explained if it did not suit the people outside, provided he could get Apollos or some other brother to present his favorite hobby-doctrine. Whatever he did want, he was certainly opposed to what did not just suit him, and turned those out of the church who were in favor of letting the preaching brethren whom God had called to the work come and present their messages.

What a sad, sad state of heart the man had! John only employs two verses to tell the whole story about him. He did not go into the particulars, to be sure, and tell what Diotrephes said. There was no necessity for that; he was "prating about with malicious words," and that tells the story.

John received his commission directly from Jesus. It was verbal and audible, so that there was not the opportunity for deception that there is when the way of duty is made known simply by an impression, and was surer and better authority than man's written credentials. But it did not satisfy this man; the authority of Jesus' commission was not enough for him, and I am afraid there are too many such to-day. I suppose that Diotrephes was in favor of levees, tea-parties, etc., to raise money to support his favorite hobby, and doubtless he was willing to subscribe money liberally to build a temple of worship similar to that built for Diana. No matter if that was for heathenish purposes, it was built in fashionable style, and one like it might induce the idol-worshipers to come to the church Diotrephes had built; then they would hear Apollos or some other "eloquent" preacher, and be induced to come often, if for nothing more than to hear something smart, because Diotrephes knew that then, as now, there were those who did not "care much what a man preached if he was only smart"; and as there were likely to be some smart young men, students under the teaching of Prof. Gamaliel, or Tyrannus, or Doctors, or something of the sort, who would attend the meetings, it would "give respectability to the church."

So this man must conclude that his plans were better than those of the other brethren, who were willing that God should send by whom he would, because they wanted the church to keep humble and unpopular, and that could not be allowed. So he just takes the whole management of things into his own hands, or tried to, rejected the apostles, and slandered them so as to prejudice the brethren against them, and got the church into such a state that but for Gaius and a few others, who perhaps held their meetings in a hall or cave, somewhere apart from the old place of meeting, the whole church would have been ruined. Such was the state of things, at any rate, that it became necessary for John to go there and "remember" the "deeds" of this proud professor, and go so soon that he thought it not best to write his instructions with "ink and pen," but to see Gaius "face to face," and speak (margin) "mouth to mouth," that is, counsel with that judicious brother as to what should be done to build up the church and get Diotrephes converted, or do something in a christian way to prevent his injuring the cause any more.

Brethren, let us take Gaius as our model, and be careful that we do not imitate Diotrephes.

MY MOTHER'S GRAVE.

I love to stay where my mother sleeps,
And gaze on each star as it twinkling peeps
Through the bending willow which lonely weeps
O'er my mother's grave.

I love to kneel on the green turf there,
Afar from the scenes of my daily care,
And breathe to my Savior my evening prayer
O'er my mother's grave.

I well remember how oft she led
And knelt me by her, as with God she plead
That I might be his when the turf was spread
O'er my mother's grave.

I love to think how 'neath the ground
She slumbers in death as a captive bound;
But she'll slumber no more when the trump shall sound
O'er my mother's grave.

MOURNING APPAREL.

On this subject we have freely expressed our views. Again we ask the question: Why purchase mourning apparel? Why wear it? Why follow this fashion? Is it wise, consistent, christian? Is it any real expression of grief for the loss of our friends, any mark of respect? Does it impart any consolation to the bosom of sorrow? or convey any religious intruction to the mind or heart? does it cause mourning and humility for sin, or submission to God?

On the contrary, are there not many and positive evils attendant?—a few of which let us here consider:

1. Is it not an unnecessary and extravagant expenditure?

2. Does not the custom lead the poor to ape the rich? Is is not a temptation to pride, dishonesty, and hypocrisy? Has it not robbed the widow and the fatherless and the creditor of their just dues?

3. It also diverts attention from the voice of the Almighty in his chastening and instructive providences.

4. It would be better to use the value of it in the cause of benevolence.

5. It occupies the mind and hands trivially in that solemn period which is peculiarly favorable for reflection, meditation, and prayer.

6. The custom of wearing mourning apparel is heathenish; there is no just, reasonable, or scriptural authority for it. Weep for the loss of a dear friend, a parent, a wife, a brother, a sister, one dear to us as our life? Certainly, we may. Nature itself demands our tears—they are sent in mercy by Him who wept at the grave of Lazarus. The "Man of sorrows," himself, taught us to weep. It is a privilege, a feast, to give vent to the tenderest feelings of the heart. Tears are commendable at such a time. But do not, friends, we beseech you, follow an absurd custom, a relic of heathenism, that confers no benefit on the dead, affords no consolation to the living, or any good whatever.

The loss of near and dear friends often proves a blessing, is sanctified to our spiritual good, when rightly improved: seasons of mourning, therefore, should be employed in humiliation, confession, restitution, self-examination, and prayer—in serious and godly conversation, touching our mortality, our future state, death, judgment, eternity; and nothing calculated to divert our time or attention from these solemn and momentous subjects, should be suffered for a moment.

"The house of mourning is better than the house of feasting."

Dr. Butler, of Trinity Church, in a recent discourse, spoke strongly against the wearing of mourning apparel, announcing his "decided objection to the practice." "You will permit me," he said, "with all respect to the sentiments of others, to utter my very long and matured convictions upon it. Its evils seem to me manifold. It looks like a uniform of organized rebellion against the providence of God. It sheds gloom over the streets, through the churches, and in the house. It creates an impression in the world of absence of comfort and consolation. It helps to perpetuate sorrow, when the christian duty is to cultivate peace and joy."

1. Such a custom never originated with christianity; nor was it sanctioned or enjoined by it, and is, therefore, not obligatory on christians.

2. It is more like the self-imposed penance of Catholics and Pagans than the beautiful, plain, and unostentatious adorning, required under the gospel.

3. Its tendency is to bewilder the mind and unfit the person for contemplation and reflection—things always necessary, so that the bereavement may produce the "peaceable fruits of righteousness."

4. It is too expensive for the poor; and the means thus employed by the rich could be far better used in bringing gospel truth before the living to fit them for a dying hour.

The custom of changing the entire apparel of a numerous family on the death of a relative, produces not unfrequently great privation and pecuniary embarassment. Often has the little all, left by the industry and frugality of the deceased parent to support the widow and children, been sadly diminished, or altogether swept away, by being devoted to the purchase of unnecessary garments of mourning apparel, which, under a more healthy public opinion, might have been dispensed with, and the children supplied with other and far more necessary articles of comfort. We would not treat this question lightly or harshly; the custom is dictated by the most delicate impulses and sympathies of our better nature; still it is a custom which could well be dispensed with altogether. In summer mourning dresses are the most uncomfortable of any that are worn. And what use do they serve? To remind us that we are afflicted and bereaved? We need no outward memorial of that melancholy fact, nor do we desire to be pointed out to an unsympathizing world as one that asks public attention to the circumstance. Shall a suit of sable be worn because it is grateful to our own individual feelings—because it affords us solace and comfort in our bereavement? We can derive no consolation from such a source, or from any such outward signs of grief.

5. The custom is inconvenient. It throws the bustle and responsibility of making purchases and making garments upon a family at the moment when, on every account, they most imperatively require seclusion and retirement; when, worn out with watching, care, anxiety and grief, they need quiet and repose. To us there is a shocking unseemliness, we had almost said sacrilege, in turning the house of death into a shop for the dressmaker! Who that has ever witnessed what usually passes upon such occasions—who that has seen the afflicted dragged forth to be dressed for the pageant, harrassed by inquiries about gowns and bonnets, or heard, intermingled with sighs, sobs, and tears of anguish, paltry discussions about the adjustment of a cap or a ribbon—who has seen all this without seeing and feeling that it was unbecoming and ill-timed beyond all power of words to express. Who will be among the first to throw off this vassalage to the decree of an oppressive custom—this servility to diseased public opinion? Many have done so already—who will imitate their laudable example?

There is nothing in the color of black which is in reality any more mournful, only for its associations, from habit, than in any other color. The fop, in his suit of black, does not look half so solemn as do some others in blue or drab. In China the color of mourning is white; in Turkey, blue or violet; in Egypt, yellow; in Ethiopia, brown. Each people, says a writer, profess to have their reasons for the particular color of their mourning apparel. White is supposed to denote purity; yellow, that death is the end of human existence here, as the leaves when they fall and the flowers when they fade turn yellow; brown denotes the earth to which the dead return; blue expresses the happiness which it is hoped that the departed enjoy; and purple or violet, sorrow on one side and hope on the other, that color being a mixture of black and blue. In a dress devoid of ostentatious vanity, the dead can be as much respected in one color as another.

"But think ye, how quiet their lot,
Who sleep the calm sleep of the blest;
The lashes of sorrow, the fetters of care,
Temptation and trials disturb them not there,
So sweetly in Jesus they rest."

"JUDGMENT CAME UPON ALL MEN."

But man was not then permitted to partake of immortal life, and we may thank the Lord for it, neither can he now partake, without first coming back to God in the knowledge of righteousness and true holiness, and rendering strict obedience to "the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus." Paul tells us in Rom. 1: 20, that "the invisible things of him from the creation of the world are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made," and we believe it.

Theologians, predicating their faith more upon platonic philosophy than upon the revealed will of God, tell us that his penalty for sin to the finally impenitent, is "eternal torment in misery;" but how does this declaration compare with Paul's statement, or with God's dealings with man at the outset? The one is diametrically opposed to the other; for while the one says man shall live forever, the other says "he shall die." The one says the penalty is eternal life in misery, while the other says it is death, (Rom. 6: 23), and in his infinite wisdom and goodness as well as justice not only drove man away from the tree of life, but cut him off from all access to it, while he remained in disobedience, lest he should live forever, and appointed death that he might not eternally be a miserable sinner here on earth, but be able to die out of his misery.

But it will be said that this visible manifestation was only in relation to the body, and the "eternal suffering" is of the soul, which is invisible. Well, Paul says the invisible is clearly seen and understood by the visible. So God can kill the soul for sin as he does the body, philosophy to the contrary, notwithstanding.

While Adam continued in obedience he was truly righteous, consequently he was JUST; but so soon as he had transgressed the divine command, he ceased to be the "Son of God," for in the act of transgression he sold himself to work unrighteousness, and becoming the servant of sin, he is styled the "child of evil," or "THE UNJUST." When he was driven forth from the garden, away from the tree of life, under the sentence of death, he carried the whole human family out with him; for as yet the entire race were IN HIM, and with him passed from a just to a condemned, unjust state. Wherefore, as Paul says, (Rom. 5: 12), "by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin; and so (in the same way) death passed (was transmitted) upon all men, for that all have sinned" (in Adam), and if not, how can the reign of death over those who had not sinned, there being no law from Adam to Moses, or the death of infants which have not sinned, be accounted for? 5: 18. "Therefore by the one offence (margin, judgment came) sentence was pronounced upon all men to (the extent of) condemnation," consequently DEATH is in our natures and reigns in and over us, and must and will until it is abolished by Christ, when 'there shall be no more death.

Now in this case that which is true of the body is true of the soul. Sin was the cause of the death of the body, and sin is also the cause of the death of the soul; and as the body has no more animal life in it when the sentence written is executed, and it is dead, so neither can the soul have any "spiritual life" in it when the sentence written shall be executed against it. As animal life, "which is in the blood," (Lev. 17: 11) is the cause of all action, consciousness and reflection, even of existence, so "spiritual life," which was in the soul, is the cause of all its action toward God, consciousness of self-unrighteousness, and repentance, even its existence is entirely dependent upon the continuance of that life in it. For as the body without the breath is dead, so the soul without holiness shall die. Notwithstanding "the life of the flesh is in the blood;" it is there contingently, and if food, drink and air be cut off, or either of them, the life therein will go out, and through corruption and decay, in a little while the body ceases to be; and thus if the soul refrains from partaking of that "true bread that came down from heaven," drinking of that spiritual fountain that is in God, and breathing that pure atmosphere that is in his word, all its divine life will also go out, and under the influence of the celestial fires, the presence of the ineffable glory, it, too, will decay and waste away, until finally it "shall be as though it had not been."

But as the body in Adam's case lived nine hundred and thirty years after sentence was pronounced, suffering from the thorns and thistles that the sin-cursed flesh brought forth, before sentence was finally executed, seventy years less than a day with God, so may the soul live on in the day of the Lord, longer or shorter according to the harvest it shall reap from the corrupt seed sown, before the divine sentence written,—"the soul that sinneth, IT SHALL DIE,"—shall be finally executed in the SECOND DEATH.

What is here presented is based upon the hypothesis of platonic philosophy and speculative theological dogmas, that the soul is an entity, and may consciously exist and act independent of the body.

FAULT-FINDING.

One of the great evils of the present day is fault-finding; the result of unsanctified hearts, regardless of God's ministers, and contrary to the Scriptures which teach us to confess our faults one to another, and pray one for another, that we may be healed. What! find fault with your Lord, your best friend, who said, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me?" How long will ye persist in this folly and sin? till Jesus comes himself to reprove? I hope not—hope there will be many more found guiltless of this, and every other sin, than there were in Elijah's day when he said, "Lord, they have killed thy prophets, and digged down thine altars, and I am left alone, and they seek my life." And God answered him, "I have reserved to myself seven thousand men, who have not bowed the knee to Baal."

What class will they be? Methinks, not those who when asked how they liked a good gospel sermon, replied like the following: "I do not think he looked decent, with such a long beard—looked like a rowdy up in the pulpit. He told a good many truths, but there, it does not sound like the good old-fashioned preaching I used to hear, I wish I could hear such now-a-days." I think very likely you might, if you would live as you used to, when you first started to serve the Lord, when you had your all and yourself too, on the altar of God and would follow Jesus as calmly and as wholly, and eye God's glory and pray just as earnestly for God to give you just what you need out of his word through his servants, as you did them. Come, try it, and see if it does not sound more as it used to. Say, reader, will you? Not look at the things which are seen, which are temporal, but at the things which are not seen, which are eternal.

Says another,—"He was so lengthy, I got all tired out, and out of patience with him." Yes, but you lacked long patience, and a deep, heart-felt interest in the cause of Christ. Do you not get tired of work sometimes? Yes, very often, and still keep working on and on, as long as you can, simply because it brings the cash into your pocket, or gratifies self some way,—and you in God's house finding fault with God's servants because you are a little tired of sitting still so long a few hours in a week, or perhaps a month, hearing from out the Scriptures of truth those things explained which are essential for you to heed and practice in order to secure eternal salvation in the kingdom of God. Now do not find fault again with a lengthy sermon, if it be spoken in love and in the spirit of meekness, will you?

Says another, "I do not like him, he is too light and trifling; makes the people laugh too much." Well, really, I do not know that Jesus or his apostles used lightness or vanity in their preaching, or writing, or conversation, so by God's grace we will not, will we? Another tells too many stories. Well, let the Lord lead him and you keep praying for him, and if he does not do right you remember the "effectual, fervent prayer of the righteous availeth much." Another is too sober and sedate. Is not sociable, thinks too much of himself and too little of others. We are exhorted to be sober-minded and watch unto prayer. Perhaps he sees you are too worldly minded, and do not want to have your conversation in heaven, and he may be communing with God or praying silently for you, that you may be in the place where you will delight to talk about the things of God. I would much rather be alone and talk with the Lord than be with the vain, who delight not in my Lord, unless I can persuade them to cease from sin and serve the living and true God or benefit them in some way.

Still another is not a good grammarian, or elocutionist. Christ says, "Follow me." If one is called of God to preach and does not know his letters, much more grammar, or a dictionary, I'll bid him God's speed, and I know God is just as able to teach him as he was the poor fishermen. If he has a pure heart, and a conscience void of offence toward God and man, the Lord will take care of him, and he will do somebody good wherever he goes.

Another is so slow and dull. Well, Moses was slow of speech and of a slow tongue, yet the Lord was with and taught him. Another is too quick and fiery, talks too loud, perhaps shouts a little. In Ezra's time, the people shouted aloud for joy, and the noise was heard afar off; yet they sinned not. Isaiah cried aloud and spared not, lifted up his voice like a trumpet.

Another is so odd—makes so many rough speeches. No rougher than Jesus, when he called his own disciples a faithless and perverse generation, and said to Peter after he believed and confessed Christ, and Christ had blessed him, "Get thee behind me, Satan, thou art an offence unto me." Another talks too strong. "I do not believe every thing I hear now-a-days." Believe the Bible, wont you? which frequently exhorts us to be strong, and to "be strong in the Lord," and to "keep the commandments, that we may be strong," and "to be strong in the grace which is in Christ Jesus."

Thus it goes on. Finally, there can seldom a preacher come into the place, be he ever so Christ-like and humble (I would there were more such), and speaks the truth in love, but somebody stands ready to catch them if possible in their words, or find fault.

I am writing to professors of the religion of Jesus Christ. How much more pleasing to God, beneficial to your own soul and those who preach, it would be, if, instead of this, you would stay up the servant's hands by prayer and supplication to God in his behalf. Say, will you begin now and break off this sin and pray for a deeper work of grace in your own heart? Then you will be ready to pray for those who have forsaken all and gone out to make ready a people prepared for the Lord. L. A. DURGIN.

DOES THE ONE GOD EXIST IN THREE PERSONS?

By the term "person" here, must be meant that which is a distinct being, mind, spirit, or intelligence; or that which is not a distinct being, mind, spirit, or intelligence. There can be no other position.

Now if God exists in three persons, yet by a person is meant that which is a distinct being, then there are three beings in God. And if each of those beings are God and self-existent, then there are three self-existent Gods; and if each one is infinite and eternal, then it must follow that there are three infinite eternal Gods.

But if it be said that each of these persons are not infinite, then it follows that they are finite. How many finite beings will it take to make one infinite Being? Will three do it? No! a universe of finite beings would not make an infinite Being. If this is true, then there is no infinite God.

But should it be said that by the term "person" is not meant that which is a distinct being, spirit, mind, or intelligence, then it must mean that which is not a distinct being, spirit, mind, or intelligence. And if the Father is a person, the Son a person, the Holy Spirit a person, and yet the term person means that which is not a distinct being, then the Father is not a being, the Son is not a being, the Holy Spirit is not a being.

And if neither of these are distinct beings, it follows that they are either three non-entities, or three component parts of God. If non-entities, there is no God. But if three component parts, then neither Father, Son, or Holy Spirit, alone is God.

But if it be admitted that God is an infinite, eternal and intelligent person, being, or spirit, without parts, then there cannot be more intelligent persons or beings equal to the infinite, eternal and self-existent One. If not equal, they must be inferior, or superior; either of these ideas are fatal to the doctrine of the Trinity.

But it is said they are three immaterial persons, and therefore incomprehensible. If immaterial, then they are opposite to material. Material is something; its opposite is nothing. Then we have three great eternal nothings.

But, thank His Name, it is not Reason alone that stands opposed to a trinity of co-equal persons in God. The Scriptures also bear their testimony against it, and in opposition to it show God is ONE. Exodus 20: 3;—"Thou shalt have no other gods before me." Deut. 6: 4;—"Hear, O Israel; the Lord our God is one Lord." Mal. 2: 10;—"Have we not all one Father? hath not one God created us?" Zech. 14: 9;—"One Lord, and his name one." Gal. 3: 20;—"God is one." All orders and monies for the World's Crisis, or for Books and Tracts for sale at this Office, and all matters pertaining to the business of the Office, must be addressed to the Business Agent,

MILES GRANT, Crisis Box, Boston.

☞ The No. on the first page of the Crisis for May 31st should have been No. 11 instead of No. 12, though the right No. will be found on the third page.

SIGN YOUR NAME.

We frequently receive good articles from those who do not sign their names; hence their communications do not appear. We have one before us now, which closes as follows:—"I have not the courage to sign my name." We would say to such, they must excuse us for not having "courage" to publish their articles. We would like to ask such persons, if they conceal their names when they go to visit their friends for the first time? We think good people should never be ashamed of their names. If you would have your articles read with interest, sign your name.

TOPHET.

BRO. GRANT:—Is there not some paraphrase, or other readings of Isa. 30: 33, which will make the passage comprehensive? I know there have been published in the Crisis paragraphs explaining it; yet I have not noticed them. Another explanation might not prove unprofitable. Yours in Christ,

C. G. CARRE.

The word rendered tophet signifies, according to Dr. Clarke, Calmet, and others, "A valley near to Jerusalem, to the south-east, called also the valley of Hinnom or Gehenna; where the Canaanites, and afterwards the Israelites, sacrificed their children, by making them pass through the fire; that is, by burning them in the fire to Moloch."

Tophet is thought to be from the Hebrew word toph, a drum, because they used to drown the cries of those sacrificed by means of drums. At a later period, it was kept as a place where garbage from the streets, bodies of animals, and also of men, refused a burial, were cast to be burnt up; but never to be preserved. When the Savior would illustrate the future punishment of the wicked, he referred the Jews to this place where they burnt up their filth. It is often called Gehenna, or hell.

Boothroyd renders the passage, "For Tophet is ordained of old; yea, by the king the same is prepared; he hath made it deep; he hath made it large; a fiery pyre, and abundance of wood; the breath of Jehovah, like a stream of sulphur, shall kindle it." Lowth's rendering is very nearly the same.

The idea conveyed in the foregoing rendering is, the heathen and the Jewish kings have used the place for burning up filth, and also have sacrificed human beings there to their gods; so, the Lord will finally burn up the wicked in the same manner, and perhaps in the same place; and just as literally as the filth was ever consumed.

The Septuagint version reads:—"For thou shalt be required before the time; has it been prepared for thee also to reign? nay, God has prepared for thee a deep trench, wood piled, fire and much wood; the wrath of the Lord shall be as a trench kindled with sulphur."

INQUIRY ABOUT LUKE 9: 27.

BRO. GRANT:—Will you please explain the twenty-seventh verse of the ninth chapter of Luke? I feel that we shall soon see the kingdom, and shall we all be ready to enter? I know I love Jesus, and I wish all might have that same love. Now I can say all of our Lord's prayer. I thank God for it. The Bible always was dark to me until within a year; for I could not make the way I heard it taught harmonize with the reading. Now I read for myself. Pray that I may continue in the right path, and meet the loved ones sleeping, with those remaining, in our new and brighter home, where sin and sorrow shall be no more. A. BROOKS.

The text reads as follows:—"But I tell you of a truth, there be some standing here, which shall not taste of death, till they see the kingdom of God."

"For whomsoever shall be ashamed of me, and of my words, of him shall the Son of man be ashamed, when he shall come in his own glory, and in his Father's, and of the holy angels. But I tell you of a truth, there be some standing here which shall not taste of death till they see the kingdom of God. And it came to pass, about an eight days after these sayings, he took Peter, and John, and James, and went up into a mountain to pray. And as he prayed, the fashion of his countenance was altered, and his raiment was white and glistening. And behold, there talked with him two men, which were Moses and Elias; who appeared in glory, and spake of his decease which he should accomplish at Jerusalem. But Peter and they that were with him were heavy with sleep: and when they were awake, they saw his glory, and the two men that stood with him. And it came to pass, as they departed from him, Peter said unto Jesus, Master, it is good for us to be here: and let us make three tabernacles; one for thee, and one for Moses, and one for Elias: not knowing what he said. While he thus spake, there came a cloud, and overshadowed them: and they feared as they entered into the cloud. And there came a voice out of the cloud, saying, This is my beloved Son: hear him.—Luke 9: 26–35.

When referring to this scene, Peter says:—

"For we have not followed cunningly devised fables, when we made known unto you the power and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, but were eye-witnesses of his majesty. For he received from God the Father honor and glory, when there came such a voice to him from the excellent glory, This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased. And this voice which came from heaven we heard, when we were with him in the holy mount. We have also a sure word of prophecy; whereunto ye do well that ye take heed, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place, until the day dawn, and the day-star arise."—2 Pet. 1: 16–19.

The words basileian tou theou, may signify the King, or the kingdom. Hence, the Emphatic Diaglott renders the passage,—"God's ROYAL MAJESTY." By which is meant—the ROYAL SON OF GOD will appear in majesty to some of the disciples before they die. Accordingly, "about an eight days after these sayings, he took Peter, and John, and James, and went up into a mountain to pray." While there, Matthew says, he "was transfigured before them, and his face did shine as the sun, and his raiment was white as the light."—Matt. 17: 2. In this "vision," we understand the Savior appeared in "MAJESTY," as he will look when he is established in his coming kingdom. His face and raiment will then look as he appeared to his disciples on the mount. This was a strong evidence to the apostles who witnessed the sublime scene, but, as Peter says, "We have also a more sure word of prophecy" to prove that Jesus will come again, and set up an everlasting kingdom. At the transfiguration, we understand that he presented a miniature representation of it, showing how he will appear when he comes the second time. If his kingdom had been set up on the mount of transfiguration, it must be there now; for when it is established, it is to "stand for ever." We think no one would contend for such a position.

GOOD RESOLUTIONS.

Many know the value of good resolutions; and not a few have felt the sorrow arising from breaking them. We think many superior men owe their success in the world to good resolutions adopted in early life, and strengthened by daily prayer for help to carry them into effect. The following ones, from Jonathan Edwards, one of the most noted men of his times, will be read with interest by those who are striving to be good. We hope some of our readers may receive great benefit by reading them. Brethren and sisters, I move to adopt them. We hope many will say, "Aye."

RESOLUTIONS OF JONATHAN EDWARDS.

Resolved, That I will do whatsoever I think to be most to the glory of God and my own good, profit, and pleasure, in the whole of my duration, without any consideration of the time, whether now or never so many myriads of ages hence.

Resolved, To do whatever I think to be my duty, and most for the good of mankind in general.

Resolved, Never to lose one moment of time, but to improve it in the most profitable way I possibly can.

Resolved, Never to do any thing which I should be afraid to do if it were the last hour of my life.

Resolved, To be endeavoring to find out fit objects for charity and liberality.

Resolved, Never to speak evil of any one so that it shall tend to his dishonor, more or less, upon no account, except for some real good.

Resolved, To maintain the strictest temperance in eating and drinking.

Resolved, To study the Scriptures so steadily, constantly, and frequently, as that I may find and plainly perceive myself to grow in the knowledge of the same.

Resolved, Never to count that a prayer, nor to let that pass as a prayer, nor that as petition of a prayer, which is so made that I cannot hope that God will answer it; nor that as a confession which I cannot hope God will accept.

Resolved, Never to say any thing at all against anybody, but when it is perfectly agreeable to the highest degree of christian honor, and of love to mankind; agreeable to the lowest humility and sense of my own faults and failings; and agreeable to the Golden Rule. Often, when I have said anything against any one, to bring it to, and try it strictly by, the test of this resolution.

Resolved, To inquire every night, as I am going to bed, wherein I have been negligent; what sin I have committed; and wherein I have denied myself. Also, at the end of every week, month, and year.

Resolved, To inquire every night before I go to bed, whether I have acted in the best way I possibly could, with respect to eating and drinking.

Resolved, To endeavor, to my utmost, to deny whatever is not most agreeable to a good and universally sweet and benevolent, quiet, peaceable, contented and easy, compassionate and generous, humble and meek, submissive and obliging, diligent and industrious, charitable and even, patient, moderate, forgiving, and sincere temper: and to do, at all times, what such a temper would lead me to, and to examine, strictly, at the end of every week, whether I have so done.

On the supposition that there never was to be but one individual in the world, at any one time, who was properly a complete christian, in all respects, of a right stamp, having christianity always shining in its true lustre, and appearing excellent and lovely, from whatever part and under whatever character viewed—Resolved, To act just as I would do if I strove with all my might to be that one, who should live in my time."

WHAT IT COSTS.

It is a matter of serious consideration, when we inquire what it costs to dress a lady (?) in these times of national bankruptcy. In the days of our aged mothers, women were considered as helpers in assisting an honest, prudent man to get an honorable living in the world; although it was sometimes said of a woman of poor economy, "She throws away more with a tea spoon, than her husband can shovel in"; but economy, prudence, and self-denial, are now the exceptions. The extravagance and self-indulgence, we think, were hardly surpassed in Sodom, the year before its destruction. And what is still worse, all this expensive living is going on while our nation is in one of the most terrible wars the world ever witnessed. Already the public debt is so large that there is no probability, even if time were to continue, that it would ever be paid. And what is true of the nation, is equally so of a large number of individuals. One prominent cause is the unparalleled extravagance of their wives and daughters.

If this evil was only confined to the mass of worldly people, it would be quite a relief in the case; but when we see prominent church members indulging in the same foolish extravagance, the picture is a sad one to behold. The chief help that many women afford at the present day, whether in or out of the church, is help in spending money. Each seems to be on a strife with her neighbor, to see who shall obtain the most costly and fashionable wearing apparel.

The following, clipped from one of our exchanges, will give the reader some idea of a lady (?) in these perilous times:—

WHAT IT COSTS TO DRESS A LADY.

Modern civilization and refinement is developing among us, from the female chrysalis, a brilliant creature, who bears about the same relation to woman that a meteor does to the sun. This peculiar and radiant specimen of feminine human nature is the "lady" par excellence. One occasionally shoots across our pathway in going up and down Broadway. We notice her stepping from a carriage or daintily crossing the sidewalk, and wonder how anything so exquisite and perfect in its way was ever put together, or how, being completed, it remains so mysteriously charming and unapproachable, so wondrous and admirable a creation of beauty and art, as to scarcely betray a suspicion of a human origin. We gaze with admiration, mingled with awe, on the fair and delicately moulded figure, on the stately and immaculate folds of silk and lace in which it is enveloped, on the swimming motion which passes and parts the air without apparently touching the earth, and on the marvelous whiteness of the jeweled fingers which disdainfully hold the rich robe from any fear of passing contact.

The idea of wearing so peerless a creature next to one's heart as wife, sister, or mother, is simply an absurdity. She is quite too bright, if not too good, for human nature's daily food. Kisses would discompose her, tears commit unheard of ravages, even smiles must not be indulged in too often, and laughter never. This superb stoicism is a chief point of difference between a lady and a woman. A woman is emotional; she is sympathetic; she is quickly excited to laughter or to tears; she will even neglect her personal adornment, and forego her own wishes and inclinations, where her feelings are very much interested. But the modern "lady" never by any accident forgets herself. Under any circumstances, her own individuality is the first object of her attention and the last of her thoughts, and the result is a dazzling female phenomenon, which we are content to worship at a distance and have no wish to appropriate.

Such an idea, in fact, would be little less than insanity in anything short of a millionaire. A lady, at present prices, is a luxury too great for an ordinary man to contemplate; the figures attached plainly to her making-up and adornments would frighten any man who did not possess a printing-press of his own that could turn out an unlimited number of greenbacks.

Take the lady, for instance, who sweeps the pavement as she passes to the marble steps of a dry-goods palace. Her dress is a rich mauve moire antique, at eight dollars per yard, and it is trimmed with lace leaves, edged with tiny drop buttons, which we happen to know can be purchased only at six dollars per pair. Twelve pairs, including the epaulets and trimming for the body, would be required at the very least, involving a cost of seventy-five dollars for the trimming alone. Add fifteen yards of moire, at eight dollars, and you reach nearly two hundred dollars, without the making, which, together, with linings and smaller items, will be thirty dollars more. Her magnificent cloak is of black velvet, enriched with a profusion of jet guipure lace, and was imported at a cost of five hundred dollars. Her hat is Parisian also, and with its sweeping plume, which is the envy of half her female friends, was considered cheap at fifty dollars.

Were it worth while to come down to smaller details, we could enumerate her collar of real point, which cost fifteen dollars; her lace-covered parasol, which cost twenty-five; her lace-edged mouchoir, a bargain at forty; and her dainty walking-boots, which, it is complained, do not pay the price of exchange, at seven dollars per pair. Even then we leave out the jewelled watch, the daintily fitting gloves, once one dollar, now two dollars per pair, and two boxes of which scarcely suffice for a season. Taking the more prominent articles of costume, however, which can be seen at a glance, we have the following result:

Dress, including trimming and making,	$225 00
Cloak, " " " "	500 00
Hat, " " " "	50 00
Parasol, " " " "	25 00

Veil,	25 00
Watch, including chain and charms,	225 00
Walking boots,	7 00

KINGDOM OF HEAVEN.

BRO. GRANT:—Please state in the Crisis when is the kingdom of heaven set up? By request. S. L. MANLEY.

"The kingdom of heaven," and "the kingdom of God," mean the same thing. Matthew calls it "the kingdom of God," and Luke "the kingdom of heaven." Matthew says, "Seek ye first the kingdom of God, . . . and all these things shall be added unto you."—Matt. 6: 33. In Luke we read, "Seek ye the kingdom of God, and all these things shall be added unto you."—Lk. 12: 31.

In answer to the above inquiry, we would say the kingdom of God cannot be set up before the signs are seen which show it to be near. In Luke 21: 31, we read, "So likewise ye, when ye see these things come to pass, know ye that the kingdom of God is nigh at hand." The "things" referred to by the Savior, which, when seen, would indicate that the kingdom of God is near, were to transpire just before his second coming; but these same signs were to indicate that the kingdom of God is near; therefore the kingdom cannot be set up before Christ comes.

The "things" spoken of as signs of the coming King, and consequent kingdom, are mentioned in Luke 21: 24–31, as follows:—"And they shall fall by the edge of the sword, and shall be led away captive into all nations: and Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles, until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled. And there shall be signs in the sun, and in the moon, and in the stars; and upon the earth distress of nations, with perplexity; the sea and the waves roaring; men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth: for the powers of heaven shall be shaken. And then shall they see the Son of man coming in a cloud, with power and great glory. And when these things begin to come to pass, then look up and lift up your heads: for your redemption draweth nigh. And he spake to them a parable; Behold the fig-tree, and all the trees; when they now shoot forth, ye see and know of your own selves that summer is now nigh at hand. So likewise ye, when ye see these things come to pass, know ye that the kingdom of God is nigh at hand."

It is very evident, from "the signs of the times," that "the kingdom of heaven" is now very near, and will be "set up" when Christ comes, and not before. We think Satan is making his last grand effort to sustain his kingdom, but will soon be conquered by the King of kings.

AN IMPROVEMENT.

We have been using, of late, a new patent Kerosene oil burner. The following description will give the reader some idea of it:—

"The tube in this burner, being made in two parts and pressed together by a spring, adapts itself to any thickness of wick. It remains cooler while burning, and does not increase the heat of the chimney, consequently less chimnies are broken. It is arranged for a permanent and movable wick, so that every drop of oil may be consumed from the lamp, although the movable wick be but one inch in length. It makes no odor when it is extinguished, the movable tube closing over the flame."

We find the burner gives a brighter light for the amount of oil consumed, than any one we have ever used.

AN EXCELLENT OIL.

A new and valuable oil for machinery is being introduced among mechanics, called PARAFFINE OIL. If we can place any confidence in the testimony of those who use it, it is the best article for oiling machinery that has been introduced into market. As many of our readers are engaged in manufactuing business, more or less, we say this much for their consideration. The agent for Boston is Amasa Mason, 28 and 30 Canal Street.

THE YOUNG PILGRIM.

The next volume of The Young Pilgrim commences with July, and will be published twice a month at the following rates:—

For a single copy, 30 cents a year; and at the same rate for any number of copies under TEN.

Ten copies, and any number over ten, when sent to one address, 25 cents a year for each copy.

The postage on every ten copies or less to one address, will be 24 cents a year, which must be paid quarterly or yearly in advance at the office where the paper is received.

Sunday Schools and churches who take the paper in clubs of ten or more, having them all sent to one name, will get them at half the expense. Fifty copies, for instance, addressed to each subscriber, will cost $27.00, of which $12.00 is for postage; but if all are addressed to one name, the postage will be only $1.20, and the whole cost but $13.70. In the one case, each subscriber pays 54 cents a year for paper and postage; and, in the other, only 28 cents.

Now is the time to form clubs, and get new subscribers for the next volume. Our subscription list already numbers six thousand. Shall it not be twelve thousand before another year closes? It can be; and it will be if brethren will LABOR for it. Thousands ought to be given away, and scattered like autumn leaves among the children and youth outside of our own ranks. Who will pay for five, ten, twenty, fifty, or more, of each number, for that purpose?

Let us hear from you, brethren, before the new volume begins. Address all orders and remittances to The Young Pilgrim, Boston. Mass. W. B. H.

POSTAGE ON THE PILGRIM.

By an oversight of the law-makers, the postage on a small semi-monthly S. S. paper, of 24 numbers a year, is greater than on a large weekly paper like the Crisis, of 52 numbers a year. On the one it is 20 cents, on the other 24. On the Pilgrim, then, the expense for postage will be almost as much as for the paper. There appears to be no remedy until the law is altered.

In the mean time, subscribers in towns or Sunday Schools may save postage by clubbing together, and having the papers all sent to one address, as the postage is no more on ten papers than it is on one; no more on twenty than it is on eleven; and so on.

Every single subscriber pays 54 cents a year, for the paper and postage; every club subscriber, in clubs of ten or more, but 28 cents,—a saving of half. Smaller clubs may also save from 12 to 21 cents postage on each paper by having them all addressed to one name.

DIRECTIONS TO CLUB-MAKERS.

For clubs of ten or more.—Collect from each subscriber 28 cents, and send us 25; the balance will pay the postage. Or, if you choose, collect 30 cents from each, pay the postage, and keep the remainder for your trouble.

For smaller clubs.—If a club of eight or nine, collect 33 cents; six or seven, 34 cents; four or five, 36 cents; three, 38 cents; two, 42 cents. Send 30 cents to us for each subscriber, and with the balance pay the postage.

Attend to this AT ONCE, brethren, if you would save postage. The 1st of July will soon be here, and then your postage for the quarter or year to come will be called for. W. B. H.

TO CANADA SUBSCRIBERS.

The attention of The Young Pilgrim subscribers in the Canadas and British Provinces is invited to the following terms, as revised and slightly altered from those announced in the last number.

Canada subscribers will receive the paper at the following rates (the American postage—24 cents—prepaid here):—

Single copy,—50 cents a year.

Two copies, to one address,—80 cents; and 30 cents for every additional copy under ten.

Ten copies, to one address,—$2.50; and 25 cents for every additional copy.

Subscribers in Canada are especially interested to save expense of postage by the formation of clubs. W. B. H.

For the World's Crisis.

DO NOT DO IT!

If you are satisfied that the use of tea, coffee, tobacco, or any other narcotic is wrong, and yet have strong temptations to continue their use, do not do it, because you will come under condemnation as really as though you were convicted of any other sin.

If you are not convinced, and are tempted to neglect every thing that refers to the subject, and to consider it of no importance, do not do it, as after all there may be a principle involved that will affect your health and religious enjoyment. It may involve some such truth taught by the Savior in the expression, "If thine eye offend thee," etc., and may require the use of money that ought, instead of being spent to gratify self, to be used to the glory of God, which is not your object in using these things.

If you are satisfied that duty requires you to do some particular work, although it may be contrary to your previous personal feelings, and, after you have become thus satisfied as to the duty, you are tempted to bring self into the question, again, do not do it; for if in the path of duty you find that, self is out of the question, KEEP IT OUT; and do not backslide or try to believe you are right when you are "on the wrong track," but manfully serve God, self or no self.

If your duty requires you to preach the gospel, and you sometimes sit down at some brother's comfortable fireside, and are tempted to compare his lot with your pilgrim lot, and to give up your work, do not do it, but remember the reward comes by and by, and take your pilgrim's staff and go forward proclaiming the angel's message, that "the hour of His judgment is come," and the Lord will bless you.

If you hear a sermon or read an article that hits you, and you are tempted to give the whole dose to some one whose sins you see better than your own, and think their malady requires the medicine more than yours, do not do it, but take it all to yourself, and if it is like a sharp sword and cuts the conscience to the quick, let it do it, and be made better by it. It is better to be closely examined and searched now, when you can get right, than at the judgment when it will be too late.

For the World's Crisis.

MANY THANKS

To those numerous friends who have tendered me invitations to visit them or reside with them. For nearly eight years past my family has resided in the city,—in Rochester, N. Y., in Providence, R. I., and in Boston. We have never chosen city life, because we were never so situated as to make it pleasant. If a man has a large income which he wishes to spend or squander on himself, the city will afford him an opportunity, and money can command luxuries of almost any kind. If he is not so situated, the city must be a place of many privations and sacrifices. Hence, in the city persons must live on poorer food and less of it, must have less room, poorer air, and fewer comforts than in country homes. I have endured city life in the hope of doing some good, but have ever coveted the quiet of the country. Still my labors in the direction of publishing have drawn me towards the city and kept me from enjoying the fullest liberty in this respect. And as I see no way to disengage myself from these labors, I must still keep near the city to prosecute my work.

For about eight months past we have occupied a house, into which, with the exception of my study and two sleeping rooms, the sun never shone; and while paying $275 per year for rent, have been dying for want of air and sunshine. My mother, wife and child have been sick with the most distressing cough, and my wife, burdened with the care of a sick mother and large family, a Sunday School, young people's meeting, and other labors in connection with the family and the church, has been hurrying towards the grave. Some fifty successive days of easterly winds, damp and deathly, have almost finished up the work, and we concluded to fly for our lives, while there was a chance to save them. We could not locate near the sea-coast, on account of the climate. We could not go far away, because I must attend to book-making in Boston. We could not hire out to some backslidden church to do their work for them, because I must be free to travel and preach "where there is the most devil and the least money." And so, after looking the matter over, we have packed up our baggage and removed to Lawrence, Mass., about twenty-five miles from Boston, on the Boston and Maine R. R. And here we are in a cottage with a garden around it, about a mile from the centre of the city, which contains some seventeen thousand inhabitants. The climate is healthy, and the air soft and balmy to-day, and my poor wife has less of cough than she had before we moved. And, as I sit wearied and unstrung among the half-regulated book-cases, and listen for the slam and rumble and rattle that has thundered in my ears for the few past years, the stillness seems almost oppressive, and I appreciate the feeling of my little boy not three years old, who says "he wants some noise,"—a want which he is making energetic efforts to satisfy.

Ah, well, with riding two or three hours per day on the cars, and working some in the office, and amid the hubbub of Boston, I hope to get used to it, so that I can feel naturally under the shade of the apple trees, and rest on the green-sward, as in my boy days gone by.

I find a little flock of pilgrims here, some weak, faint, sick, sad and discouraged. I hope we may do them good, for they seem to love the work of God. There are multitudes here that are out of Christ and need a Savior. Pray for us, that our coming here may lead to their salvation. O that we may be blest, and be a blessing to many, is my prayer.

The numerous friends, scattered from Canada to Connecticut, and from Maine to Ohio, will please receive, with my thanks for their letters, these explanations instead of personal answers which I have not now time to write. To Bro. H., I can only give thanks for his offer of "house and land," "pasture for cows, and cows enough to pasture"; and if it was not too far off, I would warrant him that the cow should we well used, and the milk too, if he would drive her this way. To all I would say, your kind greetings have been to me a fresh assurance of the truth of my Savior's promise of "an hundred-fold now in this present time."

I pine for freedom in labor. If God will, I hope to have some liberty from the constant press of business that has crowded me down for the past ten years. But I cannot let the work of publishing stop, while it is so needful and so useful as it is. I am therefore hard at the work. And notwithstanding high prices, I am now making some six or eight thousand books, which will consume more than two tons of paper, and furnish more than two millions, seven hundred and thirty-six thousand (2,736,000) pages of reading matter, devoted to the presentation of, the gospel of Christ, the hope of the church, and the duty of christians in this world.

I have other plans which are being brought to maturity. Prof. Hudson is now working for me on a book which will probably cost a thousand dollars, and which I think will be the best aid to the critical study of the New Testament that has ever been produced in this country—a critical Greek and English Concordance of the New Testament. Months must elapse before this can be done. Meanwhile pray for us, that God may help and guide and bless us with his peace.

My "Bible Students' Libraries," in five volumes, will probably be ready this month. Those who wish a collected, elegant and uniform edition of my books and tracts can obtain them at cheap rates.

My business and office will remain as before at 167 Hanover St., Boston, where all my letters should be addressed. Grace be with you all. I remain your Bro. in Christ,

May 5th, 1864. H. L. HASTINGS.

For the World's Crisis.

LETTER FROM ANDOVER, N. H.

DEAR FRIENDS:—I am here temporarily in Andover, N. H., far away from home and among the mountains of this Old Granite State,—staying here for a while among kind friends for my health. Now I am sitting on a little hill that is situated among the mountains. As far as the eye can reach there is nothing but mountains and valleys to be seen, and fields clothed in green. Birds are singing their sweetest songs. The sun pours down its brightest rays, and nature seems to say, There is a God, and God is good. The trees tell of a gentle breeze afloat. The sound of many waters is heard as they rush down the stony pathway of the mountain, and a little brook runs by me.

I need not tell you that this is a pleasant place. But when, in my imagination, I compare this scenery with that of the New Earth, and the kingdom, where sin and the curse never will be, how much more glorious and beautiful they appear! And when I think of that blissful state I can say, Come, Lord Jesus, purify this earth, and subdue sin and death, and take thy waiting church home. O! when we think of the New Earth, and of seeing our Savior, and being made like him, and dwelling where he is, the beauty of this earth fades away.

One thing I have not mentioned: a silent grave-yard is on my left, telling of some departed ones, and reminding me of the hope of the resurrection. I can say, I do long for the Redeemer to come and awake the silent dead—to appear in the clouds of heaven and come to reign as a King forever, and to hear him say, Come, my faithful servant, into joys everlasting; and to take him by the hand and say, This is my King and Savior, I have waited for thee.

O! is not this thought and prospect enough to strengthen the christian's heart—to fill us with joy, and help us to be faithful to the end? Let us prove faithful, for soon our Savior will come, and will say unto us, "Well done, good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joy of thy Lord." Now I can sing—

"What sweet comfort was mine,
When the favor divine
When at first I believed,
What a joy I received,
What a heaven in Jesus' dear name!"

Correspondence.

From Bro. J. C. Rice.

BRO. GRANT:—We have been having very interesting times here of late, a condensed synopsis of which might be interesting to the readers of our paper.

Some of the Bible truths which we advocate and cherish are evidently sores in the eyes of our orthodox (?) friends, as they have been woefully scathed by them. A "reverend" (?) friend of the Methodist church finished delivering a course of lectures upon the destiny of the wicked, immortality of the soul, etc., and at the close very kindly offered to discuss those questions two weeks from that evening with any three, which was accepted by our society, although he was solicited to take one, very strongly, but refused, and arrangements were made accordingly. At the time appointed we had the pleasure of seeing the nice, commodious house, which he previously occupied, well filled with the intelligent of our community, and a fine representation of the clerical portion of this and adjoining districts, the greater part of whom, we understand, were especially invited.

As Mr. Taylor's friends required it, Bro. John Moore opened the discussion, followed by Mr. T., Bro. Wilber Parker, Mr. T. Bro. E. R. Wood, and Mr. T.; each having the floor fifteen minutes in turn, taking two rounds, thus occupying the attention of nearly eight hundred attentive listeners upwards of three hours, including time occupied by the chairman in explaining terms by Webster; which resulted in the glory of God and the advancement of his truth, although, I am sorry to say, Mr. T's. friends seemed highly displeased with the result; and, in order to amend the matter, invited the worthy chairman to reconsider the discussion and give his opinion upon it, to which he acceded, two weeks after, to a smaller audience, Mr. T. being among the missed. I would like to give a full report of Mr. Godfree's effort but it would be a trespass upon your time, and room in our paper, therefore content myself with some extracts.

In the review, he would not quote any of the Bible made use of on that evening. Mr. Taylor's best argument was in his exposition of Malachi 4; 1, which was, "that prophecy referred to the destruction of Jerusalem; the women and children being the root and branch which were burned up!" He was "surprised to hear so little, in fact, scarce any thing said about man's accountability." When our brethren made reference to it several times, quite as often as was reasonably possible, as well as Mr. T., occasionally. In giving his opinion he said, "I was surprised to learn, according to Mr. Moore's statements, the Bible said nothing of immortal soul, therefore some two days after the disussion, when the heat of the mind had subsided, I looked carefully over the arguments." "We all know that God put a living principle within man." "The immortal soul is the thinking, intelligent part of man." "If man has no immortality annihilation is true." "God is a Spirit, and that Spirit is imparted to man." I may be asked, How do you know? where do you find that? I answer, not in the Bible. Reason teaches it." "The natural action of the mind shows we have something within that is immortal," etc. "It is necessary for the soul and body to be united to make an active man." "When the life ceases, the soul is as

"One proof of immortality is man's power of perception." (Defines the term.) "The faculty of perceiving or understanding things quickly." "You present Euclid's works to some persons, and they will understand nothing of its circles, angles, parallelograms, etc., while others will; thus some enjoy that power to a greater degree than others." "Another proof is memory." "The power of recollecting things and circumstances." (Here relates a personal incident in Yarmouth by way of elucidation.) "And will is another evidence of man's immortality." "The power one has over another." "Have seen the strong and powerful, in a foam of rage, threaten vengeance, and apparently uncontrolable, yield to the kind touch and mild entreaty of the weak." Then opened upon annihilationists, showing by remarks and quotations from a work which he held, the impossibility of matter becoming annihilated, which was as remarkably strange as Mr. T's. remarks in discussion, which were levelled upon annihilationists, notwithstanding each brother positively asserted that they did not believe in annihilation, or that matter could be annihilated, but by the fiat of the great God Jehovah.

Thus the matter rests, and some are yet dissatisfied. A gentleman said to me the day following the review, "The ideas which you advance stand in a better position by fifty per cent, since the church minster's (Episcopal) review than previously;" although up to the evening of discussion he had been an opposer. He also said that "while going home from the review, a gentleman (one of the bitterest opposers) stated that he 'went with the expectation of hearing something that would settle the matter, but was disappointed, and that it was in a much worse state than before.'"

So, Bro. Grant, we can "report progress" of God's truth, and the public mind never in a better position to receive it than now. The enemy's stronghold has been stormed, and God's truth triumphs! Blessed be his holy name! Another theme of rejoicing is, redemption is near! O! how my weary soul leaps, when I think that the trials of this dreary life are almost o'er. The prospects are so bright that we can bless God and take courage. We are expecting you over here soon to cheer us. Brethren and sisters, let us be good, so that Master will say, "Well done." Yours in hope, Joseph C. Rice.

Hillsburgh, N. S., April 13th.

From Bro. C. P. Dow.

Bro. Grant:—I feel a pleasure in communicating a few lines for the Crisis to inform its readers of the prosperity of the cause of our dear Redeemer. I write this from Barnston, C. E., where I met very large and attentive congregations yesterday and Saturday, as per appointment, and had a blessed time preaching "the word of life," which comforted many. Some cheering, earnest testimonies were given. Two were buried in baptism in the likeness of Christ's death, in joyful hope of sharing in the glories of the resurrection morn.

The good effects and results of our meetings in this place last winter, as reported in the Crisis, are quite manifest in the interest among believers and unbelievers, the crowd that attended, the place of meeting, a large schoolhouse being filled to its utmost capacity, and quite a large congregation; the larger part of the men were outside the house, yet gave good attention to the word spoken. Sinners are under deep conviction, and we hope that others will yet embrace the truth.

Bro. Sylvanus Griffin, who "labors in (the) word and doctrine" of God, resides in this vicinity, is doing well for the cause, and is highly esteemed. Bro. J. Chapman labors here a part of his time, and is "esteemed highly for his work's sake;" and others we might name are "co-workers with God," are his "husbandry." May God bless them all. Oh! brethren, be faithful; our King is coming soon. Let us be ready.

My visit to Montreal was a very pleasant one, although the weather was rainy, and so unfavorable for our meetings; yet I formed some pleasant acquaintances with the devoted church there, who have been so fully reported in the Crisis. I thought when there, if those who ignorantly if not maliciously say of the "life and death doctrine" that it always produces death, could visit Montreal and see what has been done there in connection with its faithful preaching and the attending blessing of God, they would be ashamed of their ignorant statements. There are those in these days of apostasy, that "speak evil of the things they understand not." "Oh that they were wise."

I expect to preach at Wayville, in Barnston, this evening, and hope for further good results. Chas. P. Dow.

Barnston, May 23d, 1864.

From Bro. H. B. Sevey.

Bro. Grant:—We have been deeply afflicted. Our eldest boy, aged sixteen years, a victim to that distressing disease, diphtheria, fell asleep the eighth of April. But we do not sorrow as those that have no hope; for we believe Jesus died and rose again, and will bring our boy from the land of the enemy. He met with a change of heart in his last hours; was calm and peaceful, disposed of his treasures, and made arrangements for his funeral, requesting that prayer only should be made. Our hearts say, "Thy will, oh God, be done!" It is hard to part with our loved ones. Yet we are living so near the end, we can say with John, "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth, yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from labor, and their works do follow them." Jesus alone hath the keys of the grave. He will bring them forth, to do them no injustice. Bless his name.

My health is improving. Hope to be able to go into the field of the Lord to work soon. Pray for me. Yours waiting for Jesus,

H. B. Sevey.

From Sr. L. Beeraft.

Bro. Grant:—Praised be the Lord for his wonderful works to the children of men! I can and do rejoice that God has a people who are not afraid to stand right up for the truth. The platform of salvation as wrought by God cannot be swept away by the refuges of lies! The lions may roar, but who would be afraid of the lion while in the Keeper's hands? I thank my God that I am worthy to be hated of the world. Let the consideration, my brother, my sister, that the day of the Lord draweth nigh, [illegible]. Is not the Lord at hand to avenge all his abused servants? Be faithful, therefore, unto the coming of the Lord. Behold, the husbandman waiteth, etc. "Be ye, therefore, patient, and establish your hearts, for the coming of the Lord draweth nigh."

O! that every one that professes the name of Christ, would cherish his spirit. "Learn of me," he saith, "for I am meek and lowly in heart." Trial and tribulations deep will ever await the true follower of Christ. Yea, surely, while in the enemy's land. Wait a little longer, and He who is to come will come and will not tarry.

> "He comes, he comes, the judge severe,
> The seventh trumpet speaks him near;
> His lightnings flash, his thunders roll!
> How welcome to the faithful soul."

Yes, welcome! reclaims the waiting, afflicted followers of Christ. They will hail him as their triumphant Lord. The morning of that glorious day will very soon dawn upon us. Methinks, I can almost hear the rumbling of his chariot wheels.

Praise him! praise him! O! the eternal mansions of joy! The sweet immortal morning of never-ending day. The kingdom of God, the smile of his countenance. Then we shall be immortal and bloom forever in the paradise of God.

I believe in the speedy coming of Christ, the literal resurrection of the dead, immortality through Christ alone, and the everlasting destruction of the wicked. Lois Beeraft.

From Bro. W. H. Nottage.

Bro. Grant:—I rejoice that the scales have fallen from my eyes. I thank God that I ever heard an Advent sermon. I have ever been a reader of the Bible, but could not understand it in the light that it is generally taught, therefore I paid but little attention to it. Four years ago Eld. Hemenway came to our place and held some meetings. I made up my mind to go and hear him. He made the truth so plain it seemed that no one need misunderstand it; at any rate I was led to believe the Bible I now love. I love its doctrines, and my blessed Savior, because he first loved me, and gave his life to redeem me from sin and death. I feel it my duty to give my mite for the truth. May it be scattered far and wide, and many be led to see the great truths there contained in the word of God, believe them and practice them, and prepare for that great day that is to try our works whether they be good or bad.

From Bro. R. Noble.

Bro. Grant:—The Bible preached in the order where I was reared was so dark, I could not understand it, mixed with so much fear and woe. How could I love my dear Lord, when I thought him looking down upon me with a frown? But love—what a comprehensive little word! to love my dear Savior, for he first loved me; why should I not love him? Through the blessing of God I have read your papers, and conversed with a dear brother here; and, thank my heavenly Father, my eyes have been opened. I now see him in a different light, and love him. I want love to take the place of darkness throughout our country. May God bless my dear brother's every effort to spread wisdom and love throughout the land. Remember us at the throne of grace, with those dear ones at home.

From Bro. C. E. Burk.

Bro. Grant:—I was formerly a Free-will Baptist, believing what I could not see any light in, no pure light, but all was dark. I could read the Bible, but did not believe it meant as it read. How blind I was! But thank our heavenly Master, some four years ago he opened my eyes through the preaching of Eld. Damman; and I thank God that he ever sent the light to me. I feel that I want to help my fellow men out of darkness into the holy light and truth; therefore I send my mite.

My dear companion is now very sick. I sincerely request my dear brothers' prayers for her recovery to health, if it seemeth good to our heavenly Master. C. E. Burk.

From Sr. L. B. George.

Bro. Grant:—I have read your paper with the deepest interest. It is a welcome guest to my home. My copy is the only one taken in this town. I love to read it. There are no Advent people here, that I am aware of. I am a member of the Reformed Methodist church, which I united with about eight years ago. During that time there have been many sad changes. The religion of Christ is precious to me. About ten years since I went to an Advent meeting in Thompson. I am anxious to know more about this people. I am fully persuaded that the judgment is fast hastening when all must give an account of the deeds done in the body.

Webster, Mass. Lucinda B. George.

From Bro. J. T. Ongley.

Bro. Grant:—Those friends that I ordered the Crisis for a few days ago, told me yesterday that it was the best paper they ever saw. Also, a short time ago, a brother that has just left the Baptist church, having taken the Crisis for a short time, said he would not be without the Crisis for ten dollars a year.

Your brother in hope, J. T. Ongley.

"PUT ME IN REMEMBRANCE."—Isa. 43: 26.

As the loving and condescending parent says to the child, Remind me, lest I forget, so do these words come to us from our Father in heaven. How full of the paternal heart! Put me in remembrance of my promise.

My Bro., my Sr., are you desponding? Do you think Father has forgotten his word on which he caused you to hope? Go right to him. Remind him of it. Then believe with all thine heart, wait patiently for him, and just at the right time the work will be done for you.

How glad my heart has been this morning, through my tears, that we are a suffering band; if we were not, we should fall through all eternity in this likeness to our King. "If so be that we suffer with him, that we may be also glorified together." In view of his sufferings for us, I was just thinking, with overwhelming joy, of his exaltation to the diadem of earth. How his co-heirs will joy in this his "joy that was set before him"! How perfectly their hearts will be his! How they will with one voice of heavenly harmony, "Unto him that loved us, and washed us from our sins in his own blood. Worthy is the Lamb that was slain." Not a rebel heart in the whole domain. O glory! Who does not long to be there?

Then let us now ask for the kingdom. Now put our Father in remembrance to give us the kingdom, as he has said it is his good pleasure to do. Now is the time to make our united petition for it. The kingdoms of earth

Usurpers are being dashed one against another. Prince Messiah's time is at hand; and here let me congratulate you, my beloved comrades, that you are not among the last to bring back the rightful heir to David's throne. Long since have you bowed your hearts, like Judah of old, and your petition has gone up to him—"Return thou," and all thy retiane,—but have we put up our petition with the same unanimity and ardor of soul for the kingdom? A word to the wise is sufficient. Your Sister, praying, Give us the kingdom. Amen. E. S. Willard.

Hammonton, N. J.

P. S.—An heir of the "kingdom that cannot be moved" going over on the side of the usurpers to fight for their continuance in power, just at the time when God is about to displace them forever and give Him the kingdom! Just think of it! Would the Medo-Persians have received the kingdom from Babylon had they done this? Would the Romans have taken the kingdom had they done this? And shall the saints of the Most High take the kingdom and possess the kingdom forever, even for ever and ever, if they do so, if they are disloyal to their Prince?—"the Prince of the kings of the earth"? Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

The Dano-German Question. The Conference would assemble on the day the China left.

The Liverpool Morning Post says the representatives will announce officially the opinions of their Governments on the proposed arrangements for the subdivision of Schleswig, the northern portion being amalgamated with Denmark and the southern with Holstein.

The Post thinks there are great improbabilities of either Denmark or Germany assenting. Austria and Prussia are said to be in complete accord, and it was asserted in one of their organs that they contemplated a resolution for the complete separation of the Duchies from Denmark.

Advices from Jutland recount very arbitrary proceedings by the Prussians since the conclusion of the armistice.

The Paris papers assert that England, Russia and Sweden intend to propose a stipulation that Kiel shall not become a Federal port, nor Rendsburg a Federal fortress.

The Patrie states that at a council of Ministers at Copenhagen it was resolved not to consent to a division of Schleswig, the Danish Plenipotentiary should rather quit the conference.

The German papers say that Prussia and Austria intend exerting their utmost influence in favor of Augustenburg for the throne of the Duchies.

Continental papers assert that a basis of arrangements will be adopted to consist of a union of Holstein and the six southern communes of Schleswig to Germany, and the incorporation of the rest of Schleswig permanently with Denmark.

The Times fears that the belligerents will not assent to a peaceful division on reasonable principles and of territory claimed by both. The Germans believe that they may do what they please without fear of exciting more than England's indignation. Denmark, on the other hand is in no hurry to end the war, having little more to lose and hoping much from the chapter of accidents. To bring these rival obstinacies into an agreement is the task of the neutral members of the conference, and it is not likely to be accomplished in today's sitting.

The Europe says information relative to the conference, the accuracy of which we can guaranty, have now to choose between a war threatening to overstep the limits of the Duchies and the adoption of a system giving satisfaction to the Danes and Germans alike. This system would be the constitution of Holstein and the German portion of Schleswig in a single State, the people to decide by universal suffrage upon the interior government they would prefer. The remainder of Schleswig would be united to the Danish monarchy.

It is asserted that a more warlike tone prevails at Copenhagen, at that the Government has resolved to recall its plenipotentiaries if the German Powers do not modify their demand.

The Duke of Malakoff is dead.

A squadron of six men-of-war had left France for Tunis.

DOMESTIC.

"In the heat of the action Custer's brigade of Michiganders were ordered up. This command, armed with seven sharp-shooters, marched up, dismounted, and Davies opened a gap in his line for them. A furious assault commenced just in time, as the rebels were reinforced. But nothing could withstand the terrible column now poured into the rebels. Back they went for a mile and a half with fearful loss. Three of our brigades had whipped their whole corps. Loads and loads of their wounded were carried off."

The Times' special dispatch of May 31st says the rebel papers admit a loss of one thousand. The loss in the 6th South Carolina regiment alone was 164.

At midnight last night the rebels attempted to surprise Hancock with a heavy force, but were repulsed with a heavy loss, leaving four hundred or five hundred prisoners. Hancock was in the rifle pits taken from them in the evening, and after this repulse it was determined to advance on the whole line of Hancock's front. This movement is now going on. The enemy is making some resistance, but there are no indications of a general engagement.

New York, June 3d. The Herald's correspondent with the 5th corps says of the battle on Monday, at 6 P. M., the enemy assaulted our line. It was a general and sudden attack. They advanced in two lines of battle, and a heavy skirmish line. Simultaneously with the opening of a volley of musketry came solid shot and shell from a score or more of cannon. Our men stood firm and unshaken. The rebel fire was wild and the missiles flew over our battle line. Our men coolly waited to return the fire. It was a most murderous volley our troops delivered, staggering the assaulting column and driving it back. Four companies opened in response to the enemy's cannon.

Assault after assault was made by the desperate foe, but each time our forces hurled him back bleeding and discomfited.

The contest ceased with our driving the enemy and occupying the battle ground. Our losses are estimated at two hundred killed, wounded and missing.

The enemy's loss is probably not less than fifteen hundred. We took two hundred prisoners, among them ten commissioned officers. It is said that among their dead is a General and two Colonels. Prisoners say the whole of Ewell's corps were engaged under Early, Ewell commanding the whole army, Lee being sick in Richmond.

New York, June 4th. The Herald's correspondent with the James River fleet says a deserter from the rebel ram Richmond, states that Fort Darling mounts fifty guns, and is considered impregnable to gunboats. Three rebel iron-clads are now lying below the Fort, preparing to attack our fleet, aided by several fire-ships and a number of infernal machines.

The fire-ships are to be drifted down to our vessels in flames, closely following will be a host of torpedoes to explode on striking our gunboats and in the excitement the rebel iron-clads are to make an attack. The rams are plated eight inches on three feet solid oak, and each has a beak several feet long with a powerful submarine battery attached.

The Times' headquarters dispatch, dated May 31st, closes thus:

There is hardly a doubt that the position now held by the rebels in our front is but an advanced line, which they will hold as long as possible for the purpose of gaining time to perfect the defences on the Chickahominy. On that line [illegible] expected we shall deliver battle.

I need not say that in the relative position of the opposing forces, this is the only field fight we are likely to have outside of Richmond, and that its result must decide whether the rebel capital can be carried by a coup de main, or whether it is destined to become the object of a summer's seige.

The Recent Battles near Richmond.—It is estimated, unofficially, that the capture made by the Federal army during the advance of Monday to Bethsada Church numbered four thousand, and it is thought at the War department that our loss does not exceed one thousand.

The battle for the possession of Hanover Court House, on Saturday last, appears to have been one of the most terrific cavalry fights during the war; for, according to the Washington National Republican, the rebels "were driven from their position, leaving one thousand men, killed and wounded, upon the field. Our loss was about three hundred killed and wounded, of which number fifty were officers! This last fact shows that our officers were in the thickest of the conflict."

Severe Hail Storm.—The Hartford Courant says that a very heavy storm of hail fell north and east of that city on Wednesday afternoon, doing much damage to the growing crops of grass, rye, strawberries and tobacco. Drifts of hail were seen as high as the hub of a carriage wheel in some spots—the storm having lasted for two hours. One hailstone seven inches in circumference was picked up! The damage will be severely felt by farmers and others.

Emigration from Ireland.—The Leinster (Ireland) Express of May 18th, speaking of the emigration movement to America, says there is not the least doubt that the emigration panic is spreading through all parts of the country. From the district of that journal the flight seems increasing. Two thousand eight hundred and eighty-four persons left the small port of Sligo in five weeks for the United States.

Items.

☞ It is anticipated that the mortality in Washington hospitals will be very great, as a large proportion of the cases are of men so severely wounded that they were left at Fredericksburg until they could be moved on litters. Twenty-eight dead were lying in one hospital to-day.

☞ The Richmond Examiner says the cost of all articles of necessity, has increased to an alarming extent during the last few days. Rice is $2.50 per pound; butter $14 to $20, and eggs $10 per dozen.

☞ A grandson of Gen. Harrison is a colonel in the Union army, and is serving under Gen. Hooker. His name is Benjamin. It was Benjamin Harrison, his great grandfather, who signed the Declaration.

☞ A Washington correspondent says the official records of the military authorities show that upward of one hundred and fifty female recruits have been discovered and made to resume the garments of their sex.

☞ The hospitals at Washington are being cleared of the slightly wounded, who will be sent North. The capacity of the hospitals has been and is being increased fifty per cent. The number of wounded from the recent battle-fields in Virginia sent there is over 30,000.

☞ General Longstreet has so far recovered from the wound he received in the battle of the Wilderness that he expects to take the field in about three weeks, says the Richmond Whig.

☞ The Pope is sick again, and his death may be expected at any moment. As there is a Bonaparte among the Cardinals, Emperor Napoleon may be able to extend his connection in Italy. The election of a new Pope is spoken of as possible without waiting for the old one's death.

☞ Garibaldi is going back to England in the autumn, by which time it is supposed the policy of France and England will be settled without reference to the opinions or position of the sturdy republican.

☞ Russia has conquered the Circassians, and that people are leaving their country, and are now seeking refuge in Turkey, where they receive assistance from the Sultan and other good Mussulmen.

☞ The London Herald affirms that Lord Palmerston desires to withdraw from public life on account of the state of his health.

☞ Gen. Grant was born in Clermont county, Ohio, April 28, 1822, and is, consequently, forty-two years old.

For the World's Crisis.

"AS THY DAY THY STRENGTH SHALL BE."

When oppress'd with many a care,
Fainting 'neath the load I bear,
Lord, to thee for aid I cry,
Be thou, Father, ever nigh.
Let thy promise comfort me—
"As thy day thy strength shall be."

When like Christ I strive to be,
And the world assailing me,
Seeks to lead my feet astray
From the strait and narrow way,
Lord, my guide, my refuge be—
"As my day may my strength be."

When loved friends do me forsake,
And deride me for thy sake,
Striving my good name to stain,
Causing hours of grief and pain,
Keep my heart from anger free,—
"As my day let my strength be."

When my health and strength shall fail,
And I fear to tread death's vale,
Let thy love illume my way,
Be my rod, my staff, my stay;
Verify thy word to me—
"As thy day thy strength shall be."

NUMBER ELEVEN.

The Story of Joseph.

In the vale of Hebron, near the place where Abraham and Isaac had sojoured before him, quietly dwelt Jacob the patriarch. There, after so many weary years of care, he doubtless hoped to spend his declining days in the midst of his children and children's children. His sons cared for his numerous flocks, and Jacob sat in the door of his tent, musing over the past, or dwelling in rapture over the glowing promises of the future.

But, alas! this scene of domestic peace was not long destined to remain. Joseph, the son of Jacob's old age, had received more testimonials of his father's favor than any of his brethren. This partiality of their father for Joseph had created an envious spirit in their hearts, an envy that poisoned all their former felicity, and led them to hate the very presence of their young brother.

It chanced on a certain occasion when Joseph was sent to learn of the welfare of his brethren, they conspired against his life when they saw him afar off. He approached them with confidence and kindly greeting, but instead of a fond welcome, he was met with sternness. But his life was spared by the influence of one more humane than the others, who fain would deliver him out of their hands. That he might the more surely effect his deliverance he had Joseph cast into a pit, that he might release him when the others were absent.

Strange to Joseph seemed the perfidy of his brethren. His innocent heart knew nought of the envy that had rooted out the natural affections of those who sought to destroy him. But in the absence of him who would have saved Joseph, a band of merchantmen trading to Egypt passed that way, to whom Joseph was sold as a slave. No entreaty of his could soften the harsh decision of his brethren, and he bowed his heart in submission to his cruel fate. He was divested of his coat of many colors, that it might be carried back to his father as a proof of his death by some wild beast. There was mourning in the tent of Jacob when his perfidious sons brought him the coat of Joseph stained with blood; he mourned him as slain while on his errand to his brethren.

With sadness of heart did Joseph follow his masters in their journey to the far off land of Egypt. Sadly did he ponder over the scenes he should no more behold. Sadly did he feel his young brother's absence, and the loss of a fond father's favors. He who had roamed so wild and free in boyish sportiveness in the green vales of Hebron, was now a slave going to a strange lannd. After slowly traversing the desert they came at last in sight of the great cities that arose on the banks of the lordly Nile.

As Joseph entered the mighty capital of Egypt and gazed on the palaces of Pharoah, and the colossal monuments of art that arose on every hand, he little dreamed that ere long he should rule in the name of the king over all these scenes of splendor, and be the savior of those who so late had sought his death. But he must commence his life here as a slave in the house of Potiphar, and advance to honor by strict integrity and a high moral purpose. In the home of his bondage, surrounded by heathen worship, he forgot not the lessons received in his boyhood to rely on Providence, to trust and wait till heaven's smiles should enlighten the darkness of the adverse hour. He was imprisoned through the intrigues of his master's wife, but his innocence was vindicated at last.

From the dungeon he was called to interpret the visions of Pharoah. At court he was received with great favor, for the breath of heaven had filled his heart with wisdom. From the position of a servant and a prisoner he was raised at once to that of ruler over all the land of Egypt. Through the seven years of plenty that succeeded his elevation, he stored up the plenteous harvests to prepare for the coming years of want.

Famine began at length to invade the land of Egypt as well as the tented homes of Jacob, where plenty had so long smiled upon them. At the bidding of their father, ten sons of Jacob went down to Egypt to buy corn for their households. They little thought as they stood before the ruler of Egypt that he was the brother they had so cruelly sold into bondage, many years before. But Joseph recognized them, and to try them, he charged them as being spics, and retained one of their number till they should bring their younger brother with them. Much troubled in spirit they returned to their father with the tale of their adventures.

It was with much reluctance that Jacob gave his consent for Benjamin to visit the court of the stern stranger. But want prevailed, and once more the sons of Jacob went down to Egypt with goodly gifts to gain the favor of the ruler.

When Joseph saw his brethren and Benjamin, whom he loved and remembered as his dear playmate when he last left the tents of his father, he could restrain his emotions no longer, but retired to weep. Then he entertained them with a feast, after which he sent them away laden with corn for their families. But this time he caused his silver cup to be placed in Benjamin's sack of corn, and when they were a little way off commanded them to return and render an account of their conduct. This greatly terrified them, especially when the cup was found with Benjamin. Judah pleaded the cause of his brother and offered to remain in his stead as a servant.

But it was enough, the noble heart of Joseph could bear no more, his emotions were more than he could restrain, and he wept aloud and said, "I am Joseph; doth my father yet live?" His brethren were overwhelmed, they could not answer him; all their guilt, their perfidy, their cruelty rushed upon them; the scene of their brother's sorrow, his pleading eyes when they sold him into slavery, all, all came up before them in its strange viridness and dark reality. No wonder they were confounded before him. Again he said, "I am Joseph, your brother, whom you sold into Egypt."

He then told them it was of God that he should be sold into bondage, that they might live, and their posterity be preserved. Thus for their evil intent were they requited with good.

At Joseph's request they returned to Jacob with the glad tidings of his great fame, to bring their father and all his household to Egypt. Jacob could scarcely believe the report of his sons at first; he had so long mourned his beloved son as dead; but when he saw all the preparations made for his removal, he said, "It is enough, Joseph, my son, is yet alive, I will go and see him before I die."

Then Jacob and all that were with him left the place of his long sojourn to go into Egypt. Tender and touching was the meeting of father and son after so many years of painful separation. The sorrow of the first was forgotten in the gladness of the reunion.

Goshen, the fairest portion of Egypt, was assigned to the children of Jacob for their dwelling place, where they lived and prospered under the shadow of their brother's favor.

Fiction furnishes not a more simple and touching story than that of Joseph. It is stranger than romance because true, its precepts are beautiful, its lessons elevating. It tells of the rancor of envy, and how it was requited with the noble return of a brother's favor, when adversity had lowered over the one and fortune favored the other.

Such is the simple story of Joseph, the favored son of Jacob, the slave of Potiphar, and the exalted ruler of Egypt. Gentle as a son, patient as a slave, and noble as a ruler, his is a beautiful history to read and ponder, and a fit example to emulate.

Tuesday, April 22nd, 1864. This eve the faithful few who are looking and waiting for the Coming One assembled as usual at their accustomed place of worship, to offer united prayer and praise to Jehovah; to receive and impart words of cheer; to get strength to pursue the onward march of life; to exchange christian salutations, and once more to assure each other of our continued sympathy while pursuing the thorn-set way that leads to glory. There we sat, a weary band, having but just left the scenes of care and toil; some from the field, where now (as of old) by the sweat of the brow the fruits of earth are produced; some from the work-shop, where we are oft constrained to say, as was said of Lot, Our souls are vexed with the filthy conversation of the wicked; others from homes of care where amid the varied duties devolving upon us we have to strive hard not to be overcharged with the cares of life. For a brief period we have left all these to go up and together worship our God.

We were favored this eve with the presence of one of the under shepherds of the flock,—one who has learned to feed the flock instead of distracting and dividing,—Eld. A. W. Sibley,—whose first coming among us was not very long ago, but by his ability and zeal in expounding the Scriptures and urging his hearers to holiness of heart and life, has already won our confidence, and we feel warranted to class him among those whom we are to know in the Lord and esteem them very highly in love for their works' sake,—was with us, and after appropriate devotional exercises, said he would talk to us on the war, giving at the commencement as his opinion that the rebels would finally be exterminated. We were taken somewhat by surprise, for though war is a universal theme in these days, it is unusual for one whose business it is to proclaim the speedy advent of Him who is coming himself to take vengeance on his enemies, and destroy all those who finally reject him,—who has said, "My kingdom is not of this world, if it were my servants would fight";—it was strange to hear such a one proclaim the war to be his theme; but when he read his text—"Thou, therefore, endure hardness, as a good soldier of Jesus Christ" (2 Tim. 2: 3), then we knew what war he meant; even the "Holy war," the great struggle between right and wrong, sin and holiness, which is constantly being carried on in our world,—a struggle more grand in its workings, more glorious in its achievements, more momentous in its results, than all others combined.

He treated his subject in a novel and interesting manner, applying the terms of modern warfare to the old yet ever new spiritual conflict; giving points of comparison also of contrast between the warfare waged with carnal weapons and that with the gospel armor.

He observed that the great rebellion commenced in Eden's happy bowers; the great rebel-in-chief is the Devil; he instigated our first parents to rebel against the righteous government of God, and all their posterity partook of a rebellious nature. But this great rebel was not to be suffered to lead on his host unmolested; one still more mighty, who was in every respect loyal to the government of Jehovah, was to gather a host who should fight for the right, and maintain a continual warfare against Satan and all his emissaries. In due time Jesus came, proclaiming to all who would enlist under the banner of the cross, leaving all connection with the rebellious party, and taking the oath of allegiance to the Prince of Peace, a final, glorious and eternal triumph. Many have chosen the loyal Captain for their leader, and for many centuries the battle has been progressing. So antagonistic are these parties that the conflict between them is fierce; ofttimes there is a mighty battle, and then there are constant skirmishes going on; both of the Generals-in-chief are very active in urging their armies on to action; both have much skill, and neither seem ever to have entertained the idea that they should easily give up the struggle; both parties have had many victories, also many defeats. Those composing the army of Christ seem to be more confident of success than those under Satan; and well they may feel thus, for their leader has given them demonstrable proof of his power and ability to lead them on to sure and eternal victory; so that every one who really becomes a soldier of Christ becomes possessed of courage to fight and endure, which those on the other side cannot have to the same degree, as their leader has never given them such proofs of his greatness.

There is great necessity for Christ's soldiers being able to endure hardness; the character of their warfare imperatively demands it. The nature of their armor was spoken of, where it was obtained, and of what it consists; also what kind of a life the christian warrior must live. Said the speaker, We are out recruiting for the army of the Lord. We feel that we have had orders from the Head of the War Department so to do. He spoke of the great inducements offered by the Lord himself to all who would enlist in his army—a hundred fold in this world, and in that to come life everlasting. And there are no conscripts in this army; all are volunteers. It is a blessed thought that none are rejected on account of physical disability; all who have a mind so to do may come and receive the reward and share the victory, if they will comply with the conditions. The time when victory will be declared is near; the contest is almost over; soon the banner of peace will be unfurled and wave in triumph over earth, where so long the scenes of conflict have been witnessed. All who have a part in the grand struggle and share in the glorious triumph must enlist soon or forever lose their chance. Come, leave the ranks of those who are being led on by Satan to destruction, and join those of the great Conqueror who is soon coming to reign.

At the close of the discourse several followed up the train of thought which the speaker had introduced, declaring their joy that they ever had opportunity to enlist in so good a cause, and their determination to continue faithful, loyal subjects to their Captain, Jesus. One spoke of this being a war from which there was no discharge; we must continue for life, or lose all part in the victory which will crown its close. Another, taking up this idea, rejoiced that we had a Captain who was willing to retain such unprofitable soldiers as we often proved ourselves to be; to keep us in the service, and to bear with us in all our short-comings, gently and surely leading us on by words of encouragement, and when through weakness we falter, and are almost ready to fall, putting underneath and around us his everlasting arms of love and strength to hold us up and bear us onward.

One, in allusion to the furloughs which soldiers sometimes obtain, said that the Christian soldier had no furloughs given him; sometimes he takes them of his own accord, but he does this at an exceeding risk, for should the time come for the final victory to be declared and the full reward given, while he is attending to something beside his calling and profession, what hope could he have for a share? and though the Lord does receive those again who, having left the ranks for awhile, with deep penitence and full purpose of heart do return, it is much safer for ourselves and more honorable to the Master to be always found at our post.

A Bro. Avery, who has of late found his way to our town, our meetings and our hearts, told an interesting bit of his own experience in regard to war. He was a professed follower of Jesus, believing that it was wrong for such to use carnal weapons; but being somewhat off his guard, in a moment of temptation he joined the ranks of those who at present are fighting in defense of the Federal government. But soon his heart was filled with bitter sorrow for the step he had taken, and his earnest desire was that he might be kept from being instrumental in taking the life of his fellow man. On arriving at the scene of conflict, he was selected to be one of twelve to go out on a little skirmish with the enemy. His feelings could be imagined better than he could describe them. His prayer was heard, and his desire granted. Almost immediately a ball from the enemy entered his body, and the cry went around, "Avery has fallen!" The surgeon came and said to him, "If you have any thing to say, say it quick, for you have but a brief time to live." Said he, "I have nothing to say, only that I die with the sweet consciousness that my hands have not been imbrued in the blood of my fellow men." But his work as a Christian soldier was not done. He recovered from his wound, and to-day stands with his armor on, waiting to fight at the bidding of his Master, Jesus.

May this be the position of all who have or would engage in the "Holy war." May they go to the great Armory and become fully equipped for the fiercest battle, and go forth strong in the Lord and in the power of his might, that when the roll of those whom the mighty Conqueror shall own as his valiant soldiers in the day of final accounts shall be called, their names shall be among those who shall experience the glad change from toil to reward, from ceaseless conflict to everlasting rest;—those who, when the white-winged dove of peace shall extend those wings over a world all free from discord and conflict, shall repose securely beneath their shadow.

THEOLOGY vs. THE BIBLE.

BRO. GRANT:—A few days since, I heard a minister of the gospel, while discoursing to an intelligent audience, say that death should not be looked upon as an enemy, but as a friend,—that death comes to the saint as a friend. Now I do not know how to reconcile such preaching with the inspired word. St. Paul says in the fifteenth chapter of 2nd Cor., twenty-sixth verse, "The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death;" but the preacher says death is a friend. Which is right, Paul or the preacher?

He also said, speaking in reference to the death of a young person of our town, and who was a member of the church, that he (the young man) was not dead, but had just begun to live. Here I was in trouble again, for Paul says in this same fifteenth chap., third verse, that Christ died for our sins, and that he rose again the third day; and in the twenty-second verse says, "For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive." Twenty-third verse, "But every man in his own order; Christ the first fruits, afterward they that are Christ's at his coming."

I fail to see how the saints can be said to be made alive at Christ's coming, if they are now in the presence of God and angels, and are enjoying all the bliss and favor promised in the blessed Bible. Yours in hope of eternal life through Christ's death,

QUOTATIONS FROM THE POETS.

THE BIBLE.

Most wondrous book! bright candle of the Lord!
Star of eternity! the only star
By which the bark of man could navigate
The sea of life, and gain the coast of bliss
Securely; only star which rose on Time,
And, on its dark and troubled billows, still
As generation, drifting swiftly by,
Succeeded generation, threw a ray
Of Heaven's own light, and to the hills of God,
The everlasting hills, pointed the sinner's eye!

Time's treasure! and the wisdom of the wise.

Be thou my star in reason's night,
Be thou my rock in danger's fright,
Be thou my guide 'mid passion's way,
My moon by night—my sun by day.
—Milman.

Thou art mine,
Mine, to tell me whence I came;
Mine, to teach me what I am;
Mine, to chide me when I rove;
Mine, to show a Savior's love;
Mine to tell of joys above,
And the rebel sinner's doom:
Oh! thou precious book divine,
Priceless treasure! thou art mine!

Thou truest friend man ever knew,
Thy constancy I've tried;
When all were false, I've found thee true,
My counsellor and guide.

Let all the heathen writers join
To form one perfect book;
Great God, if once compared with thine,
How mean their writings look!
Not the most perfect rules they give,
Could show one sin forgiven,
Nor lead a step beyond the grave;
But thine conducts to heaven.

That lamp
Which God threw from his palace down to earth,
To guide his wandering children home.

Marked with the seal of high divinity,
On every leaf bedewed with drops of love
Divine, and with the eternal heraldry
And signature of God Almighty stamped
From first to last. —Pollok.

This Book unfolds Jehovah's mind,
This Voice salutes in accents kind,
This Sun renews and warms the soul,
This Sword both wounds and makes us whole,
This Letter shows our sins forgiven,
This Guide conducts us safe to heaven,
This Charter has been sealed with blood,
This Volume is the Word of God.

Read the Bible: it will point you
To bright scenes of bliss on high,
Where there's rest for all the weary,
And our loved ones never die.

Holy Bible! thou wilt cheer me,
When I lay me down to die.

Whence, but from heaven, could men unskilled in arts
In several ages born, in several parts,
Weave such agreeing truths? or how, or why,
Should all conspire to cheat us with a lie?
Unasked their pains, ungrateful their advice,
Starving their gain, and martyrdom their price.

If on the book itself we cast our view,
Concurrent heathens prove the story true;
The doctrines, miracles, which must convince,
For heaven in them appeals to human sense;
And though they prove not, they confirm the cause,

Commanding words! whose force is still the same
As the first fiat that produced our frame.

The blessed staff of hoary age,
The guide of early youth.

GOD'S CARE.

"Casting all your care upon him, for he careth for you."—1 PETER 5: 7.

Happy, indeed, is that man or woman who has learned to obey the above command; for who that has lived sufficient years to understand this portion of inspiration has not been weighed down with care, heavy, oppressive care? The rich experience it; the poor are pressed with it, as they anxiously inquire what they shall eat, and wherewithal be clothed. The learned and the unlearned, the noble and ignoble, the religious and irreligious, all classes and conditions of mortals are subject to this unwelcome intruder upon human happiness, who will often so far trespass upon the demand of "nature's sweet restorer" as to bar her from the couch until "meek-eyed morn" glances from the Orient.

But is there no way to dispossess ourselves of this unwelcome guest? Yes, our beneficent Creator has provided "a balm for every wound." He suffers earth no "sorrow that heaven cannot heal." Some try to dilute their care-stricken hearts with human sympathy. This may afford a momentary relief, but still the load remains. The fact is, no fellow being, be their motive never so magnanimous can, if they would, take this load upon them, and indeed what friend has not enough of his own and a surplus even, without receiving an additional burden from us? Then why not come and obey our heavenly Father at once and cast our care on him? He is abundantly able to bear it, be it ever so huge and heavy, without the least inconvenience.

Says the reverential, trembling soul, I would not limit his power, I know he is able, but will he? Will the Maker and Governor of this mighty universe concern himself about so trivial a thing as my anxiety of mind? I so weak, so unworthy?

Suffer me to ask a question. Does an all-wise and beneficent Creator think less of your mental anxiety than of the hairs of your head, or of the little sparrow whose value is only half a farthing? And he assures us these things are noticeable with him. Matt. 10: 30.

Again, does God invite the worthy and powerful only to cast their care upon him? If so, you and I might never dare to obey this command.

But for whom does the good Shepherd take the most pains? For the strong and robust, or the weak and puny? Which will he be most likely to take in his arms and carry in his bosom? Says one, my care has nearly prostrated my physical system, and reason says I must cast it off. Dear soul, what better disposition can you make of it than to lay it upon Him who so kindly offers to take it?

The reason God assigns for our casting our care upon him is inexpressibly touching. Hear it, "HE CARES FOR YOU!" Blessed thought! How it melts my very being to think Infinite Majesty cares for you, for me—the very weakest that look to him.

Young convert, do you think Jesus cares for you? Come, then, on your knees and tell him all your heart's cares and sorrows. Yes, tell him all, and implore him to take and dispose of your load to his glory. Do not be afraid to trust him. He knows how to take care of it. Should you acquaint earthly friends they might report to your injury; but this Friend never betrays confidence. No. In his infinite bosom all is safe. Those who have never appropriated this privilege can not realize what a peaceful comfort is imparted by its experience.

REFLECTION.

As we look back on our past lives, we regret many a bargain we have made and many a step we have taken. Here we went too fast, and there too slow. One day we lost by our folly, and the next by our pride and extravagance. But there is one thing we are never sorry for. Let us live as long as we may, we never mourn over a correct and virtuous life. When pillowed for the night, we have no reproaches of conscience for a good deed or a kind suggestion. When the world has no attractions for us; when its prospects and its glories are fading from our gaze, and the visions of an eternal state are bursting upon us, it is then we love to think of an honest and upright life.

Who, with the hour of death in view, would ever perform a wicked act? Who, with the second coming of Christ in view, would commit a wicked act? One hour of serious reflection will unfit us for any vicious society or unholy career.

How strange it is that, amid the dying and the dead, the immediate coming of Christ, mankind will so far forget themselves and their Creator, as to serve a career of folly and crime, when the next breath of disease may sweep them to destruction. C. M. SWETT.

CORRECTING CHILDREN.

Not long ago an editor in the northern part of the State of New York told his son, about eleven years old, that he would whip him in the course of a few hours, and locked him in an upper room until he had leisure to do so. When the boy heard the father coming, he became so alarmed that he jumped out of the window and broke his neck.

About a year ago a mother punished her little daughter, of eight years, by shutting her up in a dark closet; the child became so frightened that convulsions were induced, which resulted in death. In another case of a similar character, the result was still more calamitous, for the child became epileptic, and so remained for a long life afterward.

The object of parental correction should be the ultimate good of the child; and to make it effective,

1. The character of the punishment should be according to the disposition and temperament of the child.

2. The punishment should be in proportion to the nature of the offence.

3. The punishment should be inflicted with the utmost self-possession; for if done in a towering passion it takes the character of revenge; the child sees it and resists it with defiance, stubbornness, or with a feeling of being the injured or oppressed party.

4. Punishment should never be threatened, for one of two results, both unfortunate, are certain: the promise will not be kept and the child loses confidence in parental assertions; or the child's mind, dwelling upon what is expected, suffers a lengthened torture, imagination always aggravating the severity of the chastisement, and the child gradually learns to startle at every event which is at all likely to usher in the correction, and the foundation is laid for that fearfulness of the future which is the bane of all human happiness; and in some cases the severity of the expected suffering looms up so largely under the influence of a distempered imagination, that, as in the case of the editor's child, suicide is considered the lesser evil. It is nothing less than a savage barbarity for any parent to hold the mind of a child in a state of terrorism for a single hour, let alone for days and weeks.

5. Never correct a child by scolding, admonition, or castigation in the presence of any other person whatever. It is an attack on its self-esteem which provokes resistance and passion. Let grown persons recollect how ill they bear even deserved reproof in the presence of others.

6. Never punish a child twice for any offence; it is a great injustice, a relic of barbarism, and always either discourages or hardens. Make each settlement final in itself, and don't be forever harping on what is past.

7. Punishment should not be inflicted in any case without placing clearly before the child's mind the nature of the aggravation, and that the sole design of the chastisement or reproof is his present and future welfare.

8. In all cases where punishment is decided upon, it should be prompt, or deferred, according to the degree of aggravation or palpable wrong. It is almost always better to defer; but in such cases threaten nothing, say nothing, do nothing which indicates in the slightest degree that any thing is to come; and when the time does come, do not alarm the child with any show of preparation, but gradually and affectionately bring up the whole matter; place it in its true, just, and clear light, and act accordingly; and always, as much as possible, appeal to the child's conscience, to its sense of right, to its magnanimity, to its benevolence toward men, and its gratitude toward God.—Hall's Journal of Health.

FRUIT GARDEN.

Blackberries and Raspberries.—Tie up the new growth to stakes or the trellis. Keep down superfluous shoots, saving only the strongest.

Currants.—By rubbing out straggling shoots much pruning may be avoided. Give the bushes frequent hoeing, and an occasional watering with slops or liquid manure will improve the size of the fruit. It often pays better to market the green fruit than to wait until it is ripe.

Gooseberries.—Give the same treatment as currants. If mildew appears, try Mr. Hite's remedy: a quart of good ashes in a pailful of water as hot as the hand can bear, the mixture thrown with a syringe so as to wet both sides of the foliage.

Grapes.—The new growth, whether of young or old vines, cuttings or layers, is to be kept carefully tied up. Young vines should not be allowed to overbear; one or two bunches to the shoot will be enough. Look out for rose bugs and caterpillars, and hand-pick them.

Pears.—Shorten branches tending to make too much wood. Rub out superfluous shoots. Thin the fruit, especially the large varieties. If slugs appear, sprinkle air slacked lime upon them from a bag fastened to a pole. Dwarfs set this spring will be injured if they are allowed to bear.

Strawberries.—If it is wished to multiply a variety, let the runners go, but remove them from beds planted for fruiting. Keep clear of weeds. If the winter's mulch is not left on, it will be well to cover the beds with something to keep the fruit clean. Straw run through a cutting machine answers a good purpose, but tan or saw dust may be used. If fruit is sent to market, have the boxes of the same quality at top and bottom. It is well to assort the fruit and make two qualities.—Amer. Agriculturist.

DISINFECTING AGENTS.—Now that warm weather is approaching, our citizens should thoroughly cleanse their premises, rendering them as pure and healthy as possible. There are a number of disinfecting agents which will be found efficacious in removing offensive smells from damp, mouldy cellars, yards, pools of stagnant water, decaying vegetable matter, etc. Either of the following will answer the purpose, while they cost but a trifle.

1. One pint of the liquor of chloride of zinc, in one pailful of water, and one pound of chloride of lime in another pailful of water. This is perhaps the most effective of anything that can be used, and when thrown upon decayed vegetable matter of any description, will destroy all offensive odors.

2. Three or four pounds of sulphate of iron (copperas) dissolved in a pailful of water will, in many cases, be sufficient to remove all offensive odors.

3. Chloride of lime is better to scatter about damp places, in yards, in damp cellars, and upon heaps of filth.

"This is for your health."—Paul.

SCROFULA.

It is supposed by some that scrofula is peculiar to the swine, and as proof of this, it is said that the liver of these animals is sometimes diseased. If a diseased liver is evidence of scrofula, then it is in the ox and cow more than two to one. I have asked a large number of butchers the question, "Do you not find more than two livers of beef cattle diseased, where you find one of the swine?" and they have answered, without an exception, in the affirmative. If, then, a diseased or ulcerated liver proves the existence of scrofula, those who drink milk from the cow which has an ulcerated liver, drink scrofula.

Dr. Warren, in his great medical work, gives some of the greatest medical authority, which he admits is correct, that scrofula does not exist in the brute creation, but that it is confined to the family of man. They decide that scrofula is syphilis filtered through the blood of many generations. J. S. WHITE.

HEALTH SUGGESTIONS.

BY DR. J. H. HANAFORD.

Health is that condition of the human system in which all its powers act in perfect harmony, tending to the production of the same result, as they did before "sin entered the world, and death by sin." This is the normal state of man. In such a condition, as man came from the hands of the Creator, breathing, the use of the muscles, eating, drinking, digestion, sleeping, the circulation of the blood, etc., are not only not unpleasant, but decidedly pleasant. Dyspepsia, gout, and drunkenness have no possible connection with "eating and drinking to the glory of God." Rheumatisms and fevers never result from keeping the "body under" as St. Paul would do.

Disease, therefore, is the absence of health and not a positive condition, just as weakness is the absence of strength, fatigue the absence of rest, or as hunger results from an insufficient supply of food.

If we would be happy physically, escaping sickness, pain, weakness and the untold miseries of the sick-room, as far as mortals may, inheriting tendencies to disease always aggravated by sin, we have simply to obey God's laws on which health and vigor depend, as carefully as we would regard his moral laws, when we would be holy and happy. If effects follow in the direct line of causation, we may as confidently expect a degree of health and vigor, resulting from an entire obedience to the laws of our physical being, as we hope for pardon when, in the exercise of penitence and faith, we seek it through the intercessions of the Redeemer. Obedience to all of God's laws is always safe, while disobedience is always unsafe, involving the idea of a penalty.

If these views are correct, many prevalent customs strangely conflict with the dictates of common sense. For example, those who frequent the sick room, or are exposed to contagious diseases, far oftener than otherwise pursue a course directly calculated to increase danger. Among these customs are taking ardent spirits, or resorting to the use of tobacco, in some form, as preventives. Now, if the use of either of these articles promotes health, increasing strength and vigor, there is some propriety in their use. But it is geneally admitted that both tend directly to debilitate, to destroy health and invite disease, since the intemperate, in the use of these articles, enjoy less health and vigor, other things being equal, than those who are free from these habits. Experience and observation teach important lessons in these respects. If drunkards, smokers, etc., live longer than others, if they enjoy better health than others, such habits are to be encouraged; and if otherwise, their results must prove unfavorable. It is folly, a folly based on unusual ignorance, to suppose that the fumes of tobacco can ever purify the air of the sick room, rendering infection less probable. If persons fear the infectious particles of matter, supposed to float in the air of the sick-room, it would be far safer for themselves, and promotive of the comfort and health of the patient, to allow such particles to escape by a change of air, a ventilation of the room. Such diseases are contracted far oftener from causes existing in the human system, from the condition of those exposed to infectious diseases, than from the causes usually so much dreaded, though, of course, there are outward causes of disease. Of one hundred persons equally exposed, only a small part ordinarily contract disease, simply because the system is not in a favorable condition to receive it, or has sufficient power and health to resist such encroachments. It is impossible to account for such exemption, only on the supposition that the recuperative powers of the body, in some cases, are sufficient to throw off the results of such exposure, before the seeds of disease, thus deposited by exposure, so to speak, are able to take root. while, with the less fortunate, disease follows its natural course.

But one of the most erroneous ideas in this connection, results from mistaking the real indications of health. This mistake has led to the expression, "Death loves a shining mark." By some it is supposed that the most healthy are the special victims and are swept away by contagious diseases, while the puny and delicate escape. This idea is based on the supposition that fleshy and ruddy persons are necessarily healthy. A more erroneous conclusion can scarcely be received. Many such persons are the over-fed, whose systems, so to speak, are vast receptacles of humors and impurities in general, which, like a magazine of powder, only needs a wandering spark to ignite the whole mass. In such, the organs of digestion are often so debilitated that they very imperfectly perform their duties, while such an unusual supply of blood, loaded with impurities, affords the most favorable conditions for inflammatory action, resulting very naturally in fevers, and particularly inflammatory fevers. Without enlarging on this point, however, it is sufficient to say that unusual fatness is as much an indication of disease as is leanness; both being an unnatural condition. The former indicates over nourishment, an over distension of the organs of the body, as an enlarged and sluggish liver doing but a part of its labor, and the latter, a defective nourishment. The one may have less apparent power, and the other more disusing tendencies.

But how shall health be promoted and disease avoided? This question cannot be answered fully in a brief article like this. It may be well to remember, however, that the removal of a disease may be effected, in some degree at least, by the removal of its cause.

If dyspepsia results from excessive eating, from the use of rich, highly spiced and over stimulating food, taken at irregular hours, particularly at bed time, the adoption of the opposite course will always favor the removal of the disease. If the use of ardent spirits produces delirium tremens, temperance will always prevent such a terrible form of disease. If filthiness of the skin produces and aggravates skin diseases, a daily wash of the whole body, cleanliness of the clothing, frequent changes and airing—no article should be worn at night that has been worn during the day—will tend to remove such forms of disease. If indolence debilitates, exercise will invigorate. If breathing impure air at night in close and unventilated sleeping rooms, fearfully engenders lung diseases, tending toward the production of that scourge of civilized society, pulmonary consumption, a free use of the pure air of heaven will aid in preventing or removing such diseases. If "colds" arise from the use of too much or too little clothing—the former enfeebling and the latter exposing one—the use of just enough clothing to promote comfort will favorably affect the health.

To understand what will promote health and prevent disease requires knowledge, and time in which to obtain it; yet such time would be far more profitably spent than many suppose. A knowledge of God's laws is always safe.—Christian Era.

THE STOMACH'S APPEAL.

The two objects of eating as to men and women are to give vigor to the body and to keep it warm; hence all food contains two principles in greater or less proportions, according to its quality—to wit, nutrition and warmth. We need nourishment all the year round, hence we must all the year round eat food which contains nourishment, that is, the flesh-forming principle; but in warm weather the food which contains the most mere fuel, should be to a certain extent curtailed, otherwise we will create too much heat within us, and that is fever, whose victims are counted by millions every year, this excess of heat, this fever, being generated by eating food which contains more warmth, more fuel, called carbon by chemists, than the season of the year requires.

To a certain extent nature regulates the demand and supply by diminishing the appetite as the warm weather approaches; but many misinterpret her endeavors, and because they find, as spring comes on, their appetites are not as vigorous as they were a few weeks earlier, begin to take alarm, think they are going to get sick, unless they can get up the appetite of kind winter; hence they begin to take Dutch gin, under the name of Schiedam schnapps; plantation bitters, or cheap whiskey, with just enough colombo root or any other bitter to give it "a trace" of bitter and rob it of the name of "rot gut;" or dirty beer, or ale, or porter, all these things tending to cheat nature into a call for more food than she requires, to impose on the stomach more labor than it can perform, hence laying the ground for summer fevers and dyspepsias, which bring death to thousands every year who might have lived to a good old age had they simply let themselves alone, and like any other dogs, or donkeys, or wild beasts, had simply given the stomach rest, and waited for an appetite. The general lessons for the spring are, eat less of carbonaceous food, such as meats, fats, oils, sirups, etc., and more of cooling articles, such as green salads, vegetables, berries, fruits, and whatever has a natural tartness or acidity, there being little or no carbon or heat in them; but they contain as much nutriment as the system requires.—Hall's Journal of Health.

CORN BREAD.

A bushel of corn contains as much nutriment as a bushel of wheat, and is five or six times less costly. But it is almost always spoiled in the Eastern States by being ground too fine. The most ignorant "contraband" in the South West can make a most delicious bread in a few minutes out of corn meal, pure water, and a little salt, baked on a hot hearthstone, or a heated hoe; this is the celebrated "hoe-cake" of the olden time. Very few persons in the East can make any kind of corn-bread without putting in soda, saleratus, or cream of tartar enough to physic an elephant; the necessity for these ingredients arises from the useless fineness of the meal, which makes it bake heavily. Chemical research has demonstrated that the most healthful and nutritious and strengthening particles of ground corn or wheat are found attached to the outer covering, which forms the "bran," and which, by some perversity, is segregated from both flour and meal. The same principle applies to the Irish potato, for there is more nutriment in the quarter of an inch attached to the skin than in the whole remainder. There is more of the element which forms our bones in the refuse bran of corn or wheat than in all the other parts together.—Dr. Hall.

REMEDY FOR SMALL POX.—Dr. Frederick W. Morris, resident physician of the Halifax Visiting Dispensary, Nova Scotia, has written a letter to the American Medical Times, in which he states that the "Sarracenia Purpurea," or Indian Cup, a native plant of Nova Scotia, is the remedy for small pox in all its forms in twelve hours after the patient has taken the medicine. That "however alarming and numerous the eruptions, or confluent and frightful they may be, the peculiar action of the medicine is such that very seldom a scar is left to tell the story of the disease." If either vaccine or variolous is washed with the infusion of the sarracenia, they are deprived of their contagious properties. So mild is the medicine to the taste, that it may be largely mixed with tea and coffee, and given to connoisseurs in these beverages to drink, without their being aware of the admixture. The medicine has been successfully tried in the hospitals of Nova Scotia, and its use will be continued.

"FOLLOW THOU ME."

My Lord and Master! gladly I follow thee
In the narrow path thou hast marked out for me,
Only in the way let me thy presence see.

I'll follow thee, though my steps are marked with pain;
If thou but whisper, my duty is made plain;

I'll follow thee, should the cross be most severe,
Faith gives assurance that day makes all things clear;
Every trial will the crown of life endear.

I'll follow thee to the dark and silent tomb,
Even there the Savior dissipates the gloom,
With hope of life and Eden's endless bloom.

THE TWO WITNESSES.

"And I will give power unto my two witnesses, and they shall prophesy a thousand two hundred and threescore days, clothed in sackcloth."—Rev. 11: 3.

It is my purpose in this article to give as briefly as possible my view of the "two witnesses,"—what they are, in what nation the act of slaying them was accomplished, the date for the commencement and ending of the three days and a half period, during which time they had no life; and also to show from history the fulfillment of the events spoken in the prophecy, as having transpired in connection with that event and during that period.

Firstly, I wish to inquire who is meant by the pronoun "my" in the expression, "my two witnesses." I answer, I think it evidently refers to the person with whom this revelation originated, namely, God the Father. For proof, I will quote the first clause of Rev. 1: 1;—"The revelation of Jesus Christ, which God gave unto him." The question will now arise, who or what are God's two witnesses?

God saw from the beginning that it would be necessary for him to convey some witness to the children of men that he is the true God; inasmuch as he foresaw that men would in process of time invent to themselves gods to worship, instead of worshiping him the only true God. Hence we find him saying through his prophet, concerning those who worshiped strange gods (Isa. 41: 21–23),—"Produce your cause, saith the Lord; bring forth your strong reasons, saith the king of Jacob. Let them bring them forth, and show us what shall happen: let them show the former things, what they be, that we may consider them, and know the latter end of them; or declare us things for to come. Show the things that are to come hereafter, that we mry know that ye are gods: yea, do good, or do evil, that we may be dismayed, and behold it together."

It will be seen from this quotation that God recognizes this principle: if those heathen gods, or those who worshiped them, could proclaim beforehand things that were to come to pass, it would be a witness that they were true gods. On this same principle he conveys or bears witness to the children of men that he is the true God. Hear him (Isa. 42: 8, 9),—"I am the Lord; that is my name: and my glory will I not give to another, neither my praise to graven images. Behold, the former things are come to pass, and new things do I declare: before they spring forth I tell you of them." From this last quotation I think it will appear that God wishes the children of men to accept as a witness that he is the only true God, the declarations he has made concerning past and future events; because they all come to pass in harmony with what he has said in his word. Hence the word of God (the Bible) must be God's special witness to the children of men that he is the only true God. And inasmuch as his word is divided into two departments, the typical and the antitypical, the Old and New Testaments, or covenants, I understand that it is termed "two witnesses," instead of one. We also learn that the word of God is all-powerful. He has only to speak, and whatever he desires is accomplished, as found recorded in Ps. 33: 9;—"He spake, and it was done; he commanded, and it stood fast."

Concerning the "two witnesses," we also find it recorded that they were endowed with miraculous power to "smite the earth with all plagues"; which I think is positive proof that the word of God and the "two witnesses" are one and the same. It is said of these "two witnesses"—"And if any man will hurt them, fire proceedeth out of their mouth and devoureth their enemies."—5th verse. I will make one quotation to prove that the word of God does accomplish what is recorded of the "two witnesses" in the above text. God, is speaking against the false prophets of the first dispensation, who spake against his word, as presented by the true prophets, says (Jer. 5: 13, 14),—"Thus shall it be done unto them. Wherefore, thus saith the Lord God of hosts, Because ye speak this word, behold, I will make my words in thy mouth fire, and this people wood, and it shall devour them. Again, "These have power to shut heaven, that it rain not in the days of their prophecy: and have power over waters to turn them to blood, and to smite the earth with all plagues as often as they will."—6th verse. In fulfillment of this verse, we learn that God told his ancient or typical people, through Moses, that if they were obedient to the word, he would send them rain in its seasons; but if they were disobedient, he would shut up the heavens that it rain not. Deut. 11. And in process of time we find it was accomplished, as in the case of Elijah, when he told Ahab, by the word of the Lord, that it should not rain for a certain period; and it did not. See 1 Kings 17. And again, when Pharaoh would not let the Hebrews go, as God had commanded, God found it necessary to smite the Egyptians with plagues, to induce Pharaoh to let the people go; and among those plagues it is recorded their waters were turned to blood. Hence we learn that the word of God has power to turn water into blood, as it is recorded of the "two witnesses" they had power to do. One quotation on this point must suffice. Ex. 7: 16, 17;—"And thou shalt say unto him, The Lord God of the Hebrews hath sent me unto thee, saying, let my people go, that they may serve me in the wilderness: and, behold, hitherto thou wouldest not hear. Thus saith the Lord, in this thou shalt know that I am the Lord: behold, I will smite with the rod that is in my hand upon the waters which are in the river, and they shall be turned to blood."

Thus we find that all the power recorded as pertaining to the "two witnesses," was accomplished during the typical dispensation by the word of God; hence I think the Old Testament scriptures, or the word of God therein contained, must be one of God's witnesses; and if so, the word of God contained in the New Testament scriptures must constitute another of his witnesses, thus making the two. For we find in the sixteenth chap. of Rev., a symbolic record of the same class of plagues being visited upon the wicked nations of this dispensation who belie the word of God, and worship the beast and his image; and I think we shall agree that all those plagues were visited upon them in fulfillment of the word of God; thus proving the word of God and the two witnesses to be one and the same, having equal power.

I might enlarge much in presenting proof that the word of God (the Bible) is his two witnesses; but as I wish to try and make this article comparatively short, I will only make one quotation more from the words of our Savior found recorded in John 5: 37–39, which I think should settle the question beyond all doubt. "And the Father himself which hath sent me, hath borne witness of me. Ye have neither heard his voice at any time, nor seen his shape." In this verse we have the declaration of our Savior to the Jews that, although they had neither heard his Father's voice, nor seen him, yet the Father had borne witness to them of him (Jesus). The question will then arise, In what way did the Father bear witness of him? Let the thirty-eighth verse answer: "And ye have not his word abiding in you; for whom he hath sent, him ye believe not." From the language used in this verse, it is evident that if the Jews had had the word of God abiding in them, they would have known that Jesus was the Messiah. Hence we have the proof in the above two verses that the word of God is his witness to the children of men of his dealings with them.

But the Savior thought the subject might still remain somewhat dark in their minds; therefore he spoke still more plainly (39th verse),—"Search the Scriptures; for in them ye think ye have eternal life: and they are they which testify (bear witness) of me." This quotation is a plain statement of our Savior to the Jews, that God had borne witness to them of his Son through his word, the Scriptures. Therefore I think it evident that God bears witness of all things connected with his dealings with the children of men through his word; and if so, then his "two witnesses" must be his word (the Bible), the Old and New Testaments, or covenants.

I will now continue the subject by quoting the seventh verse,—"And when they (the two witnesses) shall have finished their testimony, the beast that ascendeth out of the bottomless pit shall make war against them, and shall overcome them, and kill them." As I have shown, in a former article, that the beast that ascendeth out of the bottomless pit, which was to slay the two witnesses, refers to the same nation as the one symbolized by the scarlet colored (which is also the eighth) beast of the seventeenth of Rev.; namely, the French nation, commencing about the time of the breaking out of the great revolution in A. D. 1789; it will not be necessary for me in this article to present proof that the French nation was the one that ascended out of the bottomless pit, but simply to affirm it. The point in the above text which will next claim my attention is, to show the date when the "two witnesses" were slain (trodden under foot) by the French nation. In order to do it intelligibly, it will be necessary for me to refer briefly to the history of the condition of France at and prior to the breaking out of the revolution. But before proceeding in that direction, inasmuch as it is the generally received opinion that the date when the "two witnesses" were slain was in A. D. 1793, at the denial of the existence of the Supreme Being by a decree of the French nation; I wish to touch briefly upon that point.

The act of denying the existence of the Supreme Being, by the issuing of the decree to that effect by the French, could not have been what is meant by the slaying of the "two witnesses," for the following reasons:

First. God cannot himself be his own two witnesses.

Again. If the denial of the existence of God by the French was what is meant by the slaying of the two witnesses, then the reversal of that decree, declaring that the French nation do believe in the existence of God, would be the revival of the two witnesses to life. And universal history agrees in saying that the first decree (denying the existence of God) was issued in Nov., A. D. 1793, and the following year, 1794, the first decree was revoked, and another decree issued by the government, declaring that the French nation do believe in the existence of the Supreme Being. Hence it will be seen that there were only seven months during which the French nation, according to their decrees, did not believe in the existence of God. But the "two witnesses" were to be without life for "three days and an half" (three and an half years).

Again. If the two witnesses represent the word of God, the Bible, (and I sincerely believe that they do), I cannot think that the date of the denial of the existence of the Supreme Being, in A. D. 1793, can be recognized as the date for the commencement of the three days and an half period, for another important reason. Universal history assures us that in A. D. 1794, in the autumn of the year; the Jacobin party was overthrown, and the Reign of Terror ended; and it was during the reign of the Jacobin party that all those events spoken of in the prophecy as having transpired during the three days and an half period were accomplished. And again, within ten days after the fall of Robespierre (in the autumn of the year 1794), which marked the end of the Reign of Terror, and also the overthrow of the Jacobin party, ten thousand persons were liberated from the prisons, who had been confined there at the instance of the Jacobin party; and within a short time the laws were relaxed against the emigrants and priests, who returned in great numbers to France, and an edict was issued permitting them to exercise religious worship; all of which events go to prove that the three days and an half must have ended as early as the autumn of A. D. 1794; and if so, then we cannot date their commencement in the autumn of A. D. 1793 (at the issuing of the decree denying the existence of God); for it will be seen that it would leave but one year for the two witnesses to remain dead.

Having said thus much upon this point, I will now refer to the history of the condition of France for some time prior to and at the commencement of the revolution. For several centuries before the commencement of the revolution, it is probable there was a larger proportion of the French people in more abject suffering and misery on account of the oppression of the minority, than of any other nation since its existence as such. The minority consisted of about one twentieth of the population, who were the aristocracy of the nation; members of the government, the Dukes or landed proprietors, and the bishops and priests of the Catholic church; all which officials were professedly Roman Catholics. Nineteen-twentieths of the population consisted of the poor of all classes of workmen, women and children, who were both Catholic and Protestant, until we come down into the last century before the breaking out of the Revolution, when the Protestants were nearly all driven away, or destroyed.

France, in the seventeenth century, contained between two and three million Protestants. These were persecuted with the utmost rigor, to cause them to renounce their faith. Millions during a few centuries perished by fire, the gallows, and the wheel. The brutal soldiery, free from all restraints, committed every conceivable excess. They scourged little children in the presence of their parents, that the shrieks of agony of the child might induce the parents to abjure their faith. They violated the modesty of women and girls, and mangled their bodies with the lash. They tortured, mutilated, and disfigured. Michelet, a French writer, when comparing the times of this persecution with the revolutionary Reign of Terror, says: "What are the twelve thousand men guillotined, of the one, to the millions of men butchered, hung, broken on the wheel—to that pyramid of burning stakes—to those masses of burnt flesh, which the other piled up to heaven?"

On the other hand, the poor Catholic was a mere slave to the lords of the land, and of the most degraded type. All the trades and professions were put up for sale. Even the humble callings of making wigs, of weighing coal, of selling pork, were esteemed privileges, and were sold at a high price. There was hardly any thing a man could do which he was not compelled to buy the privilege of doing. An army of two hundred thousand tax-gatherers devoured everything. To extort substance from the starving people, the most cruel expedients were adopted. All the energies of galleys, gibbets, dungeons and racks were called into requisition. When the corn was all absorbed, the cattle were taken. The ground, exhausted for want of manure, became sterile. Men, women and children yoked themselves to the plough. Deserts extended, the population died off, and beautiful France was becoming but a place of graves. The people paid taxes and feudal service to the nobles, tithes to the clergy, and imposts to the king.

The tax-gatherers would be sent one year to a district to collect one million of francs, perhaps the next year it would be two millions; so that the people never knew how much would be taken. No language (says the historian) can describe the dismay in the humble homes of the peasants when these cormorants, armed with despotic power, darkened their doors. The seed-corn was taken, the cow was driven off, the pig was taken from the pen. Mothers pleaded with tears that food might be left for their children; but the sheriff, inured to scenes of misery, had a heart of rock; and fearful was the vengeance he could wreak upon any one who displeased him. So excessive was the burden of taxation, that it has been estimated, says the historian, that if a peasant with his wife and children cultivated forty acres of land, the proceeds of which at sixteen dollars per acre amounted to six hundred and forty dollars, the king, the duke and the church took six hundred of this, leaving but forty dollars for the support of the laborers.

I might continue to present evidence that this same intolerable bondage spread through all the minutiæ of social life, but space will not admit. Suffice it to say that it was impossible, under the existing state of things, but that the masses of the people should be in the lowest state of ignorance and indigence. I should add, however, that France was dotted with massive stone prisons, dungeons, and vaults, into which any one was thrust who might displease any of the courtiers in any matter. They were incarcerated without any ceremony, never again to behold the light of the sun. Millions were thus entombed in the few centuries prior to the Revolution, and their shrieks of despair (says the historian), smothered by the walls of stone and doors of iron, reached only the ear of God.

Eloquently, in view of the sufferings of those times, Michelet represents the people as exclaiming, "Holy, holy Revolution, how slowly dost thou come! I, who have waited for thee a thousand years in the furrows of the middle ages, what! must I wait still longer? Oh, how slowly time passes! Oh, how have I counted the hours! Wilt thou never arrive?"

One quotation more, and I will not prolong on this point. "In the year 1785, Thomas Jefferson wrote from Paris to Mrs. Trist, of Philadelphia, as follows: 'Of twenty millions of people supposed to be in France, I am of opinion that there are nineteen millions more wretched, more accursed in every circumstance of human existence, than the most conspicuously wretched individual of the whole United States.'"—Abbott's History of the Revolution, p. 52.

OUR SAVIOR.

The history of our Savior, his death and sufferings, is of deep interest to me, more so than any other part of holy writ. I have often thought if I could have stood by and viewed with the apostles his mysterious and glorious ascension into heaven, I should have been completely happy. Methinks when our Savior was in the garden of Gethsemane, praying that if it were possible the hour might pass from him, he was then drinking to the dregs the cup of bitterness; but when he ascended and sat on the right hand of God, his joy was full.

Our Savior being born in a stable, and cradled in a manger, did not make him the less good and glorious. The humbleness of his birth adds a new charm rather than otherwise, for the wise men came and worshiped him, being guided by the star in the east, till it came and stood over where the young child lay.

How mysterious, how wonderful, is every incident connected with the history of our Savior, from his birth to his ascension. Angels came and ministered unto him after he was tempted. An angel appeared unto him from heaven, and strengthened him in the garden of Gethsemane, when his sweat became as great drops of blood falling to the ground, being in an agony; yet the spirit remained submissive and obedient in all this great trial; for he says, "Not my will, but Thine be done!"

THE COMING OF CHRIST.

Spring has again returned and all nature seems enlivened and vivified by its warm and genial breath. And just now we are reminded of the parable of the fig-tree; and although that tree is not a native of our climate, yet we see other trees putting forth their tender leaves, plainly teaching us that summer is near.

But the bursting bud, the expanding leaf, the opening flower, no more indicate to us that summer is near, than do the signs of the times, that our precious Christ will soon come to redeem his children from death, and to ransom them from the power of the grave. And when we trace the prophecies down to the end of time, as revealed in the Scriptures, and see how many of them have been and how few remain to be fulfilled, it does appear to us that the sign of the Son of man is nearly due, and that soon all the tribes of the earth will mourn when they see the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory. When, as incredible as it may seem to some minds, all that are in the graves shall hear his voice and come forth. When, as saith the Revelator, every eye shall see him, and they also which pierced him; and although his enemies may wish on awakening that the grave might hide them from the penetrating gaze of Him that sitteth on the throne, yet arise they must, and come to judgment; for, saith the inspired apostle, "We shall all stand before the judgment-seat of Christ." "For it is written, As I live, saith the Lord, every knee shall bow to me and every tongue shall confess to God, so then every one of us shall give an account of himself to God."

But, oh! how few believe the word written by inspiration's truthful pen, and how many are striving to climb up some other way, rather than come to the knowledge of the truth. We behold a class who are vainly dreaming of a future life of progression and happiness independent of God's way of salvation through Jesus, which, alas! they will never find,"

"Not even in heaven's morning light."

And we see many others so deeply engaged in the world and its vain pursuits, that they heed not the warnings of God's faithful servants, and are listlessly indifferent to the wooings of that gentle Spirit that is ever saying, Come, and regardless of the entreaties of mercy, stand aloof from the loving Savior, seeing no form, nor comeliness, nor beauty in him, that they should desire him, and consequently will be unprepared to meet him when he comes.

Oh! it is sad, and indeed, that any should perish when the way to life is so accessible, that whosoever will come may come and partake of its waters freely. "Wherefore, beloved, seeing ye look for such things, be diligent, that ye may be found of him in peace, without spot and blameless."

MY SAVIOR IS PRECIOUS.

My Savior is precious when tempests arise;
He hears and he saves when the mariner cries;
He steadies my bark when the high billows roll,
And every rude wind does my Savior control.

My Savior is precious when trials are near;
He soothes by his words, that dispel every fear;
He brings forth my righteousness plain as the light,
And foes cannot harm me, though dark be the night.

My Savior is precious, though rough be the way;
His hand leads me on, and he still is my stay;
He guideth my feet in the way they should go,
And makes me the paths of his wisdom to know.

My Savior is precious; when friends me forsake,
He ever my cause in his own hands will take;
He will not desert me, my dear blessed Friend,
But always be with me, e'en unto the end.

My Savior is precious; the home of his love
Has placed my affections on mansions above;
O Jesus, Redeemer, I trust in thy word,
And hope to be with thee forever, my Lord.

"THIS CUP."

"O, my Father, if it be possible, let this cup pass from me."—MATT. 26: 39.

BRO. GRANT:—I think there is a great misunderstanding as to what Jesus prayed might pass from him. The common view once made me almost an infidel. If Jesus came to die for sinners, and when he came near the time for his death he shrank from it, it seemed to me that he was less noble minded than many who had lived before him, and many who have lived since. And if the popular view be correct, how shall we reconcile—"I have a baptism to be baptized with, and how am I straitened until it be accomplished?"—Luke 12: 50. I think that Heb. 5: 7 explains what he prayed for:—"Who in the days of his flesh, when he had offered up prayers and supplications, with strong crying and tears unto him that was able to save him from death, and was heard in that he feared." We have no account of his ever praying thus except in the garden.

When I was studying at Andover, after much prayer I think I understood what Christ prayed for. When the sins of the world were laid upon him, the weight was so great that he sweat, as it were, great drops of blood. Luke 22: 44. Such was his agony, that he feared he should die in the garden, and never have the privilege of going to the cross. If that had been the case, then the Savior would not have been adequate to his work, and no one who had died in the faith could ever have been raised, nor any one after him. The devil would have had the world, and the whole plan of salvation been frustrated. Having such a view before him, no wonder the blessed Jesus was in an agony; no wonder he prayed earnestly. He prayed to be saved from death in the garden, that he might cheerfully go to the cross. He prayed earnestly, and he was heard in that he prayed. "And there appeared an angel unto him, from heaven, strengthening him."—Luke 22: 43.

I cannot express how much more I loved Jesus when I saw this. He longed to die on the cross for me. I mentioned my new light to a brother student in the seminary, and he informed me that this was the view Professor Finney took of the prayer. I believe this is right; and when one gets this view clearly, he will see a loveliness in Jesus he never saw before, and which he cannot see by the popular view. Yours hoping soon to see that Savior, and by him be made immortal.

For the World's Crisis.

We thus see what may be the final destiny of a soul, taking even their view of its nature, for though we should grant the nature of its essence as claimed by some, still it remains to be shown that it has life in itself; for if it be an essence at all, it must be something, and if any thing, it is a creation. If a created thing, it was and is and always will be dependent upon its Creator for life, and if its life be taken away it will be a dead thing, and of no use to itself or any one else. Should it be said that it is nothing and never had a creation, then it follows that it is either derived from the Deity and may be re-absorbed and lost in Deity, else it is life itself, and if life, must be a portion either of created life, or of that "eternal life which was with God from the beginning." If so, then it has only been individualized, and the same power that produced, may also lose its individuality, by being returned to its primary state or condition.

One of three things must necessarily be true: The soul is either a derivation, creation or propagation. We have already shown, if derived, how it may, like a drop of water, be returned to the fountain, lose itself in the source from whence it came; and if created, how it may be destroyed; and if it be propagated from parent to child by the laws of procreation, as clearly taught in the word of the Lord, then it is born of the flesh, and is mortal and may die. For Christ said, "That which is born of the flesh is flesh,"—is mortal, corruptible, perishable. Hence the necessity of a renewal, that the soul,—either material or immaterial, makes no difference,—may be impregnated with the nature of the immortal life.

The fallacy of the argument advanced by those who have adopted and hold the platonic idea of the soul's nature, may be found in the oft repeated statement that mind and spirit are inseparable, and that the former is always a necessary accompaniment of the latter. If this were true, then should we invariably find mind wherever we find life; for there can be no life where there is no spirit, and the manifestation of mind should always be in proportion to the power and degree of life. But so far is this from being correct, the reverse is frequently met with.

Others fall a step short of this and take the position that spirit beings can only possess and manifest mind; they only can think and reason. But this like the former is accompanied with a dilemma, for how then shall the animal being think and reason unless animals be double-souled, the one rational and the other animal, the one situated in the cerebrum and the other in the cerebellum, the front and hinder or larger and lesser portions of the brain,—and to this extremity have many of the advocates of this system been driven, as has been proven by myself when in debate with them upon this subject.

But the difficulty stops not here; for prove the powers of thought and reason for the rational soul, on the ground of its spiritual and immaterial nature, and you unavoidably prove the same thing for the animal soul; consequently if the rational soul be immortal by virtue of its nature, so then must the animal soul be also; otherwise the soul of man cannot be immortal on the predicate of its nature; for Paul declares on the credibility of the Spirit that the Adamic man is an animal creation.

But, once more, and we leave, for the present, this part of our subject. It is further claimed on the same hypothesis of the inherent power of thought in spirit, and the inability of matter to think, that when man had been "formed dust of the ground," then God breathed a spirit-man into the dust-man, in order to make the latter act and think. If by this spirit, a portion of the Deity was meant, then all argument and research on this question were useless; for God cannot be divided, and if himself be in us originating all our thoughts, coining all our words, and instigating all our actions, then man's moral agency and accountability is an idle dream, and his fall and redemption a fable and a fiction; for in such case, what Pope said would be true, perhaps, beyond his intended application of

—"WHATEVER IS, IS RIGHT."

But if by this a CREATED spirit is meant, as I apprehend, then may there be a fallacy. That inanimate matter can think, I do not believe. That a living, organized material man cannot think, I do not know. That by putting into such a material inanimate man, a created spirit, life, thought and action would result, remains to be proved, for I have no better, nay, not so good, evidence that such a spirit inherently possesses such power, than I have that a created, inanimate material man does, and there is no positive testimony that either the one or the other has it.

Aside from the will of the Creater, one creation is no better than another, and no created thing, material or immaterial, has in and of itself the power of thought, or locomotion, for these powers inhere in God alone.

PROPHECIES OF DANIEL AND JOHN.

MR. GRANT:—Dear Sir:—After having studied the prophecies of Daniel and the Book of Revelation, for a number of years, and carefully examined the history of the times to which those books refer, I feel disposed to make known to the public the result of my investigations. And, because your paper has already acquired an extensive circulation among such Bible students as believe that there is truth in these books which deserve a candid investigation, I will, if you please, make it the medium of communication with the public. On some points I shall not differ from the received opinions of the majority of Bible students, on others I find myself in the minority, while in a few instances I stand, so far as I have been able to learn, alone. I ask therefore, the candid attention of your readers to the views which may be stated, and the arguments adduced to confirm the positions taken.

For the sake of giving unity to the subject, we will begin by considering

NEBUCHADNEZZAR'S DREAM.

We believe that God ordered the events which brought this dream into notoriety at the time for the sake, not only of calling the attention of the people of that age to the subject matter of the dream, but also of casting a charm about the subject to arrest the attention of men in all ages. This is the dream. Dan. 2: 31–35:—

"Thou, O king, sawest, and behold a great image. This great image whose brightness was excellent, stood before thee; and the form thereof was terrible. This image's head was of fine gold, in breast and arms of silver, his belly and his thighs of brass, his legs of iron, his feet part of iron and part of clay. Thou sawest till that a stone was cut out without hands, which smote the image upon his feet, that were of iron and clay, and broke them to pieces. Then was the iron, the clay, the brass, the silver, and the gold broken together, and became like the chaff of the summer threshing-floors; and the wind carried them away, that no place was found for them, and the stone that smote the image became a great mountain and filled the earth."

In this dream we have an epitome of the history of the world; especially of those kingdoms which by their locality and importance come in contact with the people of God. The Babylonian kingdom, of which Nebuchadnezzar was king, we are expressly told was the head of gold. This kingdom was founded by Nimrod and endured until it was overthrown by Cyrus the Great, B. C. 538, after having endured nearly seventeen hundred years.

The next great empire that arose was the Medo-Persian. This empire owed its power to the genius and greatness of Cyrus, who succeeded in uniting the arms of the Medes and Persians, and with these combined forces was successful in overthrowing the kingdom of Lydia of Egypt and of Babylon. This empire was overthrown by Alexander B. C. 331, having lasted two hundred and seven years after the conquest of Babylon. In the image it is fitly represented as the breast and arms of silver,—the two arms representing the two kingdoms which were united in one dominion.

After this there arose the Greco-Macedonian kingdom under Alexander the Great. Having been successful in uniting the forces of the Grecian States with those of Macedonia, he was able to overthrow the Persian forces in pitched battle at Arbela, Oct. 2nd, B. C. 331, and thereby establish the third universal monarchy, fitly represented in the image as the belly and thighs of brass. After the death of this great commander his kingdom became divided into four dynasties, but for the sake of unity, or because only two of these were brought in contact with the people of God, the continuation of this kingdom is represented by the legs of iron.

Ptolemy Lagus, one of the Generals of Alexander, founded the kingdom of Egypt, which being a continuation in part of the power of Alexander would be fitly represented by one of the iron legs of the image. Seleucus Nicator, another of Alexander's Generals, founded the kingdom of Syria, which is fitly represented by the other leg of iron.

After this the Roman empire arose in its greatness and power, and overthrew these two kingdoms and incorporated them into its own body, which constitutes the feet of the image. In order to get a distinct view of the image and the kingdoms represented by it, let us suppose ourselves to be situated at the east of Babylon, looking towards Palestine.

Now let us consider the nations as they arise, which more particularly affect the people of God. As we stand facing the west we behold the terrible countenance of the head of gold. This overthrew Jerusalem, destroyed the temple of Solomon, and carried the children of Israel away into captivity. While we still gaze upon the image, the breast and arms arise above the horizon,—the children of Israel now return from their long captivity, the temple is rebuilt and the walls of Jerusalem restored. Still the image rises and his belly and thighs of brass appear. A mighty army passes through Palestine, but its passage is peaceful, and the people of God for the time seem to be the gainers by the change of rulers; but as we still look the iron legs come into view, one standing in the direction of Egypt the other over Syria. By turns these iron kingdoms conquer and bruise the people of God. As the arms of the Romans advance from the west and gradually overcome Egypt and Syria, causing but very little change in the condition of the chosen people, no special change is described as taking place in the material of the image, except that in the feet clay is mingled with the iron, which fitly represents the policy of the Romans in incorporating conquered cities and states into their own policy and extending to them the right of citizenship on certain conditions.

A stone, at this stage of the world's progress, is cut out without hands, which smites the image upon his feet and destroys it; it becomes a great mountain and fills the whole earth. This stone is the kingdom of Christ. He came while the feet of the image were tramping down the people of God. He was "cut out without hands;" that is, he was of miraculous conception. He was the stone which the builders rejected. His kingdom is destined to be an everlasting kingdom, and of its dominion there shall be no end.

IMPRESSIONS.

Never substitute them for the word of God, however clear and powerful they may seem; unless they are in accordance with that unseen guide, reject them at once. Follow not "a will-o-the-wisp;" remember, it dazzles but to deceive, and will betray you from the narrow path into the enemy's dominions. "Trust in the Lord and do good." Be diligent, that thou mayest be found of him without spot and blameless at his appearing, which hasteth greatly. God's holy word is the lamp to your feet, and a light to your path. By that you are required to "prove all things,"—to try the spirits whether they are of God; for many false prophets are gone out into the world with signs and wonders to deceive if possible the very elect.

Never was there so much danger as now in trusting to impressions aside from the authority of God's word, and this because it is the hour of trial and temptation. When the king came into view the guests, he found there a man which had not on a wedding garment. Then his lamp must have gone out, and he trusted in his impressions how to robe himself for the occasion. Let us then keep on all the armor girded closely about us, and our feet shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace. Look straight before thee, ponder well the path of thy feet; turn not to the right or the left, for the way is very narrow, and we need every moment to have our lamps trimmed and burning, shining brightly upon the path we tread, which if we are faithful will lead us into the everlasting kingdom.

Let us look well to our ways that we be not deceived. Satan would gladly draw our minds from Jesus by some false notion of his. He is very subtle. Let us be ever on our watch for him, that we may never have cause to regret that we have listened to any of his suggestions. Let us watch and pray, that we may never be turned aside from the path of virtue and truth by any of his false impressions.

THE TIME HASTETH.

"And the word of the Lord came unto me, saying, Son of man, What is that proverb that ye have in the land of Israel, saying, The days are prolonged, and every vision faileth? Tell them, therefore, Thus saith the Lord God; I will make this proverb to cease, and they shall no more use it as a proverb in Israel; but say unto them, The days are at hand, and the effect of every vision."

Bless the Lord! May the glorious morn soon burst upon our longing eyes! Such scripture is a great source of comfort to all the waiting saints. God's word will be fulfilled. Let scoffers say, "Where is the promise of his coming? for since the fathers fell asleep all things continue as they were from the beginning." Is it so? No. Are not the days at hand, and the effect of every vision? Can a candid christian look over the world at the present day and say, Our Lord delayeth his promise? God forbid. The long-suffering of God is salvation to us.

Does a man go to purge his floor without his fan? Or does he start on a long journey without first making ready? And will our Savior come before the harvest is ripe? No. Like a true husbandman he is waiting the latter rains to ripen the fields. And they are fast falling. Yes, the hoarse thunder of war shakes the earth, and the purple rain drops from many a wound. The cries of creation have entered into the ears of the God of Sabaoth.

Do all things remain as they were from the beginning? Did men's hearts always fail them for fear of the things that are coming on the earth? Did wars and rumors of wars always encircle the globe? Were people always as proud and blasphemous as now? Always as fierce and blood-thirsty? Did people ever preach Christ and slay men as now? or were they ever as void of natural affection? Did ever lying, swearing, swindling, robbing, and murder exist as now? Not since the flood. As it was in the days of Noe, so shall it be in the days of the Son of man. Has the sun refused its light? has the moon been turned to blood? have the stars fallen from heaven, even as a fig-tree casteth her untimely figs? or has God's word failed at any time? No, never. Is not the fig-tree putting forth its leaves? and is not summer drawing nigh? Is not the day at hand, and the effect of every vision? God says, "The heavens and earth shall pass away, but my word shall not pass away." Does every vision include them all? Yes; and the effect of every vision is at hand. God says so.

Furthermore, Jesus says, "When ye see all these things come to pass, know ye that I am near, even at the door." Christ is soon coming, and the proverb that "every vision faileth" will cease. People will soon cry that God is true and every man has lied, and how foolish I have been. O, that I were prepared. O, that I had made ready; but, alas! I am undone. I am weighed in a balance and found wanting. I did not believe the day was at hand, and with the scoffers I cried, Where are the signs of his coming? O, ye favored ones, "be ye faithful unto death, and I will give you a crown of life," saith the Lord. Yea, and ye shall shine as the stars in heaven, and "I will put a new song in your mouths." And "I will be your God, and ye shall be my people."

"And I saw a great white throne, and Him that sat thereon, from whose face the heavens and the earth fled away."—Rev. 20: 11. "And he carried me away in the Spirit to a great and high mountain, and showed me that great city, the holy Jerusalem, descending from God out of heaven."—Rev. 21: 10. "And I, John, saw these things and heard them."—Rev. 22: 8. "And he saith unto me, seal not the sayings of this book; for the time is at hand. And behold I come quickly, and my reward is with me, to give every man according as his works shall be."—Rev. 22: 12.

Reader, what reward do thy works merit? Wilt thou continue faithful in well-doing, seeking for glory, honor, and eternal life? or wilt thou lay up much goods, and say to thy soul, take thine ease, I have much goods laid up for many years?

O sinner, the earth is the Lord's and the fulness thereof, and of his treasure thou hast gathered, and of his blessings thou hast shared. Give him that little that he asks,—thy love,—that is all thou hast to give. But he has given his only Son, the "chiefest among ten thousand, and the one altogether lovely," for thee. O, come to him who loves thee and will never forsake thee. O, come to him who is strong and mighty to save. He is a friend to the poor and needy; he is a friend to right and wrong; his blood is sufficient to make them white as wool. O come while he tarries; "for the days are at hand, and the effect of every vision." Soon Jesus will ride down the skies with his twenty thousand chariots, and the sound of those wheels will fill your heart with terror; and the trump of God will call you to your final account.

Then come to Jesus, the mighty Counsellor; have him undertake your case in season, that you may be acquitted before the judgment of the last day, meet your God in peace, and receive that inheritance that is undefiled and fadeth not away.

PRAY WITHOUT CEASING.

This is the command of our blessed Lord to all those who love his appearing. We believe the time is near at hand when our Savior will come and establish his holy kingdom. Now is the time when God's saints should watch and pray. These are dark and gloomy times. This world is groaning beneath its load of sin and wickedness, and "men are lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God," laying up for themselves treasures upon earth, that will soon vanish away. Therefore, brethren and sisters, let us watch and pray, having on the whole armor of faith, and be prepared to stand against the wiles of the enemy, and fight manfully the battles of the Lord. Our lamps should be trimmed and burning, and we ready to meet our Lord when he comes to reward every one according to the deeds done in the body; to the righteous eternal life, and destruction to all that obey not God. Sinner, escape that doom. Accept offered mercy, and flee from the wrath of God. Come, while mercy's hour lasts, before the day of probation is over.

VISIT TO THE INDIANS.

For several years, it has been our privilege to be at the "yearly meeting" of the Shinnecock Indians, at Southampton, on Long Island. The meeting is invariably held on the first Lord's day in June. When the weather has been pleasant, we have met in a grove, composed of small oak trees, with sails spread around to break the force of the wind. When the weather was too wet or cold to be out in the grove, we have met at the house of Bro. David Bunn; but last year they built a convenient meeting-house, in which we are well accommodated.

We always enjoy our visit among them. Their love and hospitality are unfeigned. They are not so silly as to adopt the corrupt fashions of the day, and pretend to be what they are not. One feels at home among them, because he receives a hearty welcome; which is not expressed so much in idle words, as by kind deeds.

They have borne the foot of the oppressive white man with much patience. Notwithstanding they were the original owners of the soil, they have been treated as usurpers and rebels by those who have robbed them. Our nation, like the English, seems to act on the principle that what they can get from the natives is clear gain. The day is at hand when the Lord "will be a swift witness" against all such. The hour of retribution is evidently not far in the future. Then the oppressor's scales will be changed, and might will no longer make right.

These Indians lead a quiet and peaceable life, supporting themselves by fishing, and what they can raise from their land, which they cultivate much more than formerly. The soil is not rich, but with good care affords them a comfortable support.

At these annual meetings there is a general gathering of their friends and scattered members of their families, as on our New England Thanksgiving days. Besides these, there is usually a large collection of the white people, who come in from ten or twelve miles around. Many, who gather at these annual meetings, have preaching at no other time during the year. We hear of good fruits resulting from the word preached; and trust this last visit has not been in vain. They are a class of people endowed with good common sense; hence it is pleasant to present to them the foundations of our blessed hope. They can comprehend the word of the Lord much quicker than some learned theologians, who are filled with sectarianism. The Savior chose several of his disciples from among the fishermen. The rich and honorable of this world cared but little about the One born in Bethlehem, who is soon coming to be our King. So it is at the present time. He has some friends, we trust, among these Indians, who will hail his appearing with joy; while their oppressors will weep and wail. If the downtrodden will be patient a little longer, their Deliverer will wipe off all their reproach. The saints can hope for no relief till that glad hour arrives. It seems long in coming, but "the appointed hour makes haste." We think the friends of Jesus among the Indians, and the Africans in bondage, will know how to appreciate their deliverance, when the Prince of Peace comes to take them to his marriage. Dear reader, let us endeavor to be present at that time, to witness their joys, and participate in their glory.

A word about our meeting. As the hour approached for service, the Shinnecock Bay began to be whitened by sails bearing along upon its bosom those who came to the "June meeting" from various localities; loaded teams were seen approaching in different directions, and soon a lively scene was all around. Some came to worship the God of their fathers; others to see and be seen; others out of mere curiosity; and a few to sell food and drink. One would hardly know, judging from the general appearance, whether it was a religious or social festival. The two elements are commingled together. After a short interval, those who came for worship might be seen quietly seated in their respective chapels; or, when pleasant, in the grove.

There are two small churches, one known as the orthodox, the other as the one looking for the speedy coming of Christ. We need not say to which we preached. The latter have a very neat little chapel, that was full of attentive listeners, who seemed anxious to know the truth. There is evidently a growing interest in the minds of the white population in the vicinity to hear upon the evidences of our hope. Several of them take much pains to be present at these meetings. We are hoping some of the seed sown will spring up and bear fruit to the glory of God.

Among the natives are some noble specimens of humanity, that do honor to the tribe by their upright walk. Many of them are engaged in the whale fisheries, and fill honorable stations among the officers of the ships. Their houses are all framed, their tables well spread with good food, and things about have a thriving look of prosperity. They are directing their attention more and more to farming, and thus becoming more independent of their oppressors. We rejoice in their success.

We are ever delighted with the excellent family government, and good behavior of their children. Our thoughts at once run back to years bygone, when children obeyed their parents and had respect to age; but how changed now is the state of things in popular society! The little children rule the parents, and rush into all kinds of wickedness at an early age, and crowd their way to perdition. We know of no place where children have less temptations to go astray than in the well-regulated families of the tribe.

Our visit this time, like the other seven we have enjoyed, has been very pleasant. In the evening, we assembled around the table of the Lord, and had a heavenly season. None were in the room but those who loved the Savior; and among them was an aged Sister, some ninety-five years of age. She remarked that Jesus was her best friend, and she wished to be true to him. All the others spoke of their determination to endure to the end. We really felt a heavenly communion with each other and the Spirit of God. Thus closed our interview; and we parted with a bright hope of meeting again ere long in our blessed Eden home.

Monday morning, June 6th, we were taken to Sag Harbor, fourteen miles, where we went on board the sloop Harriet, Capt. Tryon, and had a delightful sail over Long Island Sound, to New London, thirty miles; thence by cars to Boston, just in season to start for our meetings in Canada.

We are hoping that our wanderings are nearly done, when we shall be privileged to meet all the saints around the throne. Pray for us, that we may never shrink from any known duty, and that we may be favored with the wisdom that comes from above, and be filled with perfect love to Him from whom proceeds every good gift.

VAIN VISION.

Political speculators have wild views of coming events, and say strange things concerning them; and the people believe them, because they wish to have it so. Some act as though they believed eloquent men were less likely to be mistaken than others. They take their opinions as greedily as the heathen received the oracles from the demons, and they are nearly as reliable, perhaps.

In a speech of Wendell Phillips, when speaking of our country in its present broken state, he says, "Out of that is to come a union as indestructible as the granite that holds up the continent." The Lord compares the strength of the last forms of government to "iron mixed with miry clay,"—poor and brittle. Either Mr. Phillips is wrong, or the Lord's prophet has made a mistake.

NEWS FROM THE ARMY.

"On to Richmond" is the motto of the army of the Potomac; but the progress is slow. Heavy obstacles stand in the way. The enemy is strongly fortified, and determined to contest every foot of ground. The rebels are much more in earnest than the Union army; hence accomplish more with less men and means. They are rapidly approaching a point of desperation, when there must be some change for better or worse. We can hardly hope for any thing better, so long as men are wicked as they are at present. They have cast off the fear of God, and rejected his word, and they are beginning to reap some of the temporal results.

THE COMING OF CHRIST.

Events are thickening all around which go to prove that the second coming of Christ is at hand. The church has waited long for the glad hour to arrive, but her weary night of watching is evidently near its close. The great week of labor is about ended, and the millennial Sabbath of rest will soon begin.

As we approach the close of the present dispensation, a deep impression is upon many minds that some great event is at hand; while the student of prophecy is not at loss to know what it is. But many have resisted the evidence so long, they do not like to admit it now; hence, like the Antediluvians, they rush on to the last moment, with no preparation. What reckless madness characterizes this generation. And we see no indications of improvement. Every faithful note of warning only hardens men, and increases their scoffing boldness. Yet they must be warned, so that they may be without excuse in the day of judgment. If the mass of popular ministers will not sound the alarm, we may expect the secular press to lend its columns to give the note of warning, as in the following instance:—

DR. CUMMING ON PROPHECY.

Lately, in the Music Hall, Newcastle, the Rev. Dr. Cumming, of London, delivered a lecture on "Prophecy, and the Signs of its Approaching Fulfillment." After stating that he was no prophet, but only an interpreter of prophecies that had been written, the Rev. Doctor proceeded to examine the prophecies that he considered, spoke of the period when the Millennium would commence. We shall merely indicate the argument, urged with reason, taste, and moderation by the speaker. He would first notice a remarkable prediction in the prophecy of Daniel: "And many shall run to and fro, and knowledge shall be increased." This prediction had been remarkably fulfilled in our own day. No one would doubt that the dominant characteristic of the age was locomotion. If he were correct in his interpretations, we were approaching the Saturday evening of the world's long and weary week, after which there would not be the annihilation of the globe; for he believed its hills were everlasting. What did he believe would be done to it? He believed all sin would be eliminated from it; the Savior's consecrating footstep would touch it, and His priestly hand wave over it. He believed that, literally, its wilderness and solitary places should be glad, and its "deserts rejoice and blossom as the rose." Why should the world be destroyed? Would it not be tantamount to saying that the devil had got into it, and that God was beaten in trying to drive him out, and, therefore, that it was handed over to him as his own freehold? On the contrary, he believed that the devil was to be cast out. Headaches and, still worse, heartaches would cease, and death itself be destroyed. He could take them to places in his native Highlands so beautiful that he could live there forever if sin was absent.

The Rev. lecturer then proceeded to point out the dates of prophecy. The 1,260 days mentioned by Daniel were shown to be not literally days, but years. They commenced from the time when the great western apostasy—the power referred to by Daniel—sprang into full manhood. This he took to be the year 532, when the Emperor Justinian passed an edict, investing the reigning Pope, John II., with universal dominion over the Church of Christ. Supposing he was correct in the date, it brought us down to the year 1792. In that year (1792) the great code of Napoleon was given—closing the era in which the code of Justinian had been in force. The great orifice of the Continental volcano was opened, and every papal kingdom in Europe was made to suffer the effects of the revolutionary wave. Then the Papacy began to wane and waste. Daniel then adds 30 and then 45 years, saying that the man who arrives at the expiring of the latter period shall be greatly blessed. Adding 30 to 1792 brought you to 1822 and adding 45 to that brought you down to 1867. If these dates and calculations were correct, this economy would expire in 1867.

War being the precursor of the Millennial period, he asked if there was a nation in Europe that did not heave with the throes of anticipated convulsions? What was Sir. William Armstrong doing with his artillery? and there were our ironsides, cannon to carry two cwt., and shells of the most destructive nature. Every man felt that the next war to come would be European in its area, and tremendous in its havoc; and, if it were not that war predicted, it would be the most tremendous struggle that the world ever passed through. He believed that the last desperate engagement would take place near Jerusalem, and that France and Russia and Great Britain would be the combatants. But whatever might be in the future, the spot where every man should be found—the holiest spot in the universe was the post of duty.—Carleton Sentinel, N. B.

It is well known that for some years Dr. Cumming has been proclaiming the speedy coming of Christ. His works have awakened much interest on the subject, and led many to the conviction of the truth that the end is at hand. Others treat the whole thing with contempt, and shun those who believe; while at the same time they are leaders in the popular church movements of these last days. Would that their eyes might be opened.

A CRY FOR HELP.

FROM SR. N. M. HENRY.

Bro. Grant:—Will you read this accompanying letter, and answer it through the Crisis? It seems like the bleating of a poor stray lamb, alone and lonely, tried and tempted by Satan; in darkness, and not knowing whither to turn. Your answer may give light to some other poor soul in doubt and darkness; some other poor lamb caught in the "hedge." As it is a letter asking for "light" and "advice," and knowing your ability to enlighten and comfort such, I submit it to you for an answer, such as her poor hungry soul craves. Yours in Christ,

TYRO, MO., April 3d, 1864.

Mrs. N. M. Henry:—Dear Lady, since it is your chief pleasure to minister to the necessities of the poor, it occurred to me that you might have compassion upon me, who also am poor, yet not so much in want of the things of this world, as of those spiritual blessings, without which we are none of "His." It is nearly three years since I united with the church, since which time I have gone by the name of Christian, but I am all unworthy. I am not conscious that I ever possessed any evidence of my acceptance with God, and I am feeling anxious for my soul's salvation. I long to feel that "joy unspeakable" of which I have so often heard others speak, to KNOW that I AM HIS; to feel in my own bosom the witness of the Spirit, which shall enable me to cry, "Abba, Father." I know not why it is that I do not enjoy religion.

For more than three years I have desired to do God's will, and I verily thought when I went forward in baptism, and afterward united with God's children, that I was doing that which was required, and in return should receive the baptism of the Spirit, according to his promise, but great was my disappointment, and Satan took occasion to fill my heart with bitter thoughts, and was of much assistance to me in believing my God unjust and untrue; more especially as I had heard the doctrine of fore-ordination.

I am at the present time much annoyed by very many passages of Scripture, which would appear to throw all responsibility upon my Maker; and at times am strongly tempted to place my Bible far out of sight; for, instead of its affording comfort, it seems rather to plunge me still further into the dark. But all nature proclaims, and something within asserts, that God is GOOD; hence, within a few weeks, I have resolved to take the New Testament, and study it more faithfully than before, and to make a minute of such passages as I could not conceive to be in harmony with God's character, as he proclaims himself to be. Accordingly, I will quote a few of the many passages which tempt me to believe that I can do nothing but fold my hands and wait for divine assistance, and that if God shall call, I can come; otherwise I must perish: "No man can come to me, except the Father draw him." "No man can come unto me, except it were given him of my Father."—John 6: 44, 65. "The promise is unto . . . as many as the Lord our God shall call." "The LORD added to the church daily such as should be saved."—Acts 2: 39, 47. Romans 8: 28, 29, 30, is all dark to me. Also Rom. 9: 11, speaks of the election, and the 15th verse says, "I will have mercy on whom I will have mercy." What means it? The 16th, 18th, and 22nd verses, would also appear to show that certain ones are favored of God; and in Rom. 11: 29 we read, "The GIFTS and calling of God are without repentance."

Oh, what means all this? I cannot comprehend these things? I do believe that God is good; surely there is no injustice with him. I would that the scales might be removed from my eyes, that I might see clearly, and be enabled to worship God in Spirit and in truth. Oh! will you pray for me, and, if consistent with your many duties, write to me? I am hundreds of miles from home and friends. There is no preaching in this place, and I fear no christians. I am residing with a gentleman who was formerly a Congregationalist, but is now backslidden. I see the Crisis occasionally, and would that I might write well enough so that my letter might be in its pages; but my advantages have been few, and I cannot express the half I feel. Please write to me, and tell me where to find Jesus. Methinks I can hear you say, "in prayer"; but I have no freedom there. It is as though I talked to the wind. Oh, write to me, and be as pointed as you please. Tell me where I am wrong, and teach me how to do right, and may God bless you in your labors everywhere. Address Miss E. S. B., (care of postmaster), Tyro, Jefferson Co., Missouri.

To MISS E. S. B. We see one very encouraging feature in your case,—your anxiety to know the right way. If you will promise the Lord to follow the light as fast as he gives it to you, and to do whatever he makes plain to be duty, and keep the promise, you will soon "know" that you are his. All doubts will flee away, and you will have "joy unspeakable." The reason why you have not had the clear witness of your acceptance, is because you have not given up all into the hands of the Lord. How could he be true to himself and fully approbate one who did not aim to do all to his glory? If he should give "perfect peace" to one who would not consecrate all to him, and observe all his requirements, so far as known, then he would be satisfying that individual in an evil way, and hence become a partaker, or an abettor in the wrong. This we cannot ask him to do. The way he has pointed out for us is just right, and no variation from it can be profitable to any one.

The first thing, then, for you to settle is, are you now ready to obey the Lord? I imagine I hear an affirmative answer. Then, if you knew what the Lord wished you to do, are you ready to obey, beginning at the present moment? Can you answer unreservedly, "I am"? If so, the whole difficulty is overcome. Hark! hear the testimony of the Spirit of the Lord, speaking through his servant:—"Know ye not, that to whom ye yield yourselves servants to obey, his servants ye are to whom ye obey?" This looks plain and consistent. If we yielded to obey sin, we are its servants. If we yield to obey the Lord, we are "his servants." This scripture tells the whole story in few words. We can become the Lord's children upon no other principle, after we have committed sin. As soon as we yield to obey him, he pardons all our past sins.

Once more we inquire, are you now ready to obey the Savior, as far as he shall make duty plain? If so, you will know what it is to "enjoy religion." One great reason why there are so few happy christians is because they are not doing any thing for the Lord. They are serving self more than him. Instead of doing what they do for his glory, they are seeking the honor of the world. All such, of course, must have leanness and darkness for their portion here, and expect no reward hereafter. But when we do all to the glory of God, our peace is like a river, continually growing wider and deeper.

When all is given up into the hands of the Savior, we do not need to take anxious thought about our joy, peace, or witness of acceptance, for he will see to that, if we only obey. Try in every thing to please the Lord, and you have nothing to fear. All will be well.

We now pass to notice some of your doctrinal difficulties. You are tempted to think you are not one of the elect. Well, we think that is one of Satan's devices to keep you from doing any thing.

We will give our views of the doctrine of election in a few words. We understand it is an elect CHARACTER, and not an elect number, that the Lord has decided to save. We understand this point was settled from the beginning of the world. On a certain occasion, Peter was somewhat troubled about the doctrine of election, and after he was set right, he says,—"Of a truth I perceive that God is no respecter of persons; but in every nation he that feareth him and worketh righteousness, is accepted with him."—Acts 10: 34, 35. We do not see how the "truth" could be more clearly expressed on this point.

It is true, none would come to the Lord "except the Father draw him;" but we read, "The manifestation of the Spirit is given to every man to profit withal."—1 Cor. 12: 7. The Syriac reads, "And to each man there is given a manifestation of the Spirit, that it may aid him." So it appears that ample provision is made for all, and the fault is ours if we do not obtain eternal life. "Whosoever will," may come. The Savior said of some, "Ye will not come to me, that ye might have life." Here we see where the fault lies. It is all in ourselves. In the Scriptures we read, "Give diligence to make your calling and election sure."—2 Pet. 1: 10. How could we make it sure, provided the Lord had already made an unalterable arrangement? In the latter case, man would only be a mere machine, and hence have no moral character.

It is true the Lord has mercy on some, and on some he has not. Who are they upon whom he has mercy? Jesus says, "Blessed are the merciful; for they shall obtain mercy."—Matt. 5: 7. Again, "He that covereth his sins shall not prosper; but whoso confesseth and forsaketh them shall have mercy." Then it follows that those who are hardened are the ones who will not confess and forsake their sins.

In Rom. 11: 29, where we read, "The gifts and calling of God are without repentance," we understand the repentance referred to is on the part of God, and not man. The promises he had made should be fulfilled; he would not turn from them. There is no change on his part; but we nowhere find in his word that he will save sinners unless they repent.

Truly "God is good." Keep on believing this great fact; and when any doctrine is presented which plainly contradicts it, you may know it is not in the Bible, but only some human invention.

You will "find Jesus" as soon as you are ready to obey and follow him. May you be guided into all truth, and saved in the coming kingdom.

For the World's Crisis.

THE TIME.

AN ERROR CORRECTED.

BRO. GRANT:—Bro. M. O. French has called my attention to the fact that Zion's Herald, Boston, in March last, stated that I had come to the conclusion that Christ would not make his appearance until some time between 1872 and 1875.

He says he can hardly credit this, and desires a statement of the facts in the Crisis. They are these.

1. I have no change of opinion on the time.
2. I hold that the 1260 years of the Papal power began A. D. 533, and ended in 1793. That the 1335 days of Daniel 12: 12 began at the same time, A. D. 533, and will terminate in 1868, when Daniel is to stand in his lot.

Glorious prospect for speedy deliverance! Let us all watch, and be ready. It is blessed to wait. Truly yours, J. V. HIMES.

For the World's Crisis.

LIGHT WANTED.

ELD. GRANT:—Dear Sir,—Excuse the liberty I take of troubling you with the following lines. My only apology is the desire of knowing "truth." I have been reading the Crisis for some months past (kindly lent me by Bro. Crosbie, one of your subscribers). I am an old Methodist of more than forty years standing. Circumstances brought me to this country in '59. I brought my certificate of membership over, which on delivering to Rev. Mr. Millard, pastor of 30th St. M. E. church, constituted me a member of that church. Subsequently I had to remove lower in the city, so I had to seek another church. I prayed the Lord to guide me where I would find most good, and where I would glorify him most. After having gone to some of the M. E. churches in my neighborhood, I could not say, "This people shall be my people." I thought the Methodism of N. Y. is not the Methodism of Guernsey. The ministry thereof is neither so spiritual, so experimental, or so practical as at home; and as to deadness to the world and spirituality of mind among the members, I thought I saw little of that (I say these things with sorrow).

I was told of a little church in West 24th St. I went to hear. I saw a plainer people there; I heard plain truths delivered with power. I felt the Holy Spirit's influences there as I had not felt them in the M. E. churches; so I thought this was the place the Lord had led me to. I joined that little church about two and a half years since. I feel at home there. God is with us, and we love as brethren. But although we love alike, we don't all think (exactly) alike. As to the terms of salvation; viz: repentance towards God and faith in our Lord Jesus Christ, holiness of heart and life, etc.; this is all as I have been in the habit of hearing for fifty years and more.

I hear things, however, that I can neither adopt or reject. (The Lord knows my heart; it is a desire for truth that leads me to write this.) I hear that the wicked shall be destroyed (annihilated). I also hear that all the dead are (and shall be) unconscious till the resurrection; in other words, the spirits (or souls) of the righteous do not go to heaven at death, nor those of the wicked to hell (at death). These things are new to me. Passages of Scripture, such as the following, rush into my mind. "And it came to pass that the beggar died, and was carried by the angels into Abraham's bosom; the rich man also died and was buried; and in hell he lifted up his eyes, being in torments," etc.; and that contained from the 27th to the 31st inclusive respecting his five brethren.

"Verily I say unto thee, to-day shalt thou be with me in paradise."* "The smoke of their torment ascendeth up for ever and ever." "Their worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched." "They rest not day or night," etc., etc.

I hear Paul on the other hand saying, "To me, to live is Christ; to die is gain"; "having a desire to depart and be with Christ, which is far better"; "absent from the body, and present with the Lord."

I say, these and other scriptures keep me from seeing eye to eye with my dear brethren. I may say, however, that I love them none the less for their creed. I dare not believe or say they are wrong. I cannot say with the poet—

"Mortals cry, 'A man is dead;'
Angels sing, 'A child is born.'"

"Our friend is gone before
To that celestial shore," etc.

If the doctrines of my dear Advent friends are right, then those of my dear Methodist friends at home, in Guernsey, are wrong, or vice versa. I know full well that there are deeply pious souls amongst those I left behind, as well as here in Mr. Curry's church.

I have said nothing about man having an immortal soul, which he brought with him into the world. How many times have I joined with others in singing,—

"A never-dying soul to save,
And fit it for the sky."

I could not adopt that language now with confidence, hearing arguments tending to show (or to prove) that man only becomes immortal by a living (saving) faith in Christ; however, this is implied in the beginning of this letter; viz., the destruction of the wicked; so this need not be noticed.

Dear Sir,—I want light on these subjects. I am, as it were, between two opinions. I candidly say that I know not which party is right. I have been praying for light on these subjects for months past, and still pray. Is it too much to ask that you would be so kind as to notice this request of mine? It might do good to a host of others, as well as to him who subscribes himself your well wisher and obedient servant, JOHN OZANNE.

Correspondence.

From Bro. P. Tandy.

BRO. GRANT:—I like the Crisis very much; hope the Lord will grant its continuance to the close of this dispensation; and may the humble, faithful servants of Jesus continue to give the "little flock" meat in due season. While I am deprived of the precious privilege of hearing Advent preachers herald the gospel of the kingdom but seldom, I am happy to receive the weekly visits of the World's Crisis. May the Lord still continue to bless its contributors with wisdom, grace, understanding, and with the Holy Ghost. May we be wise as serpents and harmless as doves, even in this wicked and perverse age. I have neglected writing for many months past, feeling that others could do more good than I might; that may be true; but they have not and they cannot do my duty! If I have only one talent, it is my duty to improve upon it, and gain another one if I can. Every saint of God has at least one talent; and it will be required of us according to that we have. O! then let us be faithful in the vineyard of the Lord.

Let me say to the dear saints scattered abroad, that we are strangers and pilgrims on the earth, having no continuing city or abiding home here. Let us be earnestly seeking one to come, which has a permanent foundation, whose maker and builder is God. Here, every thing is perishing and dying around us. Disease and death are on every hand! O! may we be wise and seek and obtain durable riches and righteousness that will never, no never, fade away! May God help his dear saints everywhere to come out from the world, and be separate, and touch not the unclean thing; (that is, the spirit and practice of the world.) And as we are living in the last day perils, it is all important that we give all diligence to make our calling and election sure in the Lord.

I do solemnly and heartily believe that the fulfillment of prophecy, and the signs of the times indicate that we are very near the closing scene! How it behooves us then to have our every lamp trimmed and burning, ready to meet our thrice blessed Lord! May God help us all to be ready!

Now, my dear brethren and sisters, let me talk to you a little more about the coming of the Lord. Jesus has given us the signs of his coming, and of the end of the world. But first, he says, "Take heed that no man deceive you. For many shall come in my name, saying, I am Christ; and shall deceive many. And ye shall hear of wars and rumors of wars. . . . Nation shall rise against nation, and kingdom against kingdom; and there shall be famine, and pestilences, and earthquakes, in divers places. These are the beginnings of sorrows." Then the Savior goes on to tell how the saints should be afflicted, and killed; and how they should be hated of all nations for Christ's sake. "And many shall be offended, and shall betray one another, and shall hate one another. . . . And because iniquity shall abound, the love of many shall wax cold. But he that shall endure unto the end, the same shall be saved. And this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world, for a witness unto all nations; and then shall the end come." So the Savior still goes on foretelling what shall happen, prior to his second coming. Then he says: "Immediately after the tribulation of those days the sun shall be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light, and the stars shall fall from heaven. And there shall be distress of nations upon the earth, with perplexity; the sea and the waves roaring; men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth; for, (or because) the powers of heaven shall be shaken. Then shall they see the Son of man coming in the cloud with power and great glory. And when these things begin to come to pass, then look up, and lift up your heads; for your redemption draweth nigh."

And Jesus being anxious that they should understand his meaning; spake a parable to them; "Behold," said he, "the fig-tree, and all the trees. When they now shoot forth, ye see that summer is now nigh at hand. So likewise ye, when ye see these things come to pass, know, (not guess at it, KNOW) ye that the kingdom of God is nigh at hand! Verily, I say unto you, this generation shall not pass away till all be fulfilled. Heaven and earth shall pass away; but my words shall not pass away."

Now I, for one, do solemnly believe that all (or nearly all) the Savior's predictions respecting his second advent are fulfilled. All I am waiting for is, the powers of heaven to be shaken; and then shall appear the sign of the Son of man in heaven! Am I ready? are you ready, my brother? are you ready, my sister, for the solemn and thrice glorious event? May God help us to give all diligence to make our calling and election sure.

Yours in gospel bonds, P. TANDY.

Mill Village, N. H.

From M. A. Y. Hackett.

BRO. GRANT:—It has been some time since I have thought to address you through the Crisis, that not only you but all the readers of this valuable paper might know where I am in belief concerning the history of this world, as I am situated so as to make it difficult to be abroad much to give a verbal testimony to the world, I know of no other way so satisfactory to my feelings as to ask for an admittance of a few thoughts to your paper. I am prompted thus to do under a sense of duty I owe to my heavenly Father and the wide world, believing this to be a day of decision to all—either to build upon the sure rock of divine truth which never can be shaken, or take the sandy foundation, and thus experience that fall from which none can rise. I am believing that the great wheel of time will soon have made its last revolution, and then the die will be cast, and no time for individual action. The voice of the archangel will be heard which shall awake the slumbering millions, who shall come forth from their dusty beds to death, or everlasting life. "Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection; on such the second death hath no power." May I be there, is the prayer of my heart.

Now while writing, my mind reverts to the scene which was brought to my vision in a dream; of that voice which spoke to me from the illuminated clouds above my head, and a view of those loved ones whom I have seen laid away, coming out of their resting-places, and talking with Moses and Elias face to face, without a veil between. O! how joyful was this scene with all its connections, and what lasting effect has it had upon my mind. I hope when I shall experience the reality of that scene to have in possession all that tranquility and fullness of joy which then was mine.

God's controversy with the nations of the earth must soon close, and the next great event to take place will be the coming of our Lord, and the resurrection of his saints to receive their reward with all those upon the earth who are found ready, watching for his appearing. I feel that I must more earnestly engage in his cause and faithfully perform the duties of the christian, that I may obtain that crown of everlasting life.

Dover, N. H. M. A. Y. HACKETT.

From Bro. Geo. L. Hart.

BRO. GRANT:—Have I then believed in vain, that there is after all only a restitution of a part of the things spoken of by the holy prophets, the animal creation cut off on account of generation? Come, let us reason together. May we not upon the same hypothesis exclude the vegetable creation? For it is from the same source that the earth is to-day covered with verdure. Undying in its nature in the world to come, one tree alone would crowd the saints out of the earth to eternity. Come, let us return to that fifth day of the creation, so satisfying to a holy God that he pronounced it very good. Has any one ever read of his repenting that he made them? No. How careful was he to provide an ark to save some, at least! Can he not from the new earthdust create without generative organs as well as with?

He, the mighty God, through the prophets, has declared, to my satisfaction, that he will make all things new. And when in Eden, I shall gather with God's dear children 'neath the foliage of an undying vegetation, I trust I shall hear the feathered songsters warble their notes of praise to the blessed Redeemer. It seems plain to me that the apostle teaches that all that was not subjected willingly Christ will redeem from a condition of death.

In the fifth chapter of Revelation we read of every creature in heaven, in the sea, and all that are therein saying, "Blessing and glory and power be unto Him." Will men live under the earth? No. Will they live in the sea? No. It seems to me I have sufficient evidence in the word that all flesh shall see the salvation of God, and behold it together.

Yours, waiting for eternal salvation,

GEO. L. HART.

From Bro. J. W. Burnham.

BRO. GRANT:—I have read the Crisis with much pleasure and profit. I believe in the return of the Nobleman, and rejoice that I have the privilege of hearing through the Crisis from the tempted and tried ones who are endeavoring to walk in the unity of the Spirit and the bonds of peace, looking unto Jesus the author and finisher of their faith, who will soon come and receive his weary ones to himself. I live in a place where human creeds and the doctrines of men are taught. Men, women and children have been called upon to rally around the standards of fallible men. A few have not responded to the call. These are enjoying the light of that perfect law of liberty—the word of God. They have been strengthened and encouraged by the labors of Bro. C. F. Sweet, who has contrasted the plain declarations of the word of God with the traditions of men as taught from "the sacred desk" in so clear and forcible a manner that light, the pure light of gospel truth, is shedding its genial rays, for which we thank God and take courage.

BRO. GRANT:—Not long since I was away on business, and on the Sabbath attended a good meeting. The Spirit of God was there, and the preacher, (Bro. Woodruff) seemed to possess a good share of the Spirit of God. The Lord helped him. But there was another meeting near by, called the come-outers. In the evening, I had a curiosity to attend. After being there a while I made up my mind that they were not of us. Such a meeting I never attended before. They claimed to be now in the New Jerusalem walking the golden streets, and were beyond the reach of the devil, and had power to cast out devils, and did it by striking the subject on the head and shoulders, etc., and had got beyond the word and were led entirely by the Spirit. They had no need of the word and are not looking for Christ as they once were, but did not explain how or when they expected him. O how people are led away in these last days of peril and apostasy!

The devil is making a grand rally of his forces, mustering all he can. I suppose he has an army in the United States of about two millions which belong to the spiritualistic theory. God save his people from falling into error, and help us to fight valiantly for the right, is the prayer of your unworthy brother.

BRO. GRANT:—I wish to say through this medium to the many friends west that have written to me concerning visiting them during my western tour, that I will so arrange as to meet their wishes as far as practicable. I expect to leave home about the 23d of June, and shall be at Champlain, N. Y., over Sabbath, the 26th; hence, those addressing me near the time of my leaving might direct to that place, and as I may direct through the Crisis.

Last Sabbath was my last day in Stanbridge for the present." It was a communion season. The congregations were large, and the interest good. May God keep those I leave behind, and bless those I may visit; bless me, and make me a blessing.

Stanbridge, C. E. C. P. DOW.

BRO. E. D. LYON writes from Ottawa, Ill.:—"I have taken the Crisis nearly a year, and can truly say it is the best paper I ever saw. I have been greatly strengthened and encouraged in perusing its pages. I feel like trying to do what I can, that others may know and believe the truth.

I sent some of my papers and some tracts to a friend who had heard but very little of the doctrine of the Second Advent. He was very much pleased with them, and says the Bible is a book which he now can understand, and wishes me to send in his name as a subscriber for the Crisis."

P. GREEN writes from Berlin Falls, N. H.:—"I prize the Crisis as of all papers the best. It is truly food to the hungry soul to read the stirring letters, and the accounts of revivals in different places, for we have little preaching from brethren in this place. I do hope and pray that some of the preachers of the truth may be sent this way, filled with the Spirit and power of Elijah's God, for we very much need a revival amongst us here in Berlin."

BRO. H. W. DANN writes from West Troy, N. Y.:—"We had a sermon last Sabbath, (29th ult), on 'The word grew and multiplied'; and you will no doubt think it strange when I say that it furnished the theme of a war sermon. I expect before long we shall hear war even from the beautiful words of Jesus—'Blessed are the peace makers.' My soul cries, 'O Lord! how long?'"

Obituaries.

PAULINA SLATER.

Died in Granby, June 3d, of consumption, Paulina, wife of Bro. Horatio Slater, aged fifty-four years.

Her sufferings, although long protracted and severe, were endured with christian patience and resignation. She had often expressed a desire to live until Jesus came, yet meekly submitted to God's will, calmly arranged the affairs of her house and those of her funeral as far as she had any choice, bade adieu to friends and relations, exhorting them to be faithful and meet her in the coming kingdom, and peacefully fell asleep in Jesus, leaving a full and perfect evidence of the sustaining hope of the gospel, and of having part in the first resurrection. At her request the resurrection was the subject of the funeral discourse, presented by Bro. A. M. Higgins on the Sabbath following her death, from the words of Jesus in John 11: 25. May the Lord comfort, strengthen and sustain her now lonely and feeble companion, and all the friends that mourn.

"Sweet be thy rest till Christ bid thee arise,
To greet him in triumph descending the skies."

Then again we hope to meet thee,
When the griefs of earth are fled,
And in paradise to greet thee,
Where no farewell tears are shed.
Oh death, thou cruel enemy,
Thou last to be destroyed,
Soon to thy work an end shall be,
Through Jesus Christ the Lord.

LAURA K. NEWELL.

ASENATH HAMMOND.

Died in Vineland, Wis., May 22d, of consumption, Widow Asenath Hammond, aged fifty-two years.

After a long season of protracted suffering, this dear mother and sister now rests from her labors; her last tear is shed, her last groan uttered. She loved the doctrines of the Bible, and was a believer in life only through Christ. She leaves two sons and two daughters with their companions, a large circle of sisters, an aged mother and other relatives, to mourn the loss of one dearly beloved and highly prized. She sleeps peacefully, awaiting the glorious morning of the resurrection, when death shall be banished, and the voice of Jesus will bid her arise.

There no weary midnight watching,
There no parting tear is shed;
There no sighs of bitter anguish
For the loved ones cold and dead.
No sad burial procession
Moves along that golden street,
And our grief will turn to gladness
When our loved ones there we meet.

MARY L. PRATT.

CHARLES W. AND ADDISON MERRIL SMITH.

Also, a brother of the above, Addison Merril Smith, died April 26th, 1863, at Bolton, C. E., aged three years, eleven months, and eighteen days.

Thus kind parents have been made sad, yet they "sorrow not even as others who have no hope." Their youngest they hope to meet upon the verdant fields of Eden, and the elder, who died in the army, they have reason to hope repented and died trusting in a mighty Savior. The funeral of the first named was attended by the writer. Text, John 11: 35,—"Jesus wept." This is the "night of weeping," but lo! the morning of joy cometh speedily. Let us be ready to hail the mighty triumph. C. P. DOW.

DEA. RICHARD BOYNTON.

Our dear brother has for many years been a deacon in the Baptist church in Jefferson, but for the eight years past a firm believer in the great and glorious truths of the coming and kingdom of Christ, which hope cheered him to the last, and he was ready to bear public testimony to the truth he loved. He called for Bro. Wyman and made arrangements for his funeral, which was attended by the writer May 29th. He leaves a dear wife and children to mourn their loss, but they sorrow not as those which have no hope.

S. K. PARTRIDGE.

Summary of News.

DOMESTIC.

New York, June 7. Secretary Chase is understood to have closed the negotiation of a loan of fifty millions with the New York banks. He is to draw the money as needed, and in return give the banks six per cent. certificates of deposit to be used at the clearing house. Secretary Chase waits ten days if required by any banks, or, in other words, the certificates can be paid in on account of the loan. This, will, it is said, prevent stringency in the money market. There is a strong pressure to induce him to accept some foreign bids, so as to place at his command sufficient gold to break the speculative movement for a rise.

The blockade of the Mississippi at Greenville, Miss., is confirmed. The steamer Henry Ames, Mississippi, Olive Branch, and others were lying above Greenville waiting the result of the engagement, which had been going on for two days between the batteries and gunboats. But little if any impression had been made on the batteries.

Guerrillas were again committing outrages in Louisiana. One man was murdered in cold blood.

June 7. The headquarters of the 7th corps were yesterday shelled vigorously for half an hour. Only eight men were killed and wounded.

About 4 P. M. the rebels made another desperate charge on the works and were again repulsed.

White House, June 8. Gen. Sheridan has gone on another very important raid, which, if successful, will be one of the most beneficial as it is one of the most hazardous expeditions of the war.

June 11. News from the front this evening is of the most cheerful character. Two officers have just arrived bringing the joyful news of the capture of Fort Darling. An order conveying this intelligence was read to the army last evening, and the cheers of our soldiers were heard for miles around.

New York, June 9th. The Times' dispatch, dating Monday, says the direction and disposition of our lines have been materially changed since Friday's fight at many places, and especially in front of the 6th and 8th corps. Our line is well fortified, but at other points we are subject to a galling enfilading fire, against which it is almost impossible to fortify.

Detailed accounts by correspondents with Gen. Grant's army show that our forces are busily engaged in digging, intrenching, skirmishing and sharp shooting. Both armies evidently hold positions of great strength, which will probably be overcome by some strategic move not yet publicly developed.

New York, June 10th. The Times gives an account of Gen. Averill's operations in his expedition to distract the attention of Morgan and other rebel commanders from an expedition against Gen. Crook, and says Averill was highly successful.

He kept Morgan with five thousand men near Wytheville until Gen. Crook completed his work, and then moved to join Crook. On the way he encountered Morgan, and though outnumbered two to one he found it necessary to make a stand. For eight hours Averill withstood assault after assault, holding his ground until dark. Averill then moved off, Morgan not deeming it advisable to follow, and eventually fell in with Crook after having several skirmishes and meeting a force of fifteen hundred under Jenkins, whom he flanked. At this time his command was entirely out of ammunition. Averill was badly wounded in the forehead, but retained his command.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, June 10th, 7 A. M.

To Major-General Dix:

Owing to the break in the telegraph line no dispatches were received yesterday from the Army of the Potomac. Dispatches have arrived this morning with dates to 9 o'clock last night. There was no firing on Wednesday except by pickets. Arrangement has been effected by which the killed and wounded are gathered in. There were no movements yesterday.

A deserter who came into our lines reports that Gen. Hunter's victory near Staunton was much more complete than the Richmond papers reported. He says Hunter took twenty cannon, many prisoners, and a large quantity of stores. The defeated force was recently a part of Breckenridge's command. Gen. Hunter's report has not yet been received.

E. M. STANTON, Secretary of War.

Washington, June 10. Military men regard the aspect of affairs at the front as very encouraging, and well calculated to inspire hopes of success.

The Republican of this evening says: "On the 10th day of June, 1863, the situation before Vicksburg was not half so promising for the evacuation of that place on the 4th of July following as is the situation to-day before Richmond."

The Medical Department have had nearly all the wounded who had been congregated at White House removed to hospitals here or at Alexandria.

The deaths have greatly diminished within a day or two, and a very large portion of the men will soon be convalescent.

Delegations and individuals from the Baltimore Convention have thronged the Executive mansion to-day, congratulating the President on his nomination. Mr. Lincoln has been in excellent spirits, and has been reminded of many pleasant anecdotes.

New York, June 11. The Tribune's headquarters correspondent, writing June 8, says our left wing now extends across the railroad on the eastern bank of the Chickahominy. An advance in that direction was made yesterday morning by Griffin's and Cutler's divisions of the 8th Corps, and Summer's Bridge was taken after a short encounter. The 18th Massachusetts regiment advanced to the river, driving the enemy's pickets and occupying the bridge. Two North Carolina regiments were on the opposite side of the river, and a rebel brigade was at Meadow station. Our position is impregnable against any assault.

The Times' dispatch, dated Staunton, June 6th, says: We met the rebels in force fifteen miles north of here and whipped them thoroughly. The rebels were commanded by Jones and Imboden. The former was killed. We pursued them to-day with little resistance, captured six guns, hundreds of prisoners and many hundred dollars worth of stores.

The Tribune's correspondent off Wilmington says the gunboat Victoria drove the blockade runner Georgiana McCew ashore on the 2d inst., and captured the captain, twenty-nine of the crew and three passengers, including a bearer of important dispatches from London to Richmond. The McCew was constructed for a war vessel and was partially destroyed by fire by our men, who were finally driven off by rebel batteries.

ANDREW JOHNSON.—Andrew Johnson, the Union candidate for Vice President, rose, like Mr. Lincoln, from the people, and even if possible, from a humbler origin. He was born in Raleigh, N. C., Dec. 29th, 1808. When only ten years of age, he was apprenticed to a tailor, and worked at his trade until he was seventeen years of age. He never attended school, but by diligent study by himself, acquired the rudiments of education. The statement has been made, we know not with how much truth, that he was indebted to his wife for the only instruction he received in his first effort at learning. Having moved to Greenville, East Tennessee, he was chosen mayor in 1830. He afterwards served in the Legislature, and in 1843 he was elected to Congress and remained in that body until 1853. He was then Governor of Tennessee four years, and in 1857 was chosen United States Senator.

During the whole of this period he was a Democrat of the genuine Jackson stamp, devoted in heart and soul to that Union which had enabled him to rise from poverty, ignorance and obscurity to station and commanding influence. When, therefore, the rebellion broke out, he never wavered for a moment, but, with great personal sacrifices, threw himself into the cause of loyalty. He was appointed by Mr. Lincoln, Military Governor of Tennessee, and his vigilant and effective services in that capacity have been of immense value to the country. Though himself a slaveholder, Mr. Johnson soon saw in slavery the cause and cement of the rebellion, and promptly took ground for its overthrow. In this respect, as well as on all the other vital questions of the day, he stands side by side with Mr. Lincoln, and if chosen to the Vice Presidency, as there is no rational doubt that he will be, he will become a powerful auxiliary to the former in completing the great work of national restoration.—Journal.

FROM THE REBEL PAPERS.—The Richmond Examiner calculates that the loss of men in the opposing armies during the past month of May amounted to 70,000, and cyphers up the Confederate share of the loss of nineteen thousand. The rebels have lost nineteen Generals in Virginia alone, in the pending Virginia campaign.

The rebel Congress has passed a bill providing for the impressment of food, if necessary, for the supply of the army.

The subscription price of the Examiner is fifty dollars per annum, and twenty dollars per hundred is charged to dealers.

☞ The New York Times says that Secretary Chase on his recent visit to that city, favorably entertained certain offers for a loan from England, Holland and Germany, and returned to Washington with the purpose of accepting them.

THE ENGLISH CHASING THE PIRATE FLORIDA.—There is something very significant in the following intelligence, provided it can be relied on as true. It is stated that information has been received by the brigantine Prince Alfred, which left Barbadoes on the 9th ult., that the English war steamer greyhound had been dispatched the day previous in search of the rebel steamer Florida. She had received sealed dispatches, which were not to be opened until the Florida was under the range of their guns.—Journal.

Items.

☞ The contract for dead horses in the Federal army has just been let for £12,000. The horses' shoes are first pulled off, which are worth about 4s., the hoofs fetch 8s., the tail 2s; the tallow is not worth much; the hide is worth something; the shinbones are sold to be converted into caneheads, knife-handles, etc.

☞ In New Zealand, when a person becomes an habitual drunkard, the fact is published in the papers by the magistrate before whom the case may be proven, and all persons are warned against selling the drunkard liquor under the penalty of $20 fine and three months imprisonment.

☞ A lady of Gorham, Me, aged three score and ten years, went into the field with her hoe, the 18th ult., covering 1100 hills of corn, drove up hew cows, milked them before sunset, and retired to rest in good season.

☞ Mr. Giddings, whose death occurred so suddenly on the 27th of May, was in his 69th year. He was as prominent for years as any Northern man in the slavery contest of the last quarter of a century, but the latter part of his life was passed in comparative obscurity.

☞ It is reported from Paris that the Emperor has undertaken to predict the triumph of the Northern arms in the United States, and that he was now ready to declare himself our firm friend.

☞ Late news from Greece gives a very unfavorable account of political matters there. The young King can only count on two vessels of his fleet as being manned by loyal crews.

☞ Letters from St. Petersburg announce that the Grand Duke Michael has gone to Anauna in order to facilitate another great emigration of Circassians, exceeding 100,000 persons of that nationality.

☞ The steamer Berkshire was burned on the Hudson river last evening, while en route from this city to Hudson. The vessel is a total loss. Forty lives are reported lost.

☞ There are now four hundred and fifty-six paymasters in the army, including forty recently appointed. Their aggregate annual salaries amount to about $1,000,000.

☞ The President has sent a message to Congress recommending the repeal of the $300 exemption clause, which prevents the army from being kept up to its maximum strength.

Tremont Grove and Campmeeting.

This meeting will be held upon the same ground as last year, one half mile from the Tremont Depot, West Wareham, Mass., on the Old Colony and Cape Cod R. R., thirty-five miles from Boston, and eighteen from New Bedford. It will commence with preaching in the grove Sunday, June 26th, and continue till July 5th. We hope to greet the many we have greeted there before, and many more beside. Shall we not see many from Portsmouth, Concord, Lawrence, and from towns round about Boston? Encouraged by the blessings of God upon this meeting in the past, we expect a larger and a better one this year. Brn. Grant, Hastings, and M. Batchelor are among those engaged to preach the word. Will Bro. Munger attend? Other preachers who may come in the name of the Lord will find a cordial welcome. We, however, assume no responsibilities save with such as are engaged. None are desired who come in their own name or in the name of some strange doctrine. The objects of this meeting are to comfort and strengthen the saints and save men "from the wrath to come." I propose Friday, June 24th, as a day of fasting and prayer for divine blessing upon the meeting to this end. "Our help is in the name of the Lord." H. F. CARPENTER.

P. S. Board will be provided on the ground on terms as reasonable as the times will admit; also accommodations for those who wish to board themselves. Lodgings can be secured in private dwellings by coming early. Every one should come prepared with bedding for camp life. Those who can should bring tents. Fare from Boston and New Bedford reduced to half price. Come!

In behalf of Committee. H. F. C.

Notice.

There will be a meeting (D. V.) in the barn of Bro. Lauren Grinnell, in West Barre, Orleans Co., N. Y., about three-fourths of a mile east of the West Barre post-office, commencing Friday, July 1st, 1864, and continuing over the following Lord's day. Brethren waiting for the coming of Jesus, and all christians, are cordially invited to come and work for the salvation of men, and so be built up themselves. The Lord cometh.

Those coming by railroad will stop at Albion, on the Rochester and Niagara Falls Road, and provision will be made to convey them to the meeting, which is about eight miles from that place. Brethren who intend to come will do well to drop a line, stating how many will be with them, and what day they will come, directed to me at Brockport.

Teams will meet the cars at noon, at Albion, on Friday and Saturday, the 1st and 2nd inst., and the morning train from the east, Sunday. So any persons coming from the west will come on an early train, and wait in Albion about two hours. If brethren will write me as above, it will cost them only three or four cents, and may save some expense to the brethren who furnish teams. Come praying and expecting a blessing.

JOS. D. BROWN.

Our numbers and the interest of the meeting are increasing. May the good Lord still continue to bless us, is my humble prayer. THOS. R. WEAVER.

Those coming on the cars will leave the Grand Trunk Road at Mechanic Falls, and take the Buckfield Branch train, stopping at Bence's Crossing. Inquire for Alvin Turner, Levi Stevens, W. Allen, or D. Fuller. They will either care for those that come, or direct to others who stand ready to help. Brethren, this is comparatively a new place for Advent preaching, and we desire that you should make sacrifices to attend. The ministers of our conference must be there, and those beyond its circle are cordially invited.

Reviewers Reviewed. [illegible]

And Jesus being anxious that they should understand his meaning; spake a parable to them; "Behold," said he, "the fig-tree, and all the trees. When they now shoot forth, ye see that summer is now nigh at hand. So likewise ye, when ye see these things come to pass, know, (not guess at it, KNOW) ye that the kingdom of God is nigh at hand! Verily, I say unto you, this generation shall not pass away till all be fulfilled. Heaven and earth shall pass away; but my words shall not pass away."

Now I, for one, do solemnly believe that all (or nearly all) the Savior's predictions respecting his second advent are fulfilled. All I am waiting for is, the powers of heaven to be shaken; and then shall appear the sign of the Son of man in heaven! Am I ready? are you ready, my brother? are you ready, my sister, for the solemn and thrice glorious event? May God help us to give all diligence to make our calling and election sure.

Yours in gospel bonds, P. TANDY.
Mill Village, N. H.

From M. A. Y. Hackett.

BRO. GRANT:—It has been some time since I have thought to address you through the Crisis, that not only you but all the readers of this valuable paper might know where I am in belief concerning the history of this world, as I am situated so as to make it difficult to be abroad much to give a verbal testimony to the world, I know of no other way so satisfactory to my feelings as to ask for an admittance of a few thoughts to your paper. I am prompted thus to do under a sense of duty I owe to my heavenly Father and the wide world, believing this to be a day of decision to all—either to build upon the sure rock of divine truth which never can be shaken, or take the sandy foundation, and thus experience that fall from which none can rise. I am believing that the great wheel of time will soon have made its last revolution, and then the die will be cast, and no time for individual action. The voice of the archangel will be heard which shall awake the slumbering millions, who shall come forth from their dusty beds to death, or everlasting life. "Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection; on such the second death hath no power." May I be there, is the prayer of my heart.

Now while writing, my mind reverts to the scene which was brought to my vision in a dream; of that voice which spoke to me from the illuminated clouds above my head, and a view of those loved ones whom I have seen laid away, coming out of their resting-places, and talking with Moses and Elias face to face, without a veil between. O! how joyful was this scene with all its connections, and what lasting effect has it had upon my mind. I hope when I shall experience the reality of that scene to have in possession all that tranquility and fullness of joy which then was mine.

God's controversy with the nations of the earth must soon close, and the next great event to take place will be the coming of our Lord, and the resurrection of his saints to receive their reward with all those upon the earth who are found ready, watching for his appearing. I feel that I must more earnestly engage in his cause and faithfully perform the duties of the christian, that I may obtain that crown of everlasting life.

Dover, N. H. M. A. Y. HACKETT.

From Bro. Geo. L. Hart.

BRO. GRANT:—Have I then believed in vain, that there is after all only a restitution of a part of the things spoken of by the holy prophets, the animal creation cut off on account of generation? Come, let us reason together. May we not upon the same hypothesis exclude the vegetable creation? For it is from the same source that the earth is to-day covered with verdure. Undying in its nature in the world to come, one tree alone would crowd the saints out of the earth to eternity. Come, let us return to that fifth day of the creation, so satisfying to a holy God that he pronounced it very good. Has any one ever read of his repenting that he made them? No. How careful was he to provide an ark to save some, at least! Can he not from the new earthdust create without generative organs as well as with?

He, the mighty God, through the prophets, has declared, to my satisfaction, that he will make all things new. And when in Eden, I shall gather with God's dear children 'neath the foliage of an undying vegetation, I trust I shall hear the feathered songsters warble their notes of praise to the blessed Redeemer. It seems plain to me that the apostle teaches that all that was not subjected willingly Christ will redeem from a condition of death.

In the fifth chapter of Revelation we read of every creature in heaven, in the sea, and all that are therein saying, "Blessing and glory and power be unto Him." Will men live under the earth? No. Will they live in the sea? No. It seems to me I have sufficient evidence in the word that all flesh shall see the salvation of God, and behold it together.

Yours, waiting for eternal salvation,
GEO. L. HART.

From Bro. J. W. Burnham.

BRO. GRANT:—I have read the Crisis with much pleasure and profit. I believe in the return of the Nobleman, and rejoice that I have the privilege of hearing through the Crisis from the tempted and tried ones who are endeavoring to walk in the unity of the Spirit and the bonds of peace, looking unto Jesus the author and finisher of their faith, who will soon come and receive his weary ones to himself. I live in a place where human creeds and the doctrines of men are taught. Men, women and children have been called upon to rally around the standards of fallible men. A few have not responded to the call. These are enjoying the light of that perfect law of liberty—the word of God. They have been strengthened and encouraged by the labors of Bro. C. F. Sweet, who has contrasted the plain declarations of the word of God with the traditions of men as taught from "the sacred desk" in so clear and forcible a manner that light, the pure light of gospel truth, is shedding its genial rays, for which we thank God and take courage.

Newstead, N. Y. J. W. BURNHAM.

From Bro. S. D. Daniels.

BRO. GRANT:—Not long since I was away on business, and on the Sabbath attended a good meeting. The Spirit of God was there, and the preacher, (Bro. Woodruff) seemed to possess a good share of the Spirit of God. The Lord helped him. But there was another meeting near by, called the come-outers. In the evening I had a curiosity to attend. After being there a while I made up my mind that they were not of us. Such a meeting I never attended before. They claimed to be now in the New Jerusalem walking the golden streets, and were beyond the reach of the devil, and had power to cast out devils, and did it by striking the subject on the head and shoulders, etc., and had got beyond the word and were led entirely by the Spirit. They had no need of the word and are not looking for Christ as they once were, but did not explain how or when they expected him. O how people are led away in these last days of peril and apostasy!

The devil is making a grand rally of his forces, mustering all he can. I suppose he has an army in the United States of about two millions which belong to the spiritualistic theory. God save his people from falling into error, and help us to fight valiantly for the right, is the prayer of your unworthy brother.

W. Suffield, Ct. S. D. DANIELS.

From Bro. C. P. Dow.

BRO. GRANT:—I wish to say through this medium to the many friends west that have written to me concerning visiting them during my western tour, that I will so arrange as to meet their wishes as far as practicable. I expect to leave home about the 23d of June, and shall be at Champlain, N. Y., over Sabbath, the 26th; hence, those addressing me near the time of my leaving might direct to that place, and as I may direct through the Crisis.

Last Sabbath was my last day in Stanbridge for the present. It was a communion season. The congregations were large, and the interest good. May God keep those I leave behind, and bless those I may visit; bless me, and make me a blessing.

Stanbridge, C. E. C. P. DOW.

BRO. E. D. LYON writes from Ottawa, Ill.:—"I have taken the Crisis nearly a year, and can truly say it is the best paper I ever saw. I have been greatly strengthened and encouraged in perusing its pages. I feel like trying to do what I can, that others may know and believe the truth.

I sent some of my papers and some tracts to a friend who had heard but very little of the doctrine of the Second Advent. He was very much pleased with them, and says the Bible is a book which he now can understand, and wishes me to send in his name as a subscriber for the Crisis."

P. GREEN writes from Berlin Falls, N. H.:—"I prize the Crisis as of all papers the best. It is truly food to the hungry soul to read the stirring letters, and the accounts of revivals in different places, for we have little preaching from brethren in this place. I do hope and pray that some of the preachers of the truth may be sent this way, filled with the Spirit and power of Elijah's God, for we very much need a revival amongst us here in Berlin."

BRO. H. W. DANN writes from West Troy, N. Y.:—"We had a sermon last Sabbath, (29th ult), on 'The word grew and multiplied'; and you will no doubt think it strange when I say that it furnished the theme of a war sermon. I expect before long we shall hear war even from the beautiful words of Jesus—'Blessed are the peace makers.' My soul cries, 'O Lord! how long?'"

Obituaries.

PAULINA SLATER.

Died in Granby, June 3d, of consumption, Paulina, wife of Bro. Horatio Slater, aged fifty-four years.

Her sufferings, although long protracted and severe, were endured with christian patience and resignation. She had often expressed a desire to live until Jesus came, yet meekly submitted to God's will, calmly arranged the affairs of her house and those of her funeral as far as she had any choice, bade adieu to friends and relations, exhorting them to be faithful and meet her in the coming kingdom, and peacefully fell asleep in Jesus, leaving a full and perfect evidence of the sustaining hope of the gospel, and of having part in the first resurrection. At her request the resurrection was the subject of the funeral discourse, presented by Bro. A. M. Higgins on the Sabbath following her death, from the words of Jesus in John 11: 25. May the Lord comfort, strengthen and sustain her now lonely and feeble companion, and all the friends that mourn.

"Sweet be thy rest till Christ bid thee arise,
To greet him in triumph descending the skies."

Then again we hope to meet thee,
When the griefs of earth are fled,
And in paradise to greet thee,
Where no farewell tears are shed.
Oh death, thou cruel enemy,
Thou last to be destroyed,
Soon to thy work an end shall be,
Through Jesus Christ the Lord.

LAURA K. NEWELL.

ASENATH HAMMOND.

Died in Vineland, Wis., May 22d, of consumption, Widow Asenath Hammond, aged fifty-two years.

After a long season of protracted suffering, this dear mother and sister now rests from her labors; her last tear is shed, her last groan uttered. She loved the doctrines of the Bible, and was a believer in life only through Christ. She leaves two sons and two daughters with their companions, a large circle of sisters, an aged mother and other relatives, to mourn the loss of one dearly beloved and highly prized. She sleeps peacefully, awaiting the glorious morning of the resurrection, when death shall be banished, and the voice of Jesus will bid her arise.

There no weary midnight watching,
There no parting tear is shed;
There no sighs of bitter anguish
For the loved ones cold and dead.
No sad burial procession
Moves along that golden street,
And our grief will turn to gladness
When our loved ones there we meet.

MARY L. PRATT.

CHARLES W. AND ADDISON MERRIL SMITH.

Also, a brother of the above, Addison Merril Smith, died April 26th, 1863, at Bolton, C. E., aged three years, eleven months, and eighteen days.

Thus kind parents have been made sad, yet they "sorrow not even as others who have no hope." Their youngest they hope to meet upon the verdant fields of Eden, and the elder, who died in the army, they have reason to hope repented and died trusting in a mighty Savior. The funeral of the first named was attended by the writer. Text, John 11: 35,—"Jesus wept." This is the "night of weeping," but lo! the morning of joy cometh speedily. Let us be ready to hail the mighty triumph.

C. P. DOW.

DEA. RICHARD BOYNTON.

Our dear brother has for many years been a deacon in the Baptist church in Jefferson, but for the eight years past a firm believer in the great and glorious truths of the coming and kingdom of Christ, which hope cheered him to the last, and he was ready to bear public testimony to the truth he loved. He called for Bro. Wyman and made arrangements for his funeral, which was attended by the writer May 29th. He leaves a dear wife and children to mourn their loss, but they sorrow not as those which have no hope.

S. K. PARTRIDGE.

Summary of News.

DOMESTIC.

New York, June 7. Secretary Chase is understood to have closed the negotiation of a loan of fifty millions with the New York banks. He is to draw the money as needed, and in return give the banks six per cent. certificates of deposit to be used at the clearing house. Secretary Chase waits ten days if required by any banks, or, in in other words, the certificates can be paid in on account of the loan. This, will, it is said, prevent stringency in the money market. There is a strong pressure to induce him to accept some foreign bids, so as to place at his command sufficient gold to break the speculative movement for a rise.

The blockade of the Mississippi at Greenville, Miss., is confirmed. The steamer Henry Ames, Mississippi, Olive Branch, and others were lying above Greenville waiting the result of the engagement, which had been going on for two days between the batteries and gunboats. But little if any impression had been made on the batteries.

Guerrillas were again committing outrages in Louisiana. One man was murdered in cold blood.

June 7. The headquarters of the 7th corps were yesterday shelled vigorously for half an hour. Only eight men were killed and wounded.

About 4 P. M. the rebels made another desperate charge on the works and were again repulsed.

White House, June 8. Gen. Sheridan has gone on another very important raid, which, if successful, will be one of the most beneficial as it is one of the most hazardous expeditions of the war.

June 11. News from the front this evening is of the most cheerful character. Two officers have just arrived bringing the joyful news of the capture of Fort Darling. An order conveying this intelligence was read to the army last evening, and the cheers of our soldiers were heard for miles around.

New York, June 9th. The Times' dispatch, dating Monday, says the direction and disposition of our lines have been materially changed since Friday's fight at many places, and especially in front of the 6th and 8th corps. Our line is well fortified, but at other points we are subject to a galling enfilading fire, against which it is almost impossible to fortify.

Detailed accounts by correspondents with Gen. Grant's army show that our forces are busily engaged in digging, intrenching, skirmishing and sharp shooting. Both armies evidently hold positions of great strength, which will probably be overcome by some strategic move not yet publicly developed.

New York, June 10th. The Times gives an account of Gen. Averill's operations in his expedition to distract the attention of Morgan and other rebel commanders from an expedition against Gen. Crook, and says Averill was highly successful.

He kept Morgan with five thousand men near Wytheville until Gen. Crook completed his work, and then moved to join Crook. On the way he encountered Morgan, and though outnumbered two to one he found it necessary to make a stand. For eight hours Averill withstood assault after assault, holding his ground until dark. Averill then moved off, Morgan not deeming it advisable to follow, and eventually fell in with Crook after having several skirmishes and meeting a force of fifteen hundred under Jenkins, whom he flanked. At this time his command was entirely out of ammunition. Averill was badly wounded in the forehead, but retained his command.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, June 10th, 7 A. M.

To Major-General Dix:

Owing to the break in the telegraph line no dispatches were received yesterday from the Army of the Potomac. Dispatches have arrived this morning with dates to 9 o'clock last night. There was no firing on Wednesday except by pickets. Arrangement has been effected by which the killed and wounded are gathered in. There were no movements yesterday.

A deserter who came into our lines reports that Gen. Hunter's victory near Staunton was much more complete than the Richmond papers reported. He says Hunter took twenty cannon, many prisoners, and a large quantity of stores. The defeated force was recently a part of Breckenridge's command. Gen. Hunter's report has not yet been received.

E. M. STANTON, Secretary of War.

Washington, June 10. Military men regard the aspect of affairs at the front as very encouraging, and well calculated to inspire hopes of success.

The Republican of this evening says: "On the 10th day of June, 1863, the situation before Vicksburg was not half so promising for the evacuation of that place on the 4th of July following as is the situation to-day before Richmond."

The Medical Department have had nearly all the wounded who had been congregated at White House removed to hospitals here or at Alexandria.

The deaths have greatly diminished within a day or two, and a very large portion of the men will soon be convalescent.

Delegations and individuals from the Baltimore Convention have thronged the Executive mansion to-day, congratulating the President on his nomination. Mr. Lincoln has been in excellent spirits, and has been reminded of many pleasant anecdotes.

New York, June 11. The Tribune's headquarters correspondent, writing June 8, says our left wing now extends across the railroad on the eastern bank of the Chickahominy. An advance in that direction was made yesterday morning by Griffin's and Cutler's divisions of the 8th Corps, and Summer's Bridge was taken after a short encounter. The 18th Massachusetts regiment advanced to the river, driving the enemy's pickets and occupying the bridge. Two North Carolina regiments were on the opposite side of the river, and a rebel brigade was at Meadow station. Our position is impregnable against any assault.

The Times' dispatch, dated Staunton, June 6th, says: We met the rebels in force fifteen miles north of here and whipped them thoroughly. The rebels were commanded by Jones and Imboden. The former was killed. We pursued them to-day with little resistance, captured six guns, hundreds of prisoners and many hundred dollars worth of stores.

The Tribune's correspondent off Wilmington says the gunboat Victoria drove the blockade runner Georgiana McCew ashore on the 2d inst., and captured the captain, twenty-nine of the crew and three passengers, including a bearer of important dispatches from London to Richmond. The McCew was constructed for a war vessel and was partially destroyed by fire by our men, who were finally driven off by rebel batteries.

ANDREW JOHNSON.—Andrew Johnson, the Union candidate for Vice President, rose, like Mr. Lincoln, from the people, and even if possible, from a humbler origin. He was born in Raleigh, N. C., Dec. 29th, 1808. When only ten years of age, he was apprenticed to a tailor, and worked at his trade until he was seventeen years of age. He never attended school, but by diligent study by himself, acquired the rudiments of education. The statement has been made, we know not with how much truth, that he was indebted to his wife for the only instruction he received in his first effort at learning. Having moved to Greenville, East Tennessee, he was chosen mayor in 1830. He afterwards served in the Legislature, and in 1843 he was elected to Congress and remained in that body until 1853. He was then Governor of Tennessee four years, and in 1857 was chosen United States Senator.

During the whole of this period he was a Democrat of the genuine Jackson stamp, devoted in heart and soul to that Union which had enabled him to rise from poverty, ignorance and obscurity to station and commanding influence. When, therefore, the rebellion broke out, he never wavered for a moment, but, with great personal sacrifices, threw himself into the cause of loyalty. He was appointed by Mr. Lincoln, Military Governor of Tennessee, and his vigilant and effective services in that capacity have been of immense value to the country. Though himself a slaveholder, Mr. Johnson soon saw in slavery the cause and cement of the rebellion, and promptly took ground for its overthrow. In this respect, as well as on all the other vital questions of the day, he stands side by side with Mr. Lincoln, and if chosen to the Vice Presidency, as there is no rational doubt that he will be, he will become a powerful auxiliary to the former in completing the great work of national restoration.—Journal.

FROM THE REBEL PAPERS.—The Richmond Examiner calculates that the loss of men in the opposing armies during the past month of May amounted to 70,000, and cyphers up the Confederate share of the loss of nineteen thousand. The rebels have lost nineteen Generals in Virginia alone, in the pending Virginia campaign.

The rebel Congress has passed a bill providing for the impressment of food, if necessary, for the supply of the army.

The subscription price of the Examiner is fifty dollars per annum, and twenty dollars per hundred is charged to dealers.

☞ The New York Times says that Secretary Chase on his recent visit to that city, favorably entertained certain offers for a loan from England, Holland and Germany, and returned to Washington with the purpose of accepting them.

THE ENGLISH CHASING THE PIRATE FLORIDA.—There is something very significant in the following intelligence, provided it can be relied on as true. It is stated that information has been received by the brigantine Prince Alfred, which left Barbadoes on the 9th ult., that the English war steamer greyhound had been dispatched the day previous in search of the rebel steamer Florida. She had received sealed dispatches, which were not to be opened until the Florida was under the range of their guns.—Journal.

Items.

☞ The contract for dead horses in the Federal army has just been let for £12,000. The horses' shoes are first pulled off, which are worth about 4s., the hoofs fetch 8s., the tail 2s; the tallow is not worth much; the hide is worth something; the shinbones are sold to be converted into cane-heads, knife-handles, etc.

☞ In New Zealand, when a person becomes an habitual drunkard, the fact is published in the papers by the magistrate before whom the case may be proven, and all persons are warned against selling the drunkard liquor under the penalty of $20 fine and three months imprisonment.

☞ A lady of Gorham, Me, aged three score and ten years, went into the field with her hoe, the 18th ult., covering 1100 hills of corn, drove up her cows, milked them before sunset, and retired to rest in good season.

☞ Mr. Giddings, whose death occurred so suddenly on the 27th of May, was in his 69th year. He was as prominent for years as any Northern man in the slavery contest of the last quarter of a century, but the latter part of his life was passed in comparative obscurity.

☞ It is reported from Paris that the Emperor has undertaken to predict the triumph of the Northern arms in the United States, and that he was now ready to declare himself our firm friend.

☞ Late news from Greece gives a very unfavorable account of political matters there. The young King can only count on two vessels of his fleet as being manned by loyal crews.

☞ Letters from St. Petersburg announce that the Grand Duke Michael has gone to Anauna in order to facilitate another great emigration of Circassians, exceeding 100,000 persons of that nationality.

☞ The steamer Berkshire was burned on the Hudson river last evening, while en route from this city to Hudson. The vessel is a total loss. Forty lives are reported lost.

☞ There are now four hundred and fifty-six paymasters in the army, including forty recently appointed. Their aggregate annual salaries amount to about $1,000,000.

☞ The President has sent a message to Congress recommending the repeal of the $300 exemption clause, which prevents the army from being kept up to its maximum strength.

Tremont Grove and Campmeeting.

This meeting will be held upon the same ground as last year, one half mile from the Tremont Depot, West Wareham, Mass., on the Old Colony and Cape Cod R. R., thirty-five miles from Boston, and eighteen from New Bedford. It will commence with preaching in the grove Sunday, June 26th, and continue till July 5th. We hope to greet the many we have greeted there before, and many more beside. Shall we not see many from Portsmouth, Concord, Lawrence, and from towns round about Boston? Encouraged by the blessings of God upon this meeting in the past, we expect a larger and a better one this year. Brn. Grant, Hastings, and M. Batchelor are among those engaged to preach the word. Will Bro. Munger attend? Other preachers who may come in the name of the Lord will find a cordial welcome. We, however, assume no responsibilities save with such as are engaged. None are desired who come in their own name or in the name of some strange doctrine. The objects of this meeting are to comfort and strengthen the saints and save men "from the wrath to come." I propose Friday, June 24th, as a day of fasting and prayer for divine blessing upon the meeting to this end. "Our help is in the name of the Lord." H. F. CARPENTER.

P. S. Board will be provided on the ground on terms as reasonable as the times will admit; also accommodations for those who wish to board themselves. Lodgings can be secured in private dwellings by coming early. Every one should come prepared with bedding for camp life. Those who can should bring tents. Fare from Boston and New Bedford reduced to half price. Come!

In behalf of Committee. H. F. C.

Notice.

There will be a meeting (D. V.) in the barn of Bro. Lauren Grinnell, in West Barre, Orleans Co., N. Y., about three-fourths of a mile east of the West Barre post-office, commencing Friday, July 1st, 1864, and continuing over the following Lord's day. Brethren waiting for the coming of Jesus, and all christians, are cordially invited to come and work for the salvation of men, and so be built up themselves. The Lord cometh.

Those coming by railroad will stop at Albion, on the Rochester and Niagara Falls Road, and provision will be made to convey them to the meeting, which is about eight miles from that place. Brethren who intend to come will do well to drop a line, stating how many will be with them, and what day they will come, directed to me at Brockport.

Teams will meet the cars at noon, at Albion, on Friday and Saturday, the 1st and 2nd inst., and the morning train from the east, Sunday. So any persons coming from the west will come on an early train, and wait in Albion about two hours. If brethren will write me as above, it will cost them only three or four cents, and may save some expense to the brethren who furnish teams. Come praying and expecting a blessing.

JOS. D. BROWN.

Notice.

The R. I. and East Conn. Conference will hold its next session at River Point, commencing the first Wednesday in July, at 2 o'clock P. M., and hold over Lord's day.

Brethren and sisters are invited to attend. Come praying that God will bless our labors.

A. C. GREENE, Secretary.

Notice.

The Advent Society formerly worshiping at Goodrich's Block finding their Hall was not convenient to accommodate the congregation, have hired a larger and more central one of the Sons of Temperance, Barn's Block, corner of Main and Vernon Streets, opposite Baptist church, and will hold meetings there every Lord's day. Our numbers and the interest of the meeting are increasing. May the good Lord still continue to bless us, is my humble prayer. THOS. R. WEAVER.

Tent Meeting.

A tent meeting will be held in North Adams, Mass., commencing June 30th, and holding over the 4th of July, on land owned by Bro. Morton, at the head of Eagle street, on the north side of the village. A general attendance is desired from the surrounding towns. Come, brethren, and work together for the salvation of our fellow men. A general invitation is extended to the preaching brethren. Barn Meeting.

The Lord willing, there will be a barn meeting in Mount Pleasant, the east part of Stetson, Me., commencing June 21st, at 5 o'clock P. M., and continue over the following Sunday, or longer if required. Brethren and sisters are invited to attend. Come with hearts full of faith, praying for the blessing of God upon the meeting and the community. Preachers of the word are especially invited. Come one, come all. S. HAMMONS.

Grove Meeting.

C. F. Sweet and F. Burr will hold a grove meeting on the farm of Lyman Morris, in the town of Springwater, Livingston Co., N. Y., to commence June 24th, at 8 o'clock, P. All may expect to find a home and entertainment during the meeting.

Prepare for Camp.

The Fourth Annual Camp and Grove meeting at Tremont, Mass., will commence (D. V.,) June 26th, and continue over July 4th. Full particulars will will be given soon. Will churches that can be represented at that meeting intimate the same to me, as it may assist in obtaining a reduction of fare? Come, all that are good and that seek good.

H. F. CARPENTER, Poultney, Vt.

Maine Western Quar. Conference.

We purpose to hold our next session at Brighton Hill, in Hebron, commencing June 17th, at 10 o'clock, A. M. Those coming on the cars will leave the Grand Trunk Road at Mechanic Falls, and take the Buckfield Branch train, stopping at Bence's Crossing. Inquire for Alvin Turner, Levi Stevens, W. Allen, or D. Fuller. They will either care for those that come, or direct to others who stand ready to help. Brethren, this is comparatively a new place for Advent preaching, and we desire that you should make sacrifices to attend. The ministers of our conference must be there, and those beyond its circle are cordially invited.

JAS. A. LIBBY.

Notice.

I. C. Wellcome & Co., now have a good assortment of English Bibles, books, tracts, and hymn books for sale, at the regular prices. Prices according to the quantities wanted. Sent by mail or express. Address I. C. WELCOME & Co., Yarmouth, Me.

Meeting in Kingston.

For the World's Crisis.

TEN YEARS AGO.

Ten years have passed away
Since my dear little boy was from me torn,
And in death's icy clasp
To the dark sepulchre I saw him borne.

O! I then had hoped ere this
My Savior would have come to earth again,—
Opened that little grave,

My hope has been deferred,
And often I've grown weary of delay;
But for these words, "I'll come,"
I should, ere this, have fainted by the way.

My hope is brighter now,
For signs are thickening fast on every hand;
Faith says, "A little while,

I know the promise stands
Firm as the throne of Him from whom it came;
Those who in Jesus sleep,
God will bring with him when he comes again.

Until that welcome morn
My babe must slumber in the cold, cold ground;
And all the saints of God

Oh, grant me patience, Lord,
To wait,—for that blest day will shortly come,—
And overcoming grace,
That I may sit with thee upon thy throne.

Bright city of my King!
Thy pearly gates I shortly hope to see;
And with the ransomed host
Be clad in robes of immortality.

Then will the mournful scene
I passed ten years ago be known no more;
But in my arms I'll clasp
My long lost boy, to part—oh, nevermore!

For the World's Crisis.

THAT ARTICLE.

How good,—how excellent it was! I have for several years been much interested in reading the writings of D. F. Newton; but one of the best things I have read from his pen is the article in the last Crisis on "STIFF NECKS AND STRAIT JACKETS." For years I have believed this to be the right principle, and I know what it is to be disfellowshiped, and have the cold shoulder turned towards me; and not that only, but to have false motives imputed because I not only believed such sentiments, but acted upon them. O! how many times have I exclaimed, "Would that sectarian walls were overthrown, and christians of every name united in the great work of soul-saving!"

I cannot believe that any of the organized churches constitute the church of Christ, but that those who are in Christ, whether belonging to them or not belonging, are the true church, established on the foundation—Christ, and ought not to be separated by any sectarian spirit from co-operating one with the other in the great essential work of winning souls to—what? The Methodist church? The Baptist churce? The Congregationalist? The Advent church? Nay, verily! but to the universal fold, where the "Good Shepherd" presides.

I do not believe for a moment that the "field" is limited to any of these sectarian inclosures, but is the "world" at large. Those who limit their reading to the books and periodicals published by their denomination, of necessity have a very circumscribed vision; they see none of God's workings beyond their own narrow limits; the reports borne on every breeze, of the outpouring of the Spirit in this and that place,—the thousands converted in other lands, through the faithful labors of those "who follow not us," are all unknown; therefore it is not so much a matter of surprise if such are found regarding their sect as the one especially chosen of God, and that there is but little accomplished beyond its limits. There may possibly be a few who, not being privileged with the opportunities afforded them for acquiring light and knowledge on the word of God, are accepted of him, and will be saved! That is the way the bigoted sectarian feels. The faults of other church members are viewed through a microscope; every church is corrupt but theirs; when their members are guilty of worldliness, covetousness, deceit, it is winked at, covered up, palliated, apologized for. If they hear of a revival in any other church—that backsliders are restored, sinners converted, they rejoice not, because "it does not build up our church"!

How is it with those who belong to and identify all their interests with the Church Universal? who greet as a brother and sister every one who is striving to do the will of God? They are as ready to extenuate faults in one as another; to co-operate with one as another in the work of God; to rejoice over the salvation of souls in one place as another. The brother and sister, though differing on some points of doctrine, are members of Christ's church, and as such are loved. The wanderer is restored to the great fold, and we rejoice. The sinner is accepted as a member of the household of God; we belong to the one great family, and we unite with the angels above in the song of triumph.

I honestly confess that I do not love an Adventist any better than any other ist, nor Adventism any better than any other ism, in itself considered; but I love all who do the will of my Father in heaven, whether they can tell all about the Abrahamic covenant, the restitution and kingdom, or not; and they are my brethren and sisters. I love, too, all sinners, Pharisees excepted,—may God forgive me if I do wrong in not loving them!

I admit I am just good for nothing to build up a sect,—ever was, ever shall be. I used to feel just as I now do and acted the same as I now do, in respect to this matter, when a member of the M. E. Church; and one of its members told me one day I was "not sectarian enough to be a Methodist"! Why? I never tried to convert a soul to Methodism in my life. I used to run in to the F. W. B. meetings and unite with them just as though I belonged to their church.

At one time God was pouring out his Spirit upon all the evangelical churches in the city. There were special services in them all. The Methodists were having a thronged house, and by scores were pressing forward to the altar for prayer. At the F. W. B. house there was a good interest, and many were seeking the Lord, but there was not apparently so much interest as at the former church. For a time I attended the M. E. church, but had but little freedom of labor. I felt a deep interest for the progress of the work at the F. W. B. meetings. I went there, and oh! what freedom God gave me in the work. His Spirit rested upon me, and operated through me, enabling me to lead souls to Christ.

In compliance with the earnest solicitation of some of my Methodist friends, I would go with them occasionally, but my heart—my work, was elsewhere. They did not understand it, but the Lord and I did. At the Methodist house there were many qualified to instruct and help souls in finding Christ. At the other place there were few to labor personally with the sinner, and to point out to them the simple way of faith. Hence my Father led me to go there, and impart that light which he had given me.

So you see, as I before remarked, I am good for nothing to build up a sect. I have not sectarianism enough to do it, and it may be true, as I have been sometimes told, "You are neither one thing nor another." Well, this I know, I love God with all my heart. I love those who are his, with a pure heart, fervently. I love to work for Jesus wherever I find an open door, and my poor heart rejoices wherever I see one enlisting on the Lord's side. Glory to God, I know something about that "religion which rises above all merely human distinction, and finds fellowship with kindred spirits without regard to denominational distinctions."

The principal objection brought against me by my Advent friends for thus laboring with other churches is this:—"They are opposed to us and our faith, and by uniting with them in their meetings your influence sustains them in their opposition, and injures us." Now while I admit there are those among them who oppose some of the views held by Adventists, I do not find any christians among them who are opposed to the coming of the Lord. None of those with whom I labor in christian fellowship love me the less because of my faith in the speedy return of our Lord. Of course there are those in all churches, Advent ones not excepted, who do not love the appearing of Jesus, because they do not love Him. While I do not greet such in christian love and union, I will strive as I have opportunity to win them to Christ, that they may love him, and then they will, as a matter of course, love his coming.

May the words of Jesus to his disciples, when they entreated him to forbid the man from casting out devils in his name, because he followed not with them, be engraven on all our hearts: "Forbid him not; for there is no man which shall do a miracle in my name, that can lightly speak evil of me."

OUR HOME IN GLORY.

"Let not your heart be troubled: ye believe in God, believe also in me. In my Father's house are many mansions: if it were not so, I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you. And if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again, and receive you unto myself; that where I am, there ye may be also."—John 14: 1-3.

"Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him."—1 Cor. 2: 9.

Beloved, how such promises as these should stimulate us to diligence and activity in the service of the Lord! The children of darkness are making every exertion, using every means to secure the mansions which to-day are, and tomorrow are not; and how ought we to act who expect soon to possess the everlasting mansions in glory, there to greet our Father, King Jesus, the archangels, the angels, the martyrs, and all who have died in faith! Is not such a home worth striving for, yea, worth dying to obtain? "Every man that hath this hope in him, purifieth himself even as he (Christ) is pure."—1 John 3: 3. Let us be found daily in our closets, fervently praying for the guidance of the Spirit of God, and let us continually examine ourselves to see whether we have "the fruit of the Spirit," namely, "love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance."—Gal. 5: 22, 23. "As many as are led by the spirit of God, they are the sons of God."—Rom. 8: 14.

Fellow pilgrims, let us see to it that our lives show to all around us that here we have no continuing city, but seek one to come, whose builder and maker is God. And when this transitory world shall have passed away, and the King of glory appears, may it be ours to receive the welcome invitation, "Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world." "SMOKING PREACHERS."

Their record ought to be written, if not "on high," on earth, for certainly they are deserving of some note in these days of "Temperance and Moral Reform Societies," as being capable of withstanding a great amount of light and argument, scriptural and that deducible from other premises.

The ministers of the word of God should be "ensamples unto the flock of God," and the flock should follow their example, unless they be smoking, snuffing, (shall I say tea-drinking?) or grog-drinking parsons; when all would doubt the utility, if not the christianity, of following their example. Would not this expensive and filthy habit on the part of ministers as well as laymen come under the scriptural designation of "works of the flesh," or lusts of the flesh? Let me relate an incident.

An eminent minister of my acquaintance, now deceased, who was until within a few years a "smoking preacher," although not a preacher of smoke, said that he was walking the streets of Rochester, N. Y., the place of his residence, with a lighted cigar in his mouth, as the better class of loafers and smokers would do, when an avowed infidel of his acquaintance met him, and instantly burst into a fit of laughter. The preacher wishing to know what pleased him so, was answered with:

"Oh! I was thinking how you would look going up to meet the Lord amid wreaths of tobacco smoke, with that cigar in your mouth."

The minister felt the force of this unexpected yet hard hit from his infidel neighbor, and resolved from that time to amend, which he did.

But as I do not intend to bestow more attention upon the class whose fame I write to immortalize, than they deserve, I will proceed to say what may be and has been justly said about the class now under notice. It has been said that they are,

1. Rather brilliant preachers. Such preachers are justly noted. Spurgeon, Newman Hall and others belong to this class; they are brilliant preachers. But perhaps the smoking preachers under notice do not quite rank with these men. Spark and fire are often seen about them, even many times a day. They have much to do with caloric; indeed it is one of the indispensables with them. We did not say the fire of genius or wit. If any one wishing to oppose the smoking preachers should dare to suggest that the brilliancy was not in their sermons, let him take notice, I did not say that, did I? But to proceed.

2. They are warm preachers. This is considered as an excellence in a preacher. We love such. And really, how can it be otherwise with the class I describe? Who can have fire in close contiguity many times a day and not feel it? Therefore it must be so with these preachers. If it should be asserted that the fire in this case is nearer the head than the heart, I should not incline to dispute it. Or even if some might be bold enough to say that the fire was nearer the nose than the brains, I would not think it best to controvert that point, but would admit it.

3. They are fragrant preachers, if not "a sweet smelling savor," there is a "savor" about them, it may be sweet smelling to some, but not to all. They have so much to do with an odorific narcotic that it cannot well be otherwise, so they do not deserve praise. If any should claim that the fragrance did not so much appertain to their sermons or to themselves, to their good, exemplary lives, as to their clothing, they will not be disputed, and are not alone in that opinion. And perhaps we need not to say, that this "savor" of theirs not only identifies the person, but also his study, books, manuscripts, and, indeed, whatever he handles or comes in contact with, so that disguise is impossible. He cannot waste his sweetness or fragrance, unless he renounces companionship with his kind, and literally wastes his "sweetness on the desert air." It is poor, because it is unsuccessful, policy with him, to be a hypocrite in this matter, his fragrance will reveal him. Further, it must be allowed—

4. That they are skillful preachers. Give them a trial. Make an onset on their darling habit; and although neither Scripture, good sense or good breeding will defend them, yet they will manifest skill in an effort to make "the worse appear the better reason." Arguments may be drawn from health, neatness, economy and Scripture, against them, and they will assert "divine right" to do wrong, and almost make you think that they are satisfied with their own arguments. At any rate, they will make the most of their scanty means of defense.

5. They are somewhat considerate preachers, for whatever smoky things may occupy their brains, and be carried by them into the pulpit and proclaimed by them therefrom, you will never see them smoke there. Tobacco may leave its traces even in pulpits, and proof may be abundant in the form of certain dark and uncomely spots on the floor, that the demon has been there in company with some preacher, but you will look in vain for a pipe. These considerate preachers know better than to leave their pipes in the "sacred desk." Does it not almost seem that they know that this kind of puffing ought not to be done there?

6. I have seen it asserted that "right or wrong," smoking preachers were becoming rather scarce. Well, really they ought to be. Perhaps they have been more abundant, but we fear there are too many of them now. Would not any cleanly, well dressed and otherwise respectable "clergyman," feel insulted if you should offer him a pipe, and ask him if he smoked, and answer NO, with an emphasis that might well startle you?

Seriously, my brethren, is it not time to abstain from this filthy and expensive habit? Reflect, if you use "the weed," I can give it up, I ought to give it up, and I will give it up, and do it now. Who among the smoking "clergy" will ponder the path they tread and "reform and believe the glad tidings, the reign of heaven appeareth?" This is the time for right action, now, earnest and always. Your brother, but not a smoker,

For the World's Crisis.

THE TWO TABERNACLES:

OR,

THE TYPE AND THE ANTITYPE.

Once we read that God did tabernacle among men. At an early period there was a sore famine throughout the land, and the sons of Israel were obliged to go down from Canaan to Egypt to buy food for those at home and themselves. Now when they had gone down the second time after much fear and trembling on account of the usage they had received from the Governor of the land, they learned that the Governor was their brother Joseph, whom they had sold into bondage some years before. Then did Joseph send for his father and all to remove into the land of Egypt, and we read that there were threescore and six souls that came into Egypt. But in a few years Joseph died and was buried, and the king also, and on his throne arose a strange king who subjected the Israelites to bondage. The Israelites increased in numbers, and as time rolled on, God having heard their cries, took them out of the the land with a strong arm. It was then that God was their commander and king. It was he who led them safely through deserts and lonely wilds, and when danger was near it was God who saved them from the fierce foe. It was God who upset the magnificent chariot with its angry rider amid the roaring billows of the Red sea. Then it was that God did show how strong his power was, and how weak the strength of an earthly foe. We read that God manifested himself by the cloud by day, and fire by night, as he led the Israelites onward. But finally he halts, and the command goes forth to rest for a while. The tents are pitched, and each one reclines beneath his own tent. But where is the palace for Jehovah the king? We see none. But, hark! the command is given to his servant Moses to order the people to build him the sacred structure called "the tabernacle." The materials are brought, the workmen proceed, and soon the structure is completed, and the palace is ready for habitation.

Will you go with me, dear reader, and view for a moment the heavenly scene? Lo, the cloud radiant with glory descends and overspreads the house and fills the "sacred palace" full of the glory of God. And now the "King of kings" takes his earthly throne between the cherubims above the "ark," beyond the veil in the "holy of holies." From thence his laws go forth and he rules the people with kingly authority. His glory and pomp far excel the kings of earth. His palace is costly, overlaid with gold, and the furniture, how rich! There also are the royal guard and others who execute offices belonging to royal dignity, who furnish banquets, etc.; and again we notice those who entertain the king with music, vocal and instrumental; and there is the vicar also, who comes into the king's presence as he desires. This is the tabernacle of the living God.

But this was only a tabernacle among sinful, dying men. It did not represent but a unit of that glory which shall be revealed to man when the angels of God shall proclaim, "Behold, the tabernacle of God is with men, and he will dwell with them, and they shall be his people, and God himself shall be with them and be their God." Rev. 21: 3. When the saints shall all be immortal, and the curse removed, and all shall be pure, then shall be seen the glory of God, which shall far outshine the dazzling sun. Then no more shall the dark night overcloud our weeping eyes, for "there shall be no night," neither sorrow or sighing; no more shall the grave claim his victims, for then shall come to pass the saying, "O grave, where is thy victory? O, death, where is thy sting?"

"Pilgrim, lift up thy head, soon the kingdom will come,
And the saints then in glory appear;
In their fair Eden home, with their king ever roam,
And his hand wipe away every tear."

Would you enjoy eternal life with Jesus at last? Be faithful and watch. Would you see the tabernacle not made with hands and share its glories forever? Then keep a close watch over yourself, and be sure and have the wedding garment on when the Master comes. The end is at hand. Are you ready to meet the Lord in peace and hear him say,—"Come, ye blessed of my Father"?

CHRIST A PRESENT HELP.

When gathering clouds around I view,
And days are dark and friends are few,
On Him I lean, who not in vain
Experienced every human pain.
He sees my griefs, allays my fears,
And counts and treasures up my tears.

If aught should tempt my soul to stray
From heavenly wisdom's narrow way,
To fly the good I would pursue,
Or do the things I would not do,—
Still He who felt temptation's power,
Shall guard me in that dangerous hour.

When vexing thoughts within me rise,
And sore dismayed my spirit dies;
Yet He who once vouchsafed to bear
The sickening anguish of despair,
Shall sweetly soothe, shall gently dry,
The throbbing heart, the streaming eye.

When mourning o'er some stone I bend,
Which covers all that was a friend,
And from her voice, her hand, her smile,
Divides me for a little while,—
Thou, Savior, mark'st the tears I shed,
For thou didst weep o'er Lazarus dead.

And oh! when I have safely pass'd
Through every conflict but the last,
Still, still unchanging watch beside
My painful bed, for thou hast died;
Then point to realms of endless day,
And wipe the latest tear away.

CHRISTIAN UNION.

"That they all may be one; as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us; that the world may believe that thou hast sent me."—JOHN 17: 21.

Before Jesus ascended to heaven, he offered up one fervent petition to his Father in behalf of his humble followers, and his petition was, "That they all may be one;" as if he had said, Father, I have left the glories of heaven; I had descended upon the sin-polluted earth, and have planted the tree of love. Let the plant be watered with the dew of heaven; and let it flourish and bring forth fruit abundantly in the vineyard of the Lord. He designed that all hatred, wrath, malice, contention and every evil work should be done away; all the works of darkness put off. Love is to succeed. Instead of being arrayed in parties, like men of the world, we should be perfectly joined together in love.

The union between the members of Christ's church is not to be measured by the standard of earthly associations. That holy, divine union, that oneness which obtained between God and his Son, was to characterize the disciples of Christ. Was there ever a jarring feeling between them? There was a harmony of feeling, and unbroken fellowship between them.

This is the standard of church fellowship. This divine union is the model for union among the members of Christ. As Jesus and his Father were one, so are all the followers of Christ to be one.

Beloved, when I think of the fervent prayer of the great Captain of our salvation, that believers in him might be one in the same manner as he and his Father are one; when I meditate on this divine standard of fellowship and communion, I am led to fear that the church is not at present in that state of perfect love to Christ and all his followers that the prayer of the blessed Savior implies. Is it not high time to rally around the banner of the cross with such a spirit of entire consecration as shall dispel every unhallowed affection, and create a bond of union that will be perpetuated in the kingdom of God? Come! daughter of Zion; come, ye virgins that are honored with the privilege of giving the bridegroom a welcome to his kingdom and glory; come one and all, and if we have any differences, let us abandon them at the foot of the cross; let us lay aside every weight, and be prepared for the kingdom when the last trump shall sound. Let us in love unfeigned move together in the work of the Lord, and be crowned together in the kingdom of our Lord.

FAMILY OBLIGATIONS.

"All Scripture is given by inspiration of God and is profitable."—2 Tim. 3: 16.

The gospel of Jesus Christ and the apostles worketh salvation, a share in this life, but the "eternal weight" in the life which is to come, where life will be more abundant, John 10: 10. We love life, the little we have here all mixed up with sorrow and death as it is, yet we cling to it. We see and know that all creation groans, waiting for deliverance which cannot come until God's appointed time. But very few seem to know that the pure gospel of Jesus written and engraven upon the heart is able to remove in a measure and in the present tense the bitterness and woe of a fallen state. Let us for a few moments apply the gospel rule, and see how good it will make even fallen creatures.

The greater part of us have formed marriage relations. Let us turn our thoughts in that direction, and consider what God requires of us as husbands and wives, parents and children. We want a zeal that is according to knowledge in domestic life as well as in every other relation. We must not trust to our feelings alone without the word of God, although the child of God is doubtless guided by the Spirit into the narrow way many times while ignorant of that which is written. The words of Jesus Christ and the apostles will judge us in the last day, or rather those that reject Jesus and believe not. See John 12: 48. The child of God must judge himself by their words as he passes along, and if his heart condemns him not then has he confidence towards God; but if his own heart condemns him, God is greater. 1 John 3: 20, 21.

Peter tells husbands to dwell with them (wives) according to knowledge. 1 Peter 3: 7. Then it seems they need a knowledge of the matter. Let us turn to Eph. 5, commencing at the twenty-second verse and onward. Here we find the sequel to be that husband and wife are a representation of Christ and the church, and ought to feel this relation one to the other, only one is imperfect and temporary, while the other is perfect and eternal. Now viewing this matter from this stand-point, it is quite easy for the full grown christian to understand how he should feel and consequently treat his companion. But babes in Christ may need an explanation.

The Bible tells us that man was first formed, and that a part of the man was taken and a woman made from it. Gen. 2. Consequently she was bone of his bone, and flesh of his flesh. A pretty close relation that. Just so in regard to the church. Christ did not take on him the nature of angels, but the seed of Abraham. Hence we find him saying we are members of his body, of his flesh, and of his bones. Eph. 5: 30. Christ the head of the church, even so is the husband the head of the wife. Christ left his Father to win to himself a bride. So is the husband required to leave father and mother and join himself to his wife, and they two shall be one flesh; not the whole husband's family, or the whole wife's family, but they two. Then do not expect too much. Christ loved the church, and gave himself for it, that he might sanctify and cleanse it, and present it to himself without spot or wrinkle, or any such thing. Even so should the husband love his wife as his own body; and will not that love have a sanctifying influence upon the wife? Let the wife see that you are as willing to suffer yourself as you are that she should either mentally or physically. Try it, ye husbands, that want good wives, remembering he that toucheth God's elect toucheth the apple of his eye. Zech. 2: 8. This is God's rule.

Well, sisters, what is our duty as wives? Does not Christ require of his bride love, confidence, reverence and obedience? Yea, verily, and of the wife, too, in all things as it is fit in the Lord. Col. 3: 18. God's law must be obeyed, and if the ungodly husband interferes with God's commands, obey God rather and leave the consequences to be settled at the judgment, ever remembering that the effectual, fervent prayer of the righteous availeth much; Jam. 5; and while we are all weakness that all things are possible with God, even of stones to raise up seed unto Abraham. Christ says to his bride, "Come out from among them, and be separate, saith the Lord." 2 Cor. 6: 17. We also learn that the wife should be discreet, chaste, and a keeper at home. Tit. 2: 5. By this we do not understand that the wife should never be absent from home, for if so she could not obey the exhortation not to forsake the assembling of the saints, but that home should be a place of attraction to her, and that she should endeavor to render it so to every member of her family by her own good character and presence.

A few words more to parents and children, and I leave the subject for the consideration of those that want salvation. "Fathers, provoke not your children to wrath," but "bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord." If we do not want to provoke our children to wrath, we must not get angry ourselves; for if we cannot govern ourselves, we certainly are not fit to govern them. Let us look well to our own hearts, and be patient and firm, endeavoring to instruct rather than harden the tender minds of our children.

The instruction to children is, "Honor thy father and mother." Many are the reasons why children should regard parents with respect. Their age, their experience, their love are all worthy of reverence, and the thought that their gray hairs must be soon hid from our view in the cold grave should be enough to call forth our kindest feelings towards them. But after we have done the best that we can, we shall often find it necessary to forgive as we hope to be forgiven, and to confess faults, and the more stubborn we are about it the more pain the great Vine-dresser will have to inflict. For if we are branches that bear fruit, the Master will purge us that we may bear more fruit. John 15: 2. For we have got to be drilled to the great principle of love towards God and man, if we ever become heirs to Christ's kingdom and joint heirs with Jesus Christ. LAURA ANN WHEELER.

LOVE OF GOD.

If we would have the love of God dwelling in us, and union with the Savior, and enjoy day by day that peace that "passeth understanding," we must be crucified to the world. "If we love the world, the love of the Father is not in us." We learn in the word of God this great and important truth. May it govern all of our actions and words. We must make it a momentary work. O! that we may have strength to go forward in the path of duty; come life or death, praise or reproach, supported or deserted, may we keep in the footsteps of the meek and lowly Jesus, love him better than all the world. We should live as strangers and pilgrims, be willing to encounter the disapprobation of the gay and the fashionable, and even the hatred of our dearest friends.

Let us enter the straight and narrow path in good earnest. Although we find this narrow way extremely uncongenial to the growth of pride, it will only make us more humble, like our great Teacher, who says we must become like little children before we can enter the kingdom. In this evil day may we be kept in the fear and love of our heavenly Father. N. M. WELLS.

THE BIBLE.

The Bible, for more than a thousand years, has gone hand in hand with civilization, science, and law. It has never been behind the age—nay, it has always gone before it, like the pillar of fire before Israel in the wilderness. Its great principles of order, submission, and freedom, have been the stability of States. Its very presence among them has been a saving ark, a refuge, and a rest. How far even beyond the present time gleams the light of that wondrous book, which describes and promises true freedom and fraternity, that divine and universal brotherhood, of which the nations only dream? In a word, the Christian Revelation is the true salt of the earth, the vital force of communities and States. It alone regenerates while it preserves—preserves while it regenerates. "There never," says Lord Bacon, "was found in any age of the world, either religion or law, that did so highly exalt the public good as the Bible." D. T. T.

ECONOMY IN SOCIAL EXPENSES.

The movement of the ladies in behalf of economy of expenditure is especially important, in view of the fact that in this country the women determine the scale of living. It is one of the peculiarities of American social life. Why, we need not discuss here, but the women have an overruling influence on society. In all classes, it is the wife or daughter who determine the style of the home and the general rate of expenditure. The men are sufficiently extravagant and waste enough, but it is not generally in social expenses. The furniture, the dress and ornament of women and children, the number of servants, the style of living—all those little things which make up a great deal of the expense of the household—are legislated on and settled by the weaker sex. Now it happens that most of the luxuries and extravagances in this direction are of foreign source, and must be imported. When brought here, they do not (the most of them) add anything to the wealth of the country, and they must be paid for, to a considerable extent, in gold.

Our extravagance acts in two ways to injure the National cause. It diminishes the resources of the people for supporting the burdens of the war, and it raises the price of every article which the Government requires, or which the people consume. With gold at 200—as it might soon be, if this foolish waste continued—and every man, woman and child would receive only half a dollar's worth of commodities for every dollar, and so far be unable to help the Government, while the Government would pay double for all it bought, and each year be doubling the debt) and consequent taxation,) which it ought legitimately to incur. Economy, saving in luxuries and indulgences—especially the imported—will at once leave at freedom a large part of the annual savings of the country, to enrich its capital and to be placed in Government funds. The richer the people are, the more certainly will the taxes be met and the better the public credit. The higher the National credit, and the more raised for the war, by loans, the less circulation and the lower the premium on gold. This, of course, is clear to every one. A lessening of imports will also, to a certain degree, bring down the price of gold. All these principles are well known to the community; but the difficulty is to make individuals feel their responsibility. It is so very hard for each person to see that "he is the nation," that is, that the nation is made up of persons, and if each one is economical and invests his private savings in Government securities, the whole people will be paying their debt, and gold will go down.

All rational observers have seen from the beginning that the greatest danger to the North was the financial. It was certain that, ultimately, we must conquer the rebellion, but it might be through National bankruptcy, and that would be a defeat which would spread disaster over this continent difficult to imagine. This has been among the possibilities. At the rate of insane private expenditure, which has been seen during the past two years, we were rapidly hurrying toward this awful abyss. It is, in a moral point of view, remarkable that the innate good sense and the conscience of our community should not have seen earlier the dreadful want of harmony and propriety—even if no higher considerations were present—between a nation bleeding at every pore, wasting its life-blood and its wealth, and individvals reveling in extravagance, display and luxury.

This movement of the women is not a day too early for the national honor and conscience, or for the financial safety of the country. We are sure that nothing but want of proper instruction in certain elementary truths in political economy, has delayed such public action so long. And we know that none will be more persistent in it or more self-sacrificing, than the women of America. In many families, such economy has been commenced for many months and even such necessities as tea and sugar and coffee, have been absent from many tables for a considerable time.

There is, fortunately, no danger of our people over-doing economy. Our scale of living is so high that we can spare a great deal and never feel it. We all believe in good generous diet, and no doubt, one reason of the remarkable "efficiency" of labor in this country is to be found in the good living of all classes. We appreciate, also, the importance of keeping up the grace and comfort of life, for civilization itself depends on such matters. But we all, men and women, are in the habit of wasting our means on a vast number of "extravagances," which we could do quite as well without. And in this fearful struggle, even some things, which are ordinarily necessities, could be dispensed with for the sake of the National success.—N. Y. Times.

LARGE vs. SMALL POTATOES.—Eds. Prairie Farmer:—As the time for planting potatsoe has come, I will give you my experience for the past seven years. I procured a barrel of White Mexicans, and the first year I planted all without reference to size, but ever since, I have invariably planted those that were too small for eating, and always have cut them so that there would not be more than two eyes on each piece, and then plant in drills one piece in a place, (and if planting in hills, two pieces;) and the result has been less small potatoes every year. Last fall I sorted ten bushels, and got one and one fourth bushels of small ones; the balance were all of good size for the table. Now I have come to this conclusion—that it does not matter so much as to the size of the seed, as the amount, for I notice where people put in more seed, they get more small potatoes in proportion.—D. F. KINNY.—Prairie Farmer.

CARE OF STOVES AND PIPES.—When stoves are no longer needed, they are quite frequently set aside in an outbuilding, or other out of the way place, with no further thought, until again wanted for use. If neglected, the rest of the summer may injure them more than the whole winter's wear, particularly the parts made of sheet iron. They should be kept as free from dampness as possible, and occasionally cleaned if rust is observed. Our plan has been to apply a coating of linseed oil to the pipes before putting them away. It should be done while the pipes are warm, but should be done thoroughly. It is not particular that it should be linseed oil—this being mentioned as the cheapest—almost any grease will answer.—Telegraph.

TAR AND OIL FOR SEED CORN.—An Ohio farmer recommends strongly the preparation of seed corn by mixing it with tar and a little lard. Afterwards add some wood ashes and stir them together. This will make the seed much better to handle. He also uses the same preparation for his peas, beans, melons, pumpkins, etc. The editor of the Germantown Telegraph says he has for a number of years greased his Lima beans before planting, and never a single bean has failed in germinating. It is complete protection against wet weather which rots the beans, and frequently makes two or three plantings necessary.—Prairie Farmer.

SOAKING SEEDS.—The Chinese seldom sow a crop without having previously soaked their seeds in diluted manure, keeping them there until they begin to sprout. They hold that this not only gives the plants an early and vigorous start, but preserves the seeds from worms or birds. The practical results of Chinese agriculture are too important for us to speak of them with contempt. Would it not be well for us to use some safe steeps for our corn, squashes, melons, etc., as a general rule, and not as an exception?—Prairie Farmer.

BALLAST.

"What is ballast, father?" said Joseph, as he was reading a book about ships and shipping.

"Ballast, my boy," replied my father, is what they put into a ship when she is empty, in order to weight her, and make her sail steadily. Without ballast, she would be turned over by the high winds or heavy sea."

"And what do they use for ballast, papa?"

"In whatever port the ship may happen to be, the captain tries to get a cargo of goods which may be likely to sell well in the port the ship is going to; and in that case the cargo itself is the ballast; but when the captain can not get a cargo of goods, he is obliged to fill the hold, or bottom part of the ship, with stones, or gravel, or anything else that he can get, that may be heavy enough for the purpose. While you are speaking on this subject, Joseph, my thoughts go another way; and I am ready to say that I hope, as you go your voyage, you will take care to carry ballast, and that of the right kind."

"Carry ballast, father? Why, I am not a ship; nor yet am I going on a voyage, that I know of."

"No; but did you never hear of the 'voyage of life,' Joseph?"

"O, yes, I suppose you mean that this life is like a sea, and men and women are as the ships sailing on it."

"Yes, Joseph, and girls, too. I hope you have got ballast on board."

"Well, father, I can understand how I am like a ship on the sea of life; but what do you mean by my having ballast?"

"Knowledge, my boy. Knowledge is the ballast of the soul. Do you think you can get through the world without knowledge?"

"I suppose not, father, any better than a ship can cross the sea without ballast."

"Just so. But take care that you take the right sort of ballast. Suppose, now, a ship should be laden with nothing heavier than bundles of straw. Do you think it would sail with safety?"

"Well, I suppose that straw being so light, the ship would not be much safer than if it had nothing at all on board. But just tell me what you call a good cargo."

"Well, then, suppose you were to read nothing but story books; suppose you were to store your mind with no other knowledge than what you could gain from such books; would that be a good cargo for your ship?"

"I suppose, father, that would be like the cargo of straw. I should think that a good knowledge of English grammar, arithmetic, geography, and history would be the best sort of cargo to load my ship with."

"A very good cargo, Joseph; but not all that would be wanted."

"Well, then, father, I suppose I may add Greek, Latin, and French; and also Science."

"Very good. But, Joseph, your cargo would be wanting unless you had something that you have not yet mentioned. Where is your voyage on the sea of life to end?"

"In eternity, father."

"Yes, Joseph; we are all journeying to eternity. Now take your Bible, and read the third verse of the seventeenth chapter of John."

Joseph read: "And this is life eternal, that they might know Thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent."

Now, Joseph, you can tell me what knowledge will make your cargo complete. What is it?"

"The knowledge of Jesus Christ, father."

"Yes, my boy; grammar and arithmetic, science and languages, are more or less necessary for your own comfort and usefulness on the voyage of life; but you will not have a successful voyage unless you have as ballast the knowledge of Jesus Christ."

A HANDSOME SOUL.

One day last winter, a little boy from the South who was on a visit to the city, was taking his first lesson in the art of sliding down hill," when he suddenly found his feet in too close contact with a lady's rich silk dress. Surprised, mortified and confused, he sprang from his sled, and cap in hand commenced an apology:

"I beg your pardon, ma'am; I am very sorry."

"Never mind," exclaimed the lady, "there is no harm done, and you feel worse about it than I do."

"But, dear madam," said the boy, as his eyes filled with tears, "your dress is ruined. I thought you would be very angry with me for being careless."

"O, isn't she a beauty?" exclaimed the lad, as the lady passed on.

"Who? that lady?" returned his comrade. "If you call her a beauty, you shan't choose for me. Why she is more than thirty years old, and her face is yellow and wrinkled."

"I don't care if her face is wrinkled, "replied the little hero; "her soul is handsome, anyhow."

A shout of laughter followed, from which the little fellow was obliged to escape. Relating the incident to his mother, he remarked;

"O, mother, that lady did me good. I shall never forget; and when I am tempted to indulge my angry passions, I will think of what she said. 'Better have a soiled dress than a ruffled temper.'"—Friend of Virtue.

THERE'S A BOY I CAN TRUST.—We once visited a public school. At recess a little fellow came up and spoke to the teacher; as he turned to go down the platform, the master said: "That is a boy I can trust. He never failed me." We followed him with our eye, and looked at him when he took his seat after recess. He had a fine, open, manly face. We thought a good deal about the master's remark. What a character had that boy earned. He had already got what would be worth more to him than a fortune.

FATHER KNOWS.

Onward, children, grow not weary
Of the way you have begun;
Patiently enduring hardness,
Pilgrimage will soon be done.
Forward to the better country,
Where there'll be eternal day,
Fearing not the nights of darkness,—
Our Father knows the way.

Gathering storms in fury beating,
Casting gloom along the way,
Troubles and temptations meeting
On the course from day to day;
Foes on every hand are watching,
And would gladly have us fall;
Falter not! let none give over,—
Our Father knows it all.

He will watch us, he will lead us,
All along life's rugged length;
He will gently fold around us
Arms of everlasting strength.
He will lift us 'bove all danger,
Never let his children fall,
And will save us in his kingdom,
For kind Father knows it all.

MAN AS HE WAS, IS, AND IS TO BE.

NUMBER ONE.

BY JOHN P. BELT.

When Jesus Christ came into the world to redeem and save men from the curse of sin, his admonition was, "Search the Scriptures." And the apostle Paul said of certain men at Berea, "These were more noble than those in Thessalonica, in that they received the word with all readiness of mind, and searched the Scriptures daily, whether those things were so." Any doctrine that is not sustained by the word of God, should, therefore, be abandoned by all who seek to know the truth.

But in order that the Scriptures may be rightly understood, it is highly necessary that we first ascertain what the mind and purpose of God is in every portion of them. Yet a mere intellectual knowledge of the divine purport is in itself nothing. The Spirit of God must make the heart to feel all that the mind comprehends in the sacred pages. It is the whole purpose and glory of the Father, revealed through the Son, and communicated by the Holy Ghost, that should be the standard by which any doctrine is tested. Let this method of investigation be pursued in relation to the creation of man, and compare what inspired men have written on that subject, with the common philosophic view, and it will be found that the confusion which is made to surround it, is not so much in the words of inspiration, as it is in the disputations and opinions of those men who sit in judgment upon them. It is only from "science falsely so-called," that the human mind is led into currents which terminate in error.

The Bible view is ample and always harmonious. From it we learn that in the beginning, when the material universe was created, man alone was made in the image of the Creator. It was said of all the other animate objects "Let them be brought forth after their kind;" and though they were seen to be "very good," yet they were of an inferior order in the divine purpose, being incompetent to exercise a rational supervision over the works of the Creator's hands. Hence another creation was necessary to fill that important station in the divine economy; and the history of that work is briefly yet distinctly given by Moses in the Book of Genesis, "And God said, Let us make man in our image, after our likeness; and let them have dominion over the fish of the sea, and over the fowls of the air, and over the cattle, and over all the earth. . . . So God created man in his own image, in the image of God created he him; male and female created he them." Gen. 1: 26, 27.

But it was not the body alone that was then made; the spirit was also then formed. And in that particular he was made after the likeness of God, inasmuch as he was rational and could comprehend. So "the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and man became a living soul." Gen. 2: 7. When the breath or spirit was breathed into the body of the man, it endued him with the rational and proper faculties suited for the station he was designed to fill in the divine purpose. It may be that his body was fashioned in the image of his Maker. But that the likeness was in the mind, is not left to a supposition; for it is expressly declared that "there is a spirit in man; and the inspiration of the Almighty giveth them understanding." Job 32: 8. If it is objected that this was said by a man not known to have been inspired to utter the saying; it is sufficient to know that he is corroborated by a prophet of the Lord who said, "The Lord which stretcheth forth the heavens, and layeth the foundation of the earth, and formeth the spirit of man within him." Zech. 12: 1; also, Num. 16: 22; Eccl. 12: 7; Isa. 57: 16.

The spirit in man, is the sensitive faculties commensurate to his capabilities. But it is not in any sense a part of the divine essence, although a measure of the divine influence. It is true that other animate objects have a measure of that Influence, but not to the same degree. In them it is instinct, they do not comprehend and reason like man. "God teacheth us more than the beasts of the earth, and maketh us wiser than the fowls of heaven." Job 35: 11. Man thus formed "was made a living soul," not made up with separate parts; to wit, an "immortal soul," and a "mortal body." For the man is soul, and the soul is man. And when it is said of other objects, "Thou sendest forth thy spirit, they are created; thou takest away their breath, they die," it does not disprove man's superior condition. It only proves that all, both they and man, receive animal life from the same source, and that all have one breath.

In the Scriptures all the attributes of the body are frequently assigned to the soul in common. For instance, the sense of hearing. "Every soul that will not hear that prophet." Acts 3: 33. Touch. "If a soul touch any unclean thing." Lev. 5: 2. Eating. "The soul that eateth of it, shall bear his iniquity." Chap. 7: 18. Again the soul is distinguished from spirit and body. "My soul doth magnify the Lord. And my spirit hath rejoiced in God my Savior." Luke 1: 46, 47. "I pray God your whole spirit and soul and body be preserved blameless." 1 Thess 5: 23; see also Heb. 4: 12. Thus it is that the word which Moses used in Genesis to signify soul, is defined by Paul in 1 Cor. 15, to mean animal. But that the soul, or spirit of man, are neither of them separate from the body, so as to have a conscious existence independent of it, is nowhere stated in the Scriptures. The doctrine of the "soul's immortality" has only a heathen origin, and cannot be sustained by the Bible.

The term soul is applied in common to every living creature. Yet no writer of any reputation, has inferred that the soul has a conscious existence independent of the body in any species of the brute creation. The human soul, whatever it may be, since the creation of Adam, is not formed by the immediate hand of God, as human bodies multiply, inasmuch as God ended his work of creation, and rested on the seventh day. "Thus the heavens and the earth were finished, and all the hosts of them." Gen. 2: 1. Therefore, as God ended his work and rested on the seventh day, both the soul and the body must be propagated by the laws of generation. And the breath of life was so blended with matter in man at the creation, that the power of producing after his kind was imparted by the efficacious divine influence. With that intent the mother of the human race was formed from a rib taken out of the man's body. "And Adam said, this is bone of my bones, and flesh of my flesh." Gen. 2: 23. And they were commanded to "Multiply and replenish the earth." Consequently the earth has been peopled by a race which descended from them by the natural laws of propagation. "And Adam lived an hundred and thirty years, and begat a son in his own likeness, after his image." Gen. 5: 3. Hence Paul said, "As we have borne the image of the earthy."

The Bible view that the soul and body are both propagated by the laws of generation, is confirmed by reason and logical demonstration. If the soul is received by the laws of generation, it is received in sin; for to be generated and conceived, is to receive the soul in conjunction with the body. But if the soul is received from the immediate hand of God, it must be pure, for no impure nor sinful thing can proceed from him. Then if it is pure, how are we conceived in sin? And with what justice can a pure soul be charged with the sin of the body? To create souls thus circumstanced, would argue injustice in the Creator, and make God the author of sin, and unmerciful in his work of creation, inasmuch as he would be delivering pure souls to the prison of the body, without sufficient strength to resist the contaminations of the flesh. Then as sin is communicated and transmitted from the parent to the child, it necessarily follows that the part from which sin originated; to wit, the mind or soul, must be propagated and transmitted. Or else on what principle can sin be imputed to a soul that was never in Adam, the father and representative of the race? But the sin of Adam is imputed to the whole race. "Wherefore, as by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin; and so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned." Rom. 5: 12.

The parity of reasoning that is urged to prove, from what is said in certain passages of Scripture, that souls are created by the immediate hand of God, as children are conceived and multiplied; will also prove from the same class of Scriptures that the bodies are created by the immediate hand of God as children are conceived and multiplied. Hence it must not be inferred from the Scriptures that indicate a nobler origin of the soul than that of the body, which is implied in its having been breathed from the mouth of God in the beginning, that they any more prove that each soul is created by the immediate hand of Deity, than other Scriptures which might be quoted, prove that each individual body is formed in the mother's womb by the immediate hand of God. Nor can the idea be sustained which is commonly inferred, that the general laws of generation which were ordained in the beginning, do not contribute to their propagation, because at death each return to their different element in conformity with their distinctive origin. There is no substantial reason why the soul should be made an exception to the general laws, since the body of itself was a senseless stock, and destitute of life, until it was animated by the spirit which was infused into it by the mouth of God. It was then so blended with matter, that the blessing of propagating children would result from the power which was communicated to the parent-stock. The offspring from their loins would be the constituted seed. And hence it is, that we read of "Jacob and all his seed with him. All the souls that came with Jacob into Egypt, which came out of his loins." So also it was said of Levi, "He was yet in the loins of his father when Melchisedec met him."

From such passages of Scripture, which might be greatly extended, the conclusion cannot be avoided that the consequences of the sin of Adam were transmitted and imputed to his race by the laws of generation. The doctrine of original sin cannot be defended on any other ground. For "in Adam all die." In the beginning, the condition of Adam was a state of blessedness and communion with God. Yet he was placed in the garden of Eden on trial, with certain permissions, and under one prohibition. He was commanded not to eat of the fruit of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil. But our first parents being tempted and seduced by the subtlety of Satan, sinned in eating of the forbidden fruit, and fell from their original righteousness and state of blessed communion in the presence of God, and became dead in sin and alienated from him, and so were wholly defiled both in soul and body. And then as Adam was the head and representative of the human race, who were at that time still in his loins, his posterity fell with him, and received hurt in the constitution of their bodies, and the moral state of their minds, which was transmitted to them by ordinary generation. The first consequence of this imputation of Adam's sin is, they are "dead in trespasses and sins." The second is bodily death: "Through the offence of one many be dead."

THE CONDITION OF MAN SINCE THE FALL.

The providence of God, as regards the fall of man, is observable in the sin of man, and the condition consequent upon it. The apostle defines sin to be "the transgression of the law." 1 John 3: 4. When Adam transgressed the law, his whole being and condition was changed; and in his changed relation, all the evils which tend to death had their commencement. Before he sinned he only had the knowledge of good. But after he had transgressed the law, God said, "Behold the man is become as one of us, to know good and evil; and now, lest he put forth his hand and take also of the tree of life and eat and live forever; therefore the Lord God sent him forth from the garden of Eden, to till the ground from whence he was taken." Thus was Adam separated from God the very day he ate the forbidden fruit. He lost that union and innate life of God, by which his spiritual life was sustained; and he became "dead in trespasses and sins." He lost the image of God, and all that righteousness wherein he was created. The natural consequence of this was, that all the human family being then in his loins, descended from him in the same condition, and the penalty denounced against him, passed upon all his posterity. But in process of time Adam died bodily, and suffered the penalty of his transgression. And whatever the nature of that death may be, what was inflicted on him has pervaded his descendants, and still oppresses them on account of their mortal condition, which is inherited from the first parent stock. This death is, however, only temporal, and natural to all both good and bad.

The false assumption that the whole human race are individually under sentence of eternal death, in consequence of Adam's fall, is easy to be refuted on the clearest authority of Scripture; for not one single passage can be produced which gives sanction to such a doctrine. The only sentence prenounced against the human family, which holds them in a state of condemnation for Adam's sin, is that denounced against the man when he was sent forth from the garden; "Dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return." And I cannot find anywhere in the Bible, even in the case of Adam, that any other than natural, or temporal, death was inflicted upon him. It is true that when he was commanded not to eat the forbidden fruit, God said, "In the day that thou eatest thereof, thou shalt surely die," (margin, dying thou shalt die); yet when he received his sentence, that threatened death is denounced in the following words, "Because thou hast hearkened unto the voice of thy wife, and hast eaten of the tree of which I commanded thee, saying, thou shalt not eat of it, cursed is the ground for thy sake; in sorrow shalt thou eat of it all the days of thy life. . . . In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread till thou return unto the ground; for out of it wast thou takan; for dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return." Gen. 3: 17, 19. Then as the man and woman went forth under the promise that the seed of the woman should bruise the serpent's head, the Savior of the world was as accessible to them as he was to any of their descendants; for he was the "Lamb slain from the foundation of the world." And then as all die in Adam, "So in Christ shall all be made alive." The all must include Adam when they are made alive, as it does in death. Consequently his death was not eternal, but was temporal, as in the case of his posterity.

As the sentence was not executed on Adam the day he sinned, it necessarily follows that in the term death is to be comprehended all the evils and diseases both of the mind and body, which in their consequences finally terminate in death, for "death entered by sin." "The motions of sin did work in our members to bring forth fruit unto death." In the controversy among theologians in regard to whether God could in justice impute the sin of our first parents, and the penalty annexed thereto, to their posterity; they assume the very thing which should in the first place be proved; to wit, that the death which was threatened was eternal in duration. Consequently they have been led by that assumption into views which are altogether erroneous. From this point of divergence have originated all the perverted views in regard to the justice and wisdom of God; and the doctrine of predestination, election and the divine decrees. They have assumed wrong premises respecting the purpose of God in the creation. It was his design to people the earth with a race bearing his own image, that would live and enjoy its blessings forever. But that design was frustrated in part, and "death entered in consequence of sin." Therefore, to carry out that design, an immortal race is to be provided, "who are the called according to his purpose. For whom he did foreknow, he also did predestinate to be conformed to the image of his Son, that he might be the firstborn among many brethren." Rom. 8: 28, 29. Then as Adam had incurred mortality, his posterity inherit from him all the evils and infirmities consequent upon his condition. Therefore, the race which will be raised up to live forever in the image of Christ are to be born from the dead "in the day when he makes up his jewels."

But in this mortal condition, the parent stock incurred different degrees of death. In the first place they were "dead to God." They lost his divine protection, and their mind and conscience was defiled. "They were guilty and hid themselves." In the second place, they "were dead in trespasses and sins;" for "they became alienated from the life of God." This degree of death came upon them, the very day and moment they disobeyed the divine commandment. In the third and last place, they died bodily. This death was a consummation of the sentence, "Dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return." This death was a punishment for sin; for bodily death originated in sin. But God denounced the sentence of death against the man that sinned without excepting any part of his physical structure. And as the whole man is "soul, spirit and body," it follows that the whole man is at death deprived of vitality.

The common view that the soul separates from the body and remains in a state of conscious existence, while only the body dies, is inadmissible; for how can that be said to die which never had any life in itself? It is absurd to suppose that the mind or spirit which is the part principally implicated in the offence, should escape death, and the body alone be made to suffer the penalty, when it was not wholly involved in the transgression. The language of every man who was inspired to write the pages of both the Old and the New Testaments, conveys the idea that the whole man is unconscious in death. Thus Jacob said, "I will go down into the grave unto my son." Gen. 37: 35. The good old man of Us, of whom God said, "There is none like him in the earth, a perfect and an upright man,"—his belief was, "Man lieth down and riseth not till the heavens be no more. All the days of my appointed time will I wait, till my change come. Thou shalt call and I will answer thee; thou wilt have a desire to the work of thine hands." Job. 14: 12, 14, 15. David, the man after God's own heart, said, "In death there is no remembrance of thee; in the grave who shall give thee thanks? The dead praise not Jehovah." Ps. 6: 5, and 15: 17. If he had believed that only the body died, while the soul was conscious in heaven or some other place, his language would be contradictory and incongruous; inasmuch as it might be where he could praise unceasingly. But Peter said concerning David, "That he is both dead and buried, and his sepulchre is with us unto this day. For David is not ascended into the heavens." Acts 2: 29, 34. Isaiah said, "The righteous is taken away from the evil to come; he shall enter into peace; they shall rest in their beds," (graves). Isa. 57: 1, 2. When Asa slept with his fathers, it was said of him, "They buried him in his own sepulchre which he had made for himself in the city of David, and laid him in the bed (grave) which was filled with sweet odors." 2 Chron. 16: 14. So did God say unto Josiah, "I will gather thee unto thy fathers, and thou shalt be gathered into thy grave in peace; and thine eyes shall not see all the evil which I will bring upon this place." 2 Kings 22: 20. If his soul was not also unconscious of sight, would he not have seen the evil? Consequently the whole man must be unconscious in the grave, or such language can have no force.

But that there is no place beyond the grave prepared for any part of the man, till he is raised up again from the dead, is declared by Christ in the most positive language when he said to his disciples, "I go to prepare a place for you. And if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again and receive you unto myself; that where I am, there ye may be also." John 14: 2, 3. This language has no force, if he did not mean to be understood as referring to the whole man which he would receive unto himself when he comes the second time. This was the only hope that the apostles had of ever being visibly with Christ after his ascension into heaven. And in the latter part of the preceding chapter Jesus said unto them, "Whither I go, thou canst not follow me now; but thou shalt follow me afterwards." Then to say that the soul will be consciously in heaven with Christ while the body is dead and unconscious in the grave, is but to contradict what Jesus said. And as it is not my province to judge or condemn, I leave that matter in the hands of Him who "seeth not as man seeth."

The apostle Paul declares that Christ died and was buried, according to the Scriptures, and that he rose again on the third day, according to the Scriptures. He then argues that "if the dead rise not, then is Christ not risen." And from his whole reasoning the conclusion is, that there are but two alotted states to the human family, death and the resurrection from the dead. But he does not even so much as intimate that there is to be a conscious existence to any part of the man during the time that intervenes. It is the whole man that is in death, or his argument is without any weight, and has no force.

The Scriptures are not silent (as some modern writers assert them to be) in regard to the condition of the soul, nor of the spirit of man, when death ensues. But there is positive proof to the contrary which shows that the spirit and soul both suffer in death. "Who knoweth the spirit of man, whether it goeth upward? As the beast dieth, so dieth the man, yea, they all have one breath." Eccl. 3, (read the whole chapter.) It is also said, "His breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth; in that very day his thoughts perish." Ps. 146: 4. Now it must be remembered that the thoughts are in the mind, or spirit, and not in the body independent of it. The soul, whether it denotes the whole physical combination in all its parts, or is synonymous with spirit, is subject to death, both natural and violent. "He spared not their soul from death." Ps. 78: 50. "Shall he deliver his soul from the hand of the grave?" Ps. 89: 48. "Behold all souls are mine, as the soul of the father, so also the soul of the son is mine; the soul that sinneth it shall die." Ezek. 18: 4. The soul of Christ was in the tomb; otherwise there would be no occasion for saying, "It was not left in hades." Then again the souls of all men will be summoned from the graves, and not from some intermediate place of conscious existence, when they are to appear at the judgment-seat of Christ. "For the hour is coming in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth."

The death threatened to Adam is shown, by appealing to the Scriptures, to have extended to the soul of man as well as to the body, though not in the sense of annihilation; for it has already been shown that the import of the sentence was a natural and temporal death resulting from their mortal condition, which stain still cleaves to every child of man. The false assumption that the threatened penalty was eternal death is the source from which all the confusion and erroneous views have originated. But let it be fully settled in the mind, that the sin of Adam only doomed his posterity to temporal death, which holds them, both the good and the bad, as under bonds. And that the sins which doom men to the second death, which is to be eternal, are the voluntary transgressions of the divine law, and it will be the end of all confusion. The guilt of Adam's sin which was imputed to his posterity, only involved the evils and infirmities which terminate in temporal or natural death, because they had no personal agency in producing it; nor had they any ability to prevent it. The sins which produce eternal death are not imputed to each individual man, until by intelligent volition of the mind he makes the guilt his own by personally disobeying the law of God. Then to redeem the human family from the sting of death, which was temporal; and bring all again from the graves, that they may receive their reward, Christ "Tasted death for every man."

THE TWO WITNESSES.

"And I will give power unto my two witnesses, and they shall prophesy a thousand two hundred and threescore days, clothed in sackcloth."—Rev. 11: 3.

All this oppression, all this wretchedness and misery were brought to bear upon this whole nation, by those who professed the christianity of the Bible. The king, the nobles, and the priests, who were the governing classes, belonged to the Catholic order. With caution they selected a few passages from the Bible upon submission and obedience, which they allowed to be read to the people; while the majestic principles of fraternity, upon which its whole moral code is reared, were vigilantly excluded from the public mind. The peasant detected with a Bible was deemed as guilty as if caught with the tools of a burglar or the dies of a counterfeiter. Voltaire, who was born about the beginning of the eighteenth century, and who died a few years prior to the outbreak of the Revolution, was the sceptical genius of France during that age.

"If we judge of men (says the historian) by what they have done, then Voltaire was the greatest writer of modern Europe." Again, another historian says:

"The pen of Voltaire aroused the world. It was the pen of Voltaire which overthrew despotism in France, and it was also his pen that banished for so long from human hearts thoughts of God and of future responsibility. The venemous spirit with which he pursued the religion of Christ is fully expressed by his motto, 'CRUSH THE WRETCH!' He assailed with keenest sarcasm and the most piercing invectives the corruptions of the church, unjustly, and most calamitously for the interests of France, represented those corruptions as Christianity itself."

Nearly all the Revolutionary writers represented religion, not merely as a useless superstition, but as one of the worst scourges of the State. Hence they assailed religion furiously, and succeeded in eradicating from men's minds all apprehensions of responsibility to God. They hated christianity and its restraints, and were glad to avail themselves of the corruptions of the church, that they might bring the religion of Christ into contempt. They uttered cries of indignation against those crimes perpetrated against the people under the garb of christianity, which thrilled upon the ear of Europe, and filled the land with infidelity. They urged a most unrelenting warfare against the Bible. Voltaire even assured the people that all the oppression and suffering which they endured from their Catholic masters originated from the doctrines taught in the Bible: hence he had taught the ignorant masses to hate the Bible, and they were ready, when the opportune moment should arrive, to arise in their might and crush the Bible and all who professed to adhere to it out of existence. The historian says:

"It was impossible, however, to conceal the fact that the Bible was the advocate of purity of heart and life. Its teachings created a sense of guilt in the human soul which could not be effaced. Corrupt men were consequently eager to reject the Bible, that they might appease reproachful conscience. Frederick II. of Prussia, an atheist and a despiser of mankind, became the friend and patron of Voltaire in his envenomed assaults upon christianity. Louis XV. of France, anxious to maintain friendly political relations with Prussia, hesitated to persecute Voltaire, the recognized friend of the Prussian king. The courtiers, generally with joy, listened to those teachings of unbelief which relieved them from the restraints of christian morality. Thus christianity had two classes of vigorous assailants. The first were those who knew not how to discriminate between christianity and its corruptions. They considered christianity and the Papal church as one, and endeavored to batter down the hateful structure as a bastile of woe. Another class understood christianity as a system frowning upon all impurity, and pressing ever upon the mind a final judgment. They were restive under its restraints, and labored for its overthrow, that guilt might find repose in unbelief."—Abbott's History of the Revolution, p. 49.

From what I have now written upon this point, I think it will appear plain that this social degradation of the mass of the people, together with the hope which they had of extricating themselves from that position by the overthrow of the Bible and all those institutions which professed to be founded upon the teachings of the Bible, as presented by Voltaire and other writers of his school,—was the great incentive to the Revolution. Says the historian, "This united all the industrial classes in France, all who had attained wealth, and all men of intellectual eminence, in the cry for reform." Equality of rights was the great demand, thus forced from the heart of the nation. "Fraternity (a gospel of social rights) became the watch-word of the roused and rising masses."

Again, the historian says, "It was the pen of Voltaire which overthrew despotism in France. It was the pen of Voltaire which banished for so long from human hearts thoughts of God and of future resposibility. Thus then sprung up, in the place of the despotism he had overthrown, another despotism a thousand fold more terrible. With consummate genius, and utter destitution of all moral principle, he was the demon of destruction, sweeping the good and the bad alike into indiscriminate ruin. * * * The genius of Voltaire induced France to attempt to establish liberty without religion. The terrific result will probably dissuade from any future repetition of that experiment."—Abbott's History of the Revolution, p. 223. See also Lamartine's History of the Girondists, Vol. 1, p. 150.

I have written the foregoing concerning the condition of France at and prior to the breaking out of the Revolution, for the purpose of bringing out one fact, and to make it plain; namely, that the freedom and liberty sought after by the French nation in the Revolution was not only to overthrow their despotic rulers and establish a republic where they might enjoy liberty, as the freemen of the American republic have enjoyed it, by the recognition of and belief in God and his word; but they desired (and accomplished it for a time) freedom from all religious restraints, liberty to trample under foot the word of God, and to overthrow every institution founded upon the doctrines or teachings of the Bible. Hence from the moment the party had attained the power in France, who adopted the principles and doctrines taught by Voltaire, Rousseau, Diderot, D'Alembert, and others of the same school; from that moment I understand that the Bible — "the two witnesses," was slain. That moment had arrived early in the spring of A. D. 1791, at the death of Mirabeau.

"The funeral of Mirabeau (says the historian) was the funeral of emancipated France. From that moment the Revolution was on the rush to ruin." After the imposing, popular and extensive display at the funeral of Mirabeau, at which it is estimated that four hundred thousand men took a part, his remains were deposited in a tomb at the church of Saint Genevieve, a place dedicated to the god of Reason. Again, the historian says: "It was at this period (July, 1791) that the Assembly ordered the removal of the remains of Voltaire to the Pantheon. Philosophy thus avenged itself on the anathemas that had been thundered forth, even against the ashes of the great innovator. The body of Voltaire, on his death in Paris A. D. 1778, had been furtively removed by his nephew at night, and interred in the church of the abbey Sellieres in Champagne; and when the nation sold this abbey, the cities of Troyes and Romilly mutually contended for the honor of possessing the bones of the greatest man of the age. The city of Paris, where he had breathed his last, now claimed its privilege as the capital of France, and addressed a petition to the National Assembly, praying that Voltaire's body might be brought back to Paris and interred in the Pantheon, that cathedral of philosophy. The Assembly eagerly hailed the idea of this homage that traced liberty back to its original source. The people owe their freedom to him, said Regnault; for by enlightening them he gave them power.

On the 11th of July, the departmental and municipal authorities went in state to the Barriere Charenton, to receive the mortal remains of Voltaire, which were placed on the ancient site of the Bastile, like a conqueror on his trophies. His coffin was exposed to public gaze, and a pedestal was formed for it of stones torn from the foundations of this ancient stronghold of tyranny; and thus Voltaire, when dead, triumphed over those stones which had triumphed over and confined him when living. On one of the blocks was the inscription—'Receive on this spot, where despotism once fettered thee, the honors decreed to thee by thy country.'"—Lamartine's History of the Girondists, vol. 1, p. 147.

I need not go into a full account of the nation's joy, as the immense concourse of people followed the car that bore Voltaire to the Pantheon. The whole population of Paris was present at the fete; and deputations from all the illustrious and dignified bodies of France were also present. Every eye (says the historian) was riveted on the car; for the new school of ideas felt that it was the proof of their victory that was passing before them, and that philosophy remained mistress of the field of battle." Thus it will be seen that the war to establish the new school of ideas, as taught by Voltaire, was recognized as having accomplished its purpose at this date, namely, spring of A. D. 1791.

It was also at this date that the Jacobin party, who had prior to this date partially assumed the leadership of the people in their efforts to establish liberty without religion, had now become very formidable, and was rapidly becoming the great power of the nation, with an excitable mob ever at its disposal, as its military arm. Thomas Paine, the notorious reviler of christianity, was then in Paris, and one of the most violent of the Jacobin party. Hence it is evident that the "two witnesses" were slain under the influence, or by the direction, of this party, and we must therefore find the three days and an half period during the time that this party sways the destinies of the nation.

I understand that the French nation had adopted the principles taught by Voltaire as early as the spring of A. D. 1791; from the fact that the government in the early part of that summer unanimously decreed the honors of his country to his remains, claiming that the liberty they then enjoyed had emanated from him; which (says the historian) was liberty without religion,—a gospel of social rights. Hence it is evident that at this period the doctrines and principles contained in the Bible, the "two witnesses," were trodden under foot, were dead. I might quote much more as proof of the position I have taken, but I find I am already making a longer article than I intended; therefore I will now proceed to show as briefly as possible the fulfillment of the events spoken of in the prophecy as having transpired during the time the two witnesses were dead.

8th verse;—"And their dead bodies shall lie in the street of the great city which spiritually is called Sodom and Egypt, where also their Lord (Murdock's Trans.) was crucified." We read in the seventeenth chap. as follows: "The woman which thou sawest is that great city." This woman symbolizes the apostate church, as it stands connected with Rome; hence from the facts in the case it is evident the street of the great city must mean one of the principal nations that had stood connected with Rome or the Romish church. It also signifies that the two witnesses were trodden under foot by that nation.

Again, "which spiritually is called Sodom and Egypt." Jesus says, John. 6: 63, "The words which I speak unto you, they are spirit, and they are life." Again, Rev. 19: 10;—"For the testimony of Jesus is the Spirit of prophecy." From these texts, I understand that the word of God is the voice of the Spirit. Hence the "two witnesses" must have been slain in a place or nation which the word of God would call Sodom and Egypt. I need hardly add (for we all understand) that places or nations where great wickedness and cruelty is being practised, are ever called in Scripture, Sodom, or Egypt. I will not stop to refer to but one text. In Isaiah, first chapter, the prophet in speaking concerning the wickedness of Judah and Jerusalem, in the tenth verse says: "Hear ye the word of the Lord, ye rulers of Sodom, give ear unto the law of our God, ye people of Gomorrah." Thus we learn that the two witnesses were slain in a nation where great wickedness and cruelty was being practised; and I think that no one at all acquainted with the history of the French nation at this period, will doubt that such was its condition, at the time of which we are writing.

Again, "where also their (Murdock's Translation) Lord was crucified." Not only had the Bible, "the two witnesses," been slain, but we are informed in the above text, that their Lord, or the Lord of the two witnesses, was also slain during the time that the witnesses were dead. In other words, that the same nation that had overthrown the Bible, "the two witnesses," in process of time denied the existence of God himself. As I have shown in this article that an edict to that effect was issued by the French nation, in A. D. 1793, and continued in force seven months, when the decree was revoked, I need not write further upon that point in this place. I will simply say, however, that this is positive proof that the two witnesses were slain by the French nation, and also, (by the chronological order of the events) that they were slain at a time prior to the issuing of the decree denying the existence of the Supreme Being.

Ninth verse,—"And they of the people and kindreds and nations and tongues shall see their dead bodies three days and a half (three years and a half), and shall not suffer their dead bodies to be put in graves." We learn from this verse, that the surrounding nations would take cognizance of the events passing in the nation that killed the two witnesses, or France; and would take measures to hinder them from consummating what they intended, namely; to establish a government in their midst, based upon the principles advocated by Voltaire. Liberty and fraternity were the watchwords; a democracy without religion.

On this point, universal history testifies that in the summer of A. D. 1791, combined Europe arrayed itself on the frontiers of France, and would not suffer the pernicious principles advocated by the revolutionists, to pass into the adjoining States. The historian says, "Nearly all the nobles were infidels, disciples of Voltaire. For years while reveling in wine and debauchery, they had held up religion to contempt. But they now suddenly became very devout, espoused the cause of their boon companions, the bishops, and remonstrated against laying unholy hands upon the treasury of the Lord. All over Europe, the two most formidable forces, secular and religious aristocracy, were now combined against the popular reform. It was this principle which led the Protestant English noble, and the papal Austrian bishop to make common cause against the regeneration of France." Abbott's History of the Revolution. p. 170.

Hence, says the historian again, "Despotic Europe combined, and with all her accumulated armies fell upon the people of France. A conference of the foreign powers was held on the 20th of May, A. D. 1791; at this conference it was agreed to assemble at once 100,000 men upon the frontiers of France, with the purpose if possible to arrest the progress of the revolution, by intimidation." These armies which were arrayed against France, were augmented from time to time, until, finally, in process of time the military element became predominant in France, when the allied armies were driven from the French frontiers. Thus it will be seen, that as early as the spring or summer of A. D. 1791, nearly all the nations of Europe were combined to hold in check the principles and progress of the revolution. This fact I think also positive proof that the two witnesses must have been slain as early as the above date.

We also learn from the verse under consideration, that "the two witnesses" were dead for "three days and a half." This period I understand to be symbolic time, and to mean three years and a half; as this view is generally admitted, I shall not need to offer evidence as proof. If the view that I have presented, namely, that the two witnesses were slain in the spring of A. D. 1791 is correct; then we must find a change in the spirit of the revolution to have attained in the autumn of A. D. 1794; three and a half years from the spring of A. D. 1791. This universal history testifies to be a fact.

The historian says, "At the death of Robespierre in the autumn of A. D. 1794, the Jacobin rule was overthrown and the reign of terror ended." Immediately after the fall of Robespierre, those stringent laws which had been enacted by the Jacobin party, and which had kept a part of the people of France in continual terror, began to be relaxed; "and the principles of mercy and toleration superseded the hideous dogmas of the Jacobins." "Within ten days, ten thousand persons were liberated from the French prisons." The party or government now in power, steadily retraced the steps which had been taken by the fanatics of the revolution, and within about four months, "the decrees which had been issued against priests and nobles were repealed, and the celebration of christian worship was permitted in the churches." See Redhead's History of the Revolution. Vol. II. p. 56.

These historical facts are sufficient and positive proof that the Bible ("the two witnesses") and its teachings had become, at least, somewhat revived at this point of time, namely, in the autumn of A. D. 1794; and from the fact that the decrees against priests were repealed, and permission to exercise religious worship in the churches, was granted at that time; it is evident the three years and a half period must have ended at the same time. Thus has been shown the date for the beginning and ending of the three days and a half period, during which time the two witnesses were dead; namely, that they were slain in the spring of A. D. 1791; and were revived to life in the autumn of A. D. 1794.

THE CHURCH'S STRENGTH.

It is in the union of its members. That in union is strength, is a well established maxim. A numerous membership may be desirable, but the strength of the church is not in that. Preachers in addressing a large assembly, are often favorably affected, but neither is it in that. Hear the Savior: "That if two of you shall agree as touching any thing they shall ask, it shall be done for them of my Father which is in heaven. For where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst of them." Matt. 18: 19, 20.

Here, then, the church's strength is clearly seen, and any church that has two or three members that meet in the name of Jesus, and are in the union of the gospel, is a strong church. Scores of members there may be, but the strength is with these peculiar ones. This is beautifully illustrated in the visits of Jesus to the house of Lazarus and his sisters in Bethany. See Luke 10: 38, and John, chapters eleven and twelve.

1. When Mary sat at Jesus' feet, and heard his word and Jesus declaring to Martha, Mary hath chosen that good part that shall not be taken from her.

2. In the sickness of Lazarus, the sisters sending for Jesus, their friend, he waiting until Lazarus was really dead, and then by his word brought him back from death's domain. (Bless the Lord! for such a friend.) Here then is a strong church, if we have never seen one before.

Now turn to John 17: 21–23, and see what this union is,—"That they all may be one as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us; that the world may believe that thou hast sent me. And the glory which thou gavest me I have given them; that they may be one as we are one." And also 1 John 1: 3, 7. "And truly our fellowship is with the Father, and with his Son Jesus Christ." "If we walk in the light as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth us from all sin."

As evidence of what may be done by one living in this union, please read this extract from the life of Nicholas Murray, Presbyterian minister:—

"One evening as I was about retiring to rest, I heard a knock at my door, and my German friend was introduced, his countenance full of emotion. On taking his seat, his first words were these:

'My dear pastor, I have come to tell you the Lord is about to revive his work here.' Surprised at his appearance and language, and at the lateness of his visit, I asked him, Why do you think so? He replied as follows:

'About eight o'clock this evening I went up to my hay-mow, to give hay to my cattle, and while there the Spirit of God came upon me, and has kept me there praying till now. I feel that God is about to revive his work, and could not go in to my family till I told you.'

The entire simplicity and earnestness of the good man convinced me that God had vouchsafed to visit his servant. A few days convinced me that the Spirit of prayer was on the increase. And a few weeks after that evening of wrestling prayer with God on the hay-mow, found me in the midst of the first revival of my ministry, and one of the most precious I ever witnessed."

This was about 1830. SAMUEL CURRY.

The World's Crisis

AND SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER.

RATHER COSTLY.

When the Savior came the first time, he was noted for associating with the poor, and for taking special pains to preach to them. When John sent to know if he was the Messiah, among other reasons given in answer to the inquiry, the messenger was instructed to say to John, "The poor have the gospel preached to them." This implies that before the Savior came, the Pharisees paid but little attention to the poor. They did not find a welcome in the popular synagogues. As human nature is the same now as then, we must expect to see the same state of things in these last days. We fear the Savior and his apostles would not receive much better treatment from popular Christendom at the present day than they did eighteen hundred years since.

The following shows what it costs to attend a fashionable house of worship:—"A pew in King's Chapel, Boston, was sold by auction on Monday last, for the enormous price of $5400." We do not see how the poor could buy a seat in such a house, or feel at home among the rich and fashionable who assemble there, even if they could succeed in gaining admittance. We presume it would be thought a great disturbance if one shout aloud the praises of the Lord, as saints once did in the great congregation.

It is very apparent that the life and power of godliness has nearly departed from the nominal churches of these last days. The form remains, and that alone. The poor are turned away from the gospel, instead of being invited to come and partake of its joys and blessings. Many are disgusted with the whole system of modern religion, and are swelling the ranks of infidelity. They have lost all confidence in those who profess to be the disciples or Jesus, because they live so like the world.

DEPOSITERY OF TRUTH.

We would inquire of the reader, where would you go to find "the deposit of moral truths"? We trust you would say, to the Bible. In an address to the Pope by three hundred Catholics of all nations, who were present at Rome a few months since, it is said, "It is she ("the Holy Roman Church") who keeps entire the deposit of moral truths, without which all societies would return to barbarism."

Notwithstanding the foregoing statement, we think the following prophetic language may be very properly applied to the so called "Holy Roman Church,"—"It cast down the truth to the ground; and it practiced, and prospered."—Dan. 8: 12. It is a well known fact that many of the ceremonies and doctrines of the Roman Catholic church were borrowed from the Pagans, and modified so as to make them palatable to the church, and still be acceptable to the Pagans; and by this means secure the influence of all. But her days of boasting are nearly ended, and her night of sorrow is at hand. Her end will be terrible, as described under the symbol of a "woman" in Rev. 17th and 18th chapters. Her former lovers are now her worst enemies, and only wait for an opportunity to "burn her with fire."

THE PROGRESS.

There is a very marked progress in these last days, as all must admit; but it is in the opposite direction from that of early christians. The following from the Tract Journal will give an indication of the progression of these times:—

"At the late meeting of one of the Conferences in Massachusetts, an essay was read on 'The duty of christians to make visits among their brethren, and in the surrounding community, for religious purposes.' The reporter adds:—'The novelty of the subject, and the happy manner in which it was treated, secured the attention of the audience, and prepared the way for a lively and protracted discussion.' Nothing more than this is needed to show how far our churches have departed from the primitive type of piety, when christians 'went every where, preaching the word.' Now this is a 'novel subject!' We hope it will not be such long."—Tract Journal.

We fear the subject will become more novel, before it is less. The fact is, vital godliness is dying out, and the spirit of the world is coming upon the church with an alarming progress.

WM. MILLER AND MOSES HULL.

When speaking of a four days Spiritualist meeting in Portsmouth, N. H., last March, Uriah Clark says, "On the last evening, a band of thirty or forty friends held a select circle, which was attended with some incidents of peculiar interest. Through Mrs. Albertson, Bro. Hull was very impressively addressed and consecrated anew to the spiritual work by the venerable Wm. Miller, the father of Second Adventism, from which Bro. Hull was converted to Spiritualism."

The spirits are opening an earnest war against those who believe in the personal coming of Christ, and the sleep of the dead. The latter truth silences all their batteries. Let every child of the Lord be firm and immovable. It is death to yield.

AN EDITOR'S PERPLEXITIES.

The following from one of our exchanges, will give the reader a pretty good idea of the peculiar position of an editor. Although the following applies more particularly to an editor of a secular paper, an editor of a religious paper finds it just as impossible to please all. We think he should always aim to please the Lord, and leave the results in his hands.

EDITING A PAPER.

"Editing a paper is a very pleasant business. If it contains too much political matter, people won't have it.

If it contains too little, they won't have it.

If we publish telegraph reports, folks say they are nothing but lies.

If we omit them, they say we have no enterprise, or suppress them for political effect.

If we have in a few jokes, folks say we are nothing but a rattle-head.

If we omit jokes, they say we are an old fossil.

If we publish original matter, they blame us for not giving selections.

If we publish selections, folks say we are lazy for not writing more, and giving them what they have not read in some other paper.

If we give complimentary notices, we are censured for being partial.

If we do not, all hands say we are a greedy hog.

If we attend church, they say it is only for effect.

If we do not, they denounce us as deceitful and desperately wicked.

If we remain in the office and attend to business, folks say we are too proud to mingle with our fellows.

If we go out, they say we never attend to business.

If we do not pay all bills promptly, folks say we are not to be trusted.

If we do pay promptly, they say we stole the money."

We solicit the prayers of our readers, that we may have special wisdom from the Lord to guide us right, and courage to do that which is well pleasing in his sight, regardless of censure or praise.

A MODERN PENTECOST.

The contrast between modern and ancient christianity is very striking. A pentecost in these days consists in "a most remarkable outburst of popular jollity, in which all sects, denominations and conditions" take a part. The following from the N. Y. Independent, is a part of the description of the Sanitary Fair in Brooklyn, N. Y. We think the contrast is very marked between that and the one described in Acts 2nd chapter, which was such a blessed season to the apostles. The Independent says:—

"Notwithstanding it is the season of Lent, when pious Catholics and good Episcopalians religiously abstain from all festive gatherings, except on mi careme, the City of Churches, during the past week, has been the scene of a most remarkable outburst of popular jollity, in which all sects, denominations and conditions have taken part. It has been a sort of pentecostal gathering, wherein Catholics, Jews, Presbyterians, Methodists, Unitarians, Swedenborgians, Baptists, Quakers, Congregationalists and Moravians forgot all their differences, and, moved by the human instincts of patriotsim and benevolence, poured into one common reservoir their thank-offerings, from the rich gift of the opulent merchants of the Hights to the widows' mites of the alleys and by-ways. No lovelier, soul-satisfying spectacle was ever witnessed on this earth. So far as we can see, there has been no base alloy mingled with this golden display of what is best and beautiful in humanity."

We may well inquire, what next? We may expect a deeper plunge into the spirit and manners of the world. The world and church have made friends as truly as did Pilate and Herod. We see no ground to hope for a better state of things till Jesus comes. It is time to separate from every thing unholy, and keep "unspotted from the world."

SCYTHES AND SPEARS.

According to the prophecy of Joel, "before the great and terrible day of the Lord come," "the mighty men" will be waked up, and "all the men of war," and they will beat "plow-shares into swords, and . . . pruning-hooks (margin, scythes) into spears."

A gentleman visiting Springfield, Mass., says:—

"Wednesday morning, before leaving, I had an opportunity lo visit the great U. S. Armory where I saw 185.000 muskets all ready for service, and had the privilege of viewing the different apartments where these implements of death are made. The business of this establishment has probabably been increased ten to twenty fold since the war began. They now employ eight thousand hands who run the machinery night and day (Sunday excepted) and turn out one thousand muskets every day. While conversing with a friend on the facts of the fulfillment of Joel's prophecy, 'Wake up the mighty men etc., beat your plowshares into swords, and your pruning hooks '(margin, scythes) into spears,' said he, that has had a literal fulfillment here, for they brought in several car loads of old scythes and made them over into bayonets."

DEMONIACAL INSTRUCTION.

In these days of infidelity, the people seem more anxious to know what the demons say, than they are to hear the word of the Lord; and more ready to believe them than him. In a late Spiritualist paper we find some questions put to the spirits, and their answers, as follows:—

Q. "Do you consider Supreme Being and Supreme power synonymous?"

A. "Yes, we do. . . . When you have done with human senses and the things of earth-life, then you will look upon the Supreme Being not as a personality, but as a wondrous principle; . . . will perceive that there is a God-principle dwelling within each human soul, that the Divine could not well dispense with; therefore its immortality."

Q. "What is the definition of the word dead?"

A. "There is no such thing as death."

Q. "Is not every human soul a portion of Deity?"

A. "Most certainly."

Q. "Did every soul in this room formerly exist as an individual human being?"

A. "We believe, in harmony with many ancients, that the soul never had a beginning, as we are assured it never will have an ending. Therefore it must have had a dwelling-place—must have been identified; it must have had a sphere in which to live previous to its entering the human form. We do not believe that the soul takes on its powers of individualization alone through the body; but we believe it has ever been an independent power."

Q. "How long is it before the spirit returns to consciousness after entering the spirit-world?"

A. "Generally, under favorable conditions, in a very few moments; sometimes hours, years—sometimes centuries."

LAST LETTER OF JOHN WESLEY.

The following letter from John Wesley to Mr. Wilberforce, M. P., is said to be the last from his pen. It shows very clearly what he thought of slavery. Would that all his followers were as bold and firm in denouncing the same evil, which is now, no doubt, much worse than in his day. This letter was dated just six days before his death.

FEBRUARY 24th, 1791.

My Dear Sir:—Unless Divine power has raised you up to be as "Athanasius contra mundum," I see not how you can go through your glorious enterprise in opposing that execrable villany which is the scandal of religion, of England, and human nature. Unless God has raised you up for this very thing, you will be worn out by the opposition of men and devils; but if God be for you, who can be against you? Are all of them stronger than God? Oh, be not weary in well-doing! Go on in the name of God and in the power of his might, till even American slavery, the vilest that ever saw the sun, shall vanish before it. That He who has guided you from your youth up may continue to strengthen you in this and all things is the prayer of,

Dear Sir, your affectionate servant,

JOHN WESLEY.

To Wm. Wilberforce, Esq., M. P.

SPIRIT CONTROL.

Light is being thrown upon the spiritual manifestations, which clearly shows how they are accomplished. For years, we have been satisfied that the only difference between mesmerism and Spiritualism was in the agents. In mesmerism they are men; in Spiritualism, demons. Both parties employ the same means to produce their manifestations.

The following questions to the spirits, and their answers, are to the point. They were published in the Banner of Light, Aug. 22nd, 1863.

"Q. How do we understand that spirits control an organism?

A. We have just informed you that they do so by means of the magnetic aura, or animal magnetism.

Q. Do spirits concentrate their power upon the brain and nerves?

A. Sometimes on the nervous system. In cases of mechanical writing, power is concentrated upon the ganglion of the arm, and is not at all connected with the brain. In cases of entire physical control, then it pervades the entire physical body."

PRAYER FOR THE DEAD.

As strange as it may seem to some, it is a fact that the Roman Catholic church prays for men after they are dead. In the notice of the "death of the Most Rev. Archbishop Hughes, D. D.," as given by The Catholic, of Jan. 9th, 1864, the Editor says, "We would ask our readers to offer up a prayer for the repose of his soul." What strange doctrines have arisen from the fable that man does not die! When will men see the snare of Satan, and escape from his fascinating wiles? If all could be made to see that no part of man is alive between death and the resurrection, the Devil's stronghold would be demolished. Let all who see this important truth be firm in its defense, yet kind to all opposers.

WHAT IT COSTS.

Reader, are you helping to increase the amount? Have you not done your part? Come, stop now. Do for the sake of the rising generation. Do not teach them any bad habits by your example. Save the money and give it to the poor. The following speaks for itself:

"The cost of tobacco in the United States is $17,000,000, which is at least three times the amount expended for religious purposes of every description, and fifty times the amount contributed by all denoninations for foreign missions."—Montreal Witness, Sept. 1863.

For the World's Crisis.

REV. DENNIS CHAPIN,

Whose speeches have been published in the Crisis, of the Stanbridge Discussion notoriety, lies silent in death, in Berkshire, Vt., where, after a most distressing illness of nine days, he died, at the residence of E. M. Hull, of that ever to be dreaded and loathsome disease, confluent small pox, which he contracted in traveling, he knew not where. Thus he died, away from home and relatives, among strangers, deprived by the nature of his complaint of the cheering visits of his friends. A published account of his death, which I read, says: "He bore his sufferings with patience, and died as the christian dieth." It causes a feeling of sadness to think of circumstances so painful; and this case should be a solemn warning to parents and others to practice Jenner's art and be vaccinated, and have their children secured from death under such circumstances as above detailed. Infant baptism is neither scriptural or reasonable; but the vaccination of young children should be required by law.

MORE ABOUT LYNN.

The good work of which we spoke on a former occasion is progressing in this place. Fifteen or twenty have been hopefully converted, backsliders reclaimed, and sinners are still feeling their need of Christ. The most of those connected with this church have laid aside their hobbies (if they ever had any), and are determined to be at peace among themselves, contending for the moral qualifications requisite to constitute them heirs to the kingdom of God, and for the salvation of those who are out of Christ. They have established a prayer meeting every Tuesday evening, aside from their regular meetings, called the young folks' meeting, which is well attended, and the results thus far have been excellent. The earnest prayers, warm exhortations, and the powerful appeals to the unconverted, which characterize their meetings, cannot fail to be attended with good results.

According to appointment, we spent Lord's day, June 12th, with this church. After the morning service we repaired to the consecrated spot, where there was much water, and there buried five happy souls in the likeness of Christ's death, who we hope will be in the likeness of his resurrection. A large concourse of people assembled to witness this solemn christian requirement in its practical phase. We were reminded of those who came to John's baptism in the days of our Savior. We felt that the Spirit of God brooded over the waters and the audience assembled, and that it was good to be there. At the close of the service in the afternoon we commemorated the death of our Savior in partaking of the bread and wine—emblems of his body and blood. This was an additional good season to the saints.

The work is still progressing, and others will go forward in baptism soon. Your Bro. in Christ,

A. W. SIBLEY.

THE NEW WESTERN TABERNACLE.

A tent is a tabernacle. Then in plain English we are to have a tent for the north-west. The old tent can be reduced in size, and used by brethren in small places with good effect this season, although it is worn and somewhat rotten; but it will not answer at all for the large meetings of my summer campaign.

I have not till lately been able to see how we could afford to get a new tent, at a cost of from four to five hundred dollars this year. The paper and tract fund of $1,000 would be all we could raise in the West. And so I let the matter rest. But I knew if it was God's will to have me go into camp this year, he would provide a tent to shelter me from the burning heat and pitiless storm. So I said all that I had to say about the matter to Him whose I am, and whom I serve. About two weeks since the Lord sent a friend to me, to say that he wished to meet half the expenses of a tent, for my summer tour; a friend to whom I had said nothing, and I did not imagine the object of the interview until we met. From another friend I have the promise of something more; so that about two hundred dollars in addition will perfect this work. I shall be glad to hear from any who would like to own a strip of cloth in the WESTERN TABERNACLE, by which their money will be bringing in a good income for lost men.

The names of the above mentioned donors to this good work are not to be published; and any who send us help for this object can have it published or not, as they please, with or without their names. May the Lord dispose [illegible] of his stewards aright in this matter.

By the help of God we shall blow the trumpet in Zion, and sound the alarm in God's holy mountain, to prepare a people for his coming. We shall live in camp and keep our banner flying till cold weather drives us in-doors.

LOVE, OR LIGHT.

FOR WHICH DO WE SHOW MOST ZEAL?

Light on the things of God is desirable at any time. Yet, in itself, light would not distinguish us from the most devoted emissaries of Satan. Light does not save a man from pride, envy, and malice. Its very tendency, in itself, is rather to promote these things; as Paul says, "Knowledge puffeth up." Nor does the possession of truth commend one's character necessarily, for we may "hold the truth in unrighteousness." We know this to be true in our past history. How many "ministerial rascals," smooth-tongued, and of like precious zeal with us for our peculiar doctrines, have passed current for a while among us, to the shame of some and the grief of more. How many there are among us whose qualification in the things of God goes no further than a knowledge of certain truths peculiar to our faith, with a pugilistic zeal in defense of them. We have a zeal to "understand all mysteries and all knowledge," and yet, with these simply, Paul says we are "nothing." We labor to speak these things "with the tongues of men and of angels," if possible; but these attainments would only make us "as sounding brass or a tinkling cymbal." With these, too, we may bestow all our goods to feed the poor, and yet it will "profit" us "nothing."

But notwithstanding these considerations so evident, with the scriptural admonitions so abundant, we persist in seeking the truth as the sum and substance of our religion. We bear with impatience an error in doctrine in our intercourse with others, yet we show less anxiety when we see the same individuals indulging in pride, covetousness and malice. We show skill and experience in meeting the evasions attending doctrinal controversies; but we seem "shorn of our strength"—mere babes—in our efforts in encountering the devices of Satan in spiritual wisdom and the love of God. Thus our zeal is manifestly a zeal for light rather than love; our experience is in the theory, rather than the practice; and our religion is of the head, rather than the heart.

In pursuing light, we have forsaken love. In deference to our hobbies, we have left it in the background. We have pursued our "new lights," till, distracted and divided, we are ready to devour each other.

Still we talk about the Lord's coming as near at hand. Still we complain that other professors of religion will not allow it, nor show any zeal for the event. Still we warn others of the degeneracy of the times, and scan with a scrutinizing glance the deviations of other churches. Still we prominently enforce the idea that the word shall judge us in the last day. And all without betraying a feeling of misgiving but what we are all right.

I tremble at the view of our coldness and worldly-mindedness, and especially that we rest so securely in our sins. And when I consider our past experience and blessings, our uniform pretensions as to a readiness to meet the Lord, and realize withal that the great day of his wrath cannot be ten years ahead, I stand appalled at the strange infatuation which has seized us, both preachers and people. Though I might find some relief in the thought that God is merciful, I have to reflect, too, that he is just.

I hear brethren say, sometimes, they believe all the prophecies are fulfilled, and Christ is liable to come any time. I wonder how any one in view of our degeneracy could bear the thought of Christ's coming to gather his elect in this state of things. Where could he find his elect? Would he take the covetous, the proud, and the worldly among us? If so, why not among others too? If not, "who then can be saved?" If he accepts of any others but those who are "dead to the world and alive to God," will he not trample his word under foot? But if such only can be saved, where will he find them?

In '44 there were thousands among us who were dead to the world. In '54 I could witness to many who were dead indeed to its charms. There may be some now, but I do not know where to find them, and I verily fear that there is not a hundred such among us. Should Christ come now, it could but result in the damnation of the mass of us. As God is just, his word would condemn us justly in such a case. But as he is merciful, he will give us a fair test as to our devotion to him, by bringing us into a persecution for Christ's sake. If called to endure this test, many love God and his word too well to give them up for fables. If we are brought through such an ordeal first, I believe he would find hundreds ready for translation where he would find one if he came now. The word admonishes us to look for such a persecution. The time will come when we shall cry day and night unto God for deliverance; when it can be said, Here is the patience and faith of the saints. The hour of temptation, that shall come upon all the world to try them, must yet be realized.

I feel it duty to go and warn my brethren of the dangers which threaten us. I cannot be indifferent to these things; if others are, I see the storm coming, and I cannot forbear. I must raise a warning voice. I must cry aloud and spare not. The dangers are fearfully threatening. The time is short. The judgment is just at hand. The perils of the last days are upon us, and where are the watchmen? O, my God! where are the watchmen in these last times? I feel that I am but a child, yet I cannot forbear to sound an alarm. God's grace assisting me, I will go on in a tone of warning, amidst surrounding darkness, stupidity, and spiritual death.

SUBJECTION.

"Shall we not much rather be in subjection unto the Father of spirits and live?"—HEB. 12: 9.

(See last Crisis.)

Granting, then, that God did so create a spirit-man, how much further was he advanced towards an intelligence than when he had completed the dust-man? Not one whit. For MIND being innate in deity alone, it must still be imparted, or the power of it, to the created spirit, before it can live, think or act, and without such impartation, you might as well put a load of icicles under a locomotive boiler to get the steam up, as to put such a spirit into a dust-man, expecting it to make an intelligence of him. But why admit the water into the cylinder at all? said Watt, and the steam engine was thenceforth a living monument to his genius.

And so, why create a spirit at all, why not the rather impart life and power of thought or reason, at once, and direct, to the dust-man? What! make matter THINK? Well, if it suit you better, endow it with reason, and yet a created spirit involves the same necessity. But, after all, no more power was requisite in God to say to the dust-man, Adam, arise, and be a living moral intelligence, subject to the laws of your organism, than was requisite when Christ said (Matt. 9: 5) to the palsied, "Arise and walk," or to putrifying Lazarus, "Come forth," and "he that was DEAD came forth," ALIVE, "bound hand and foot with grave clothes, and his face bound about with a napkin;" and Jesus said, "Loose him, and let him go." And where does revelation teach that God ever gave to animal man any thing more than the breath of (the spirit of) life, by which he became alive, and being alive, the fruit of his living organism is intellection, by the will of his Creator, subject to the law of his being.

A writer in the New York (Baptist) Recorder of April 6th, 1854, says of the critical reviewers of Dr. Beecher's "Conflict of Ages," "How singularly sure all these critics are that God is all the while creating souls, thousands per minute, each soul for its body, somewhere between conception and birth. How did they find it out? who told them (in the Bible) that the Almighty was thus critically and professionally occupied? Or how did they find out (as numbers seem to be just finding out) that the immaterial principle is not created directly, but propagated by ordinary generation? Clamorous against pre-existence as not proved, where is their proof of this on which they stand to be clamorous?"

Some may ask, Where is the Bible proof, and when has it ever been produced, that God created an "entity" and put it into the dust-man? Upon what sure foundation do they stand, who have come to make immortality of that supposed "entity," and its "consciousness in death" one of the "cardinal principles of christianity," and "hurl damnation" against all who venture to think for themselves, come to a different conclusion, and believe that God's "proclamation" will be literally carried out, when he says, "The soul that sinneth IT shall die?" Where is the Scribe? Where is the WISE man? And where is the Bible proof that death is either "separation of soul and body," or "life in misery," when God in his word makes it extinction of life?"

Prov. 20: 27, says "The spirit of man is the candle or lamp of the Lord," and (24: 20,) "The candle (or lamp) of the wicked shall be put out." And Job 18: 5, 6; "The light of the wicked shall be put out, and the spark of his fire shall not shine; his candle shall be put out with him." But it will be said, That m-e-a-n-s yes, yes, Solomon has told what the cause means, IT is man's SPIRIT, and may be extinguished; or Job and Solomon are not correct.

☞ "If any one speaks ill of thee," said Epictetus, "consider whether he has truth on his side; and if so, reform thyself, that his censures may not affect thee." When Anaximander was told that the very boys laughed at his singing—"Ay," says he, "then I must learn to sing better." Plato being told that he had many enemies who spoke ill of him—"It is no matter," said he, "I will live so that none shall believe them." This is a sure way to avoid calumny!

This is an entirely new chart of the Symbols and times of Daniel and John. It is also the largest and most important that has ever been published on this subject.

We live in the time when knowledge is increasing and the wise understand, when the watchmen are beginning to see eye to eye, on the nearness of the coming kingdom. Any helps to a better understanding of the times and seasons of the prophetic word, will be hailed with joy by the students of prophecy. This chart is designed as a help for all classes. It will not be dogmatical, but give the great facts of prophetic history and chronology, which can be explained and applied according to the convictions of the lecturer as to special views, all agreeing in the general descriptive view.

It will be three feet and one inch wide, and four feet six inches long. The symbols are given in sections.

First. The symbol of the image, with a scale of years reaching from B. C. 681 down into the present century, showing the chronology of the image, (Dan. 2,) and that we are on the eve of the act of the stone smiting the image, and filling the earth. The different periods are given in arches, by clear black lines over the scale, those which carry us to the end, are carried down to about 1867 to 1875.

In the second section the papacy has a prominent place, showing its rise, decay and final fall, with an explanation of the four great monarchies, ending in the kingdom of God (Dan. 7.)

The third section gives the dragon of Rev. 12, and the beast and woman of Rev. 17.

The fourth section continues the symbols of the 8th of Daniel, with the 2,300 days, to the "cleansing of the sanctuary."

The fifth section gives the papal beasts of Rev. 13, or the first and second beasts. The woman in the wilderness (Rev. 12,) 1,260 years. The two witnesses, clothed in sackcloth (Rev. 11). Splendid pictures are given in this section of the leopard beast, the "two-horned" beast, the woman representing the true church, and the Bible covered with sackcloth,—then shut, and killed—then opened in light.

At the close of the 1,260 years, the seven vials are placed, as being poured out from 1863, to the end, when the scene will close by a voice from the throne, saying, "It is done."

The sixth gives a vivid view of the seven seals of (Rev. 6); with the beasts, horses, and all the imagery of that chapter; the best, and really the only view on so large a scale, ever given of this vision of the seals.

The seventh section gives the vision of the seven angels in (Rev. 8 and 9), with the eagle, crying, "Woe, woe, woe," which brings us to the end, when the seventh trump shall sound, and the kingdoms of this world shall become the kingdoms of our Lord and his Christ. The price will be $5.00, discount of $1,00 to agents who sell again. Address J. V. Himes, Buchanan, Mich.

We had the pleasure, a few days ago, of seeing the first rough drawing of the above chart; and we can say, if, when finished, the execution shall be as good as the design, it will be the best chart of the kind ever got up among us.

From Bro. A. T. Gorham.

BRO. GRANT:—Perchance a few words from the little band of pilgrims in Castleton, who are watching and waiting for the second advent of our blessed Savior, would be acceptable to the readers of the Crisis; and supposing this to be the case, I take the liberty of engrossing their attention for a few moments. The good cause is not advancing as rapidly as we would desire and pray for, but nevertheless we have been the favored recipients of some drops of grace, which may eventually prove to be as harbingers of a plentiful shower. We meet with considerable opposition from those whose profession should rather lead them to become our friends than our enemies; but if the Lord is for us, who can be against us? "Truth is mighty and will prevail"; and having on the whole armor of God, and taking the blessed Bible as the guiding star of our lonely pilgrimage, we shall be enabled to quench the fiery darts of the wicked, and at last receive a crown whose glory fadeth not away.

Dear Bro. and Sr. Mathewson (late of Sandy Hill, N. Y.), are now with us, and we feel, indeed, to bless the Lord for their presence. Bro. M. preaches the truth boldly, and we trust that the good seed will not altogether fall on barren ground. Our social meetings are very interesting, and the witnesses of Jesus many. Pray for us, dear brothers and sisters, that we may remain steadfast, and be reckoned among the faithful in the day of His appearing. Yours in the gospel hope,

ADRIAN T. GORHAM.

From Bro. C. Bond.

BRO. GRANT:—As I took up the Crisis of June 7th, my eyes caught the words,—"Theology vs. the Bible," as the heading of a short article over the signature of T. E. Wilson. I used to be greatly perplexed with such gross departure from the teachings of God's word by his professed ministers as pointed out by this brother, which led me to search for the cause of the inconsistency of much of the preaching of the present day.

For instance, I have frequently heard the preacher tell the sinner that nothing but the brittle thread of life kept him from a burning hell, and if the thread were cut he would in a moment fall into its fiery embrace, and in the same discourse tell him how great his disappointment must be at the day of judgment, when he shall come to the great tribunal, supposing himself a child of God, having done many wonderful works in his name, to hear the sentence, "Depart, I never knew you." Now it always seemed to me that the sinners that were cut off from life two, three and five thousand years ago, and spent the intervening time between earth and the judgment in the burning abyss, should know better, if they know any thing, than to entertain such groundless expectations.

But why is such stuff preached to intelligent congregations? Simply because our teachers have departed from the truth, as Paul said they would, and are teaching fables; and men will listen to them with itching ears, instead of listening to the word of truth in meekness and faith. This creates a demand for such preaching, and the demand calls for a supply, and hence it is that we have such

Voltaire. For years while reveling in wine and debauchery, they had held up religion to contempt. But they now suddenly became very devout, espoused the cause of their boon companions, the bishops, and remonstrated against laying unholy hands upon the treasury of the Lord. All over Europe, the two most formidable forces, secular and religious aristocracy, were now combined against the popular reform. It was this principle which led the Protestant English noble, and the papal Austrian bishop to make common cause against the regeneration of France." Abbott's History of the Revolution. p. 170.

Hence, says the historian again, "Despotic Europe combined, and with all her accumulated armies fell upon the people of France. A conference of the foreign powers was held on the 20th of May, A. D. 1791; at this conference it was agreed to assemble at once 100,000 men upon the frontiers of France, with the purpose if possible to arrest the progress of the revolution, by intimidation." These armies which were arrayed against France, were augmented from time to time, until, finally, in process of time the military element became predominant in France, when the allied armies were driven from the French frontiers. Thus it will be seen, that as early as the spring or summer of A. D. 1791, nearly all the nations of Europe were combined to hold in check the principles and progress of the revolution. This fact I think also positive proof that the two witnesses must have been slain as early as the above date.

We also learn from the verse under consideration, that "the two witnesses" were dead for "three days and a half." This period I understand to be symbolic time, and to mean three years and a half; as this view is generally admitted, I shall not need to offer evidence as proof. If the view that I have presented, namely, that the two witnesses were slain in the spring of A. D. 1791 is correct; then we must find a change in the spirit of the revolution to have attained in the autumn of A. D. 1794; three and a half years from the spring of A. D. 1791. This universal history testifies to be a fact.

The historian says, "At the death of Robespierre in the autumn of A. D. 1794, the Jacobin rule was overthrown and the reign of terror ended." Immediately after the fall of Robespierre, those stringent laws which had been enacted by the Jacobin party, and which had kept a part of the people of France in continual terror, began to be relaxed; "and the principles of mercy and toleration superseded the hideous dogmas of the Jacobins." "Within ten days, ten thousand persons were liberated from the French prisons." The party or government now in power, steadily retraced the steps which had been taken by the fanatics of the revolution, and within about four months, "the decrees which had been issued against priests and nobles were repealed, and the celebration of christian worship was permitted in the churches." See Bedhead's History of the Revolution. Vol. II. p. 56.

These historical facts are sufficient and positive proof that the Bible ("the two witnesses") and its teachings had become, at least, somewhat revived at this point of time, namely, in the autumn of A. D. 1794; and from the fact that the decrees against priests were repealed, and permission to exercise religious worship in the churches, was granted at that time; it is evident the three years and a half period must have ended at the same time. Thus has been shown the date for the beginning and ending of the three days and a half period, during which time the two witnesses were dead; namely, that they were slain in the spring of A. D. 1791; and were revived to life in the autumn of A. D. 1794.

For the World's Crisis.

THE CHURCH'S STRENGTH.

It is in the union of its members. That in union is strength, is a well established maxim. A numerous membership may be desirable, but the strength of the church is not in that. Preachers in addressing a large assembly, are often favorably affected, but neither is it in that. Hear the Savior: "That if two of you shall agree as touching any thing they shall ask, it shall be done for them of my Father which is in heaven. For where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst of them." Matt. 18: 19, 20.

Here, then, the church's strength is clearly seen, and any church that has two or three members that meet in the name of Jesus, and are in the union of the gospel, is a strong church. Scores of members there may be, but the strength is with these peculiar ones. This is beautifully illustrated in the visits of Jesus to the house of Lazarus and his sisters in Bethany. See Luke 10: 38, and John, chapters eleven and twelve.

1. When Mary sat at Jesus' feet, and heard his word and Jesus declaring to Martha, Mary hath chosen that good part that shall not be taken from her.

2. In the sickness of Lazarus, the sisters sending for Jesus, their friend, he waiting until Lazarus was really dead, and then by his word brought him back from death's domain. (Bless the Lord! for such a friend.) Here then is a strong church, if we have never seen one before.

Now turn to John 17: 21–23, and see what this union is,—"That they all may be one as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us; that the world may believe that thou hast sent me. And the glory which thou gavest me I have given them; that they may be one as we are one." And also 1 John 1: 3, 7. "And truly our fellowship is with the Father, and with his Son Jesus Christ." "If we walk in the light as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth us from all sin."

As evidence of what may be done by one living in this union, please read this extract from the life of Nicholas Murray, Presbyterian minister:—

"One evening as I was about retiring to rest, I heard a knock at my door, and my German friend was introduced, his countenance full of emotion. On taking his seat, his first words were these:

'My dear pastor, I have come to tell you the Lord is about to revive his work here.'

Surprised at his appearance and language, and at the lateness of his visit, I asked him, Why do you think so? He replied as follows:

'About eight o'clock this evening I went up to my hay-mow, to give hay to my cattle, and while there the Spirit of God came upon me, and has kept me there praying till now. I feel that God is about to revive his work, and could not go in to my family till I told you.'

The entire simplicity and earnestness of the good man convinced me that God had vouchsafed to visit his servant. A few days convinced me that the Spirit of prayer was on the increase. And a few weeks after that evening of wrestling prayer with God on the hay-mow, found me in the midst of the first revival of my ministry, and one of the most precious I ever witnessed."

This was about 1830. Samuel Curry.

RATHER COSTLY.

When the Savior came the first time, he was noted for associating with the poor, and for taking special pains to preach to them. When John sent to know if he was the Messiah, among other reasons given in answer to the inquiry, the messenger was instructed to say to John, "The poor have the gospel preached to them." This implies that before the Savior came, the Pharisees paid but little attention to the poor. They did not find a welcome in the popular synagogues. As human nature is the same now as then, we must expect to see the same state of things in these last days. We fear the Savior and his apostles would not receive much better treatment from popular Christendom at the present day than they did eighteen hundred years since.

The following shows what it costs to attend a fashionable house of worship:—"A pew in King's Chapel, Boston, was sold by auction on Monday last, for the enormous price of $5400." We do not see how the poor could buy a seat in such a house, or feel at home among the rich and fashionable who assemble there, even if they could succeed in gaining admittance. We presume it would be thought a great disturbance if one shout aloud the praises of the Lord, as saints once did in the great congregation.

It is very apparent that the life and power of godliness has nearly departed from the nominal churches of these last days. The form remains, and that alone. The poor are turned away from the gospel, instead of being invited to come and partake of its joys and blessings. Many are disgusted with the whole system of modern religion, and are swelling the ranks of infidelity. They have lost all confidence in those who profess to be the disciples of Jesus, because they live so like the world.

DEPOSITERY OF TRUTH.

We would inquire of the reader, where would you go to find "the deposit of moral truths"? We trust you would say, to the Bible. In an address to the Pope by three hundred Catholics of all nations, who were present at Rome a few months since, it is said, "It is she ("the Holy Roman Church") who keeps entire the deposit of moral truths, without which all societies would return to barbarism."

Notwithstanding the foregoing statement, we think the following prophetic language may be very properly applied to the so called "Holy Roman Church,"—"It cast down the truth to the ground; and it practiced, and prospered."—Dan. 8: 12. It is a well known fact that many of the ceremonies and doctrines of the Roman Catholic church were borrowed from the Pagans, and modified so as to make them palatable to the church, and still be acceptable to the Pagans; and by this means secure the influence of all. But her days of boasting are nearly ended, and her night of sorrow is at hand. Her end will be terrible, as described under the symbol of a "woman" in Rev. 17th and 18th chapters. Her former lovers are now her worst enemies, and only wait for an opportunity to "burn her with fire."

THE PROGRESS.

There is a very marked progress in these last days, as all must admit; but it is in the opposite direction from that of early christians. The following from the Tract Journal will give an indication of the progression of these times:—

"At the late meeting of one of the Conferences in Massachusetts, an essay was read on 'The duty of christians to make visits among their brethren, and in the surrounding community, for religious purposes.' The reporter adds:—'The novelty of the subject, and the happy manner in which it was treated, secured the attention of the audience, and prepared the way for a lively and protracted discussion.' Nothing more than this is needed to show how far our churches have departed from the primitive type of piety, when christians 'went every where, preaching the word.' Now this is a 'novel subject!' We hope it will not be such long."—Tract Journal.

We fear the subject will become more novel, before it is less. The fact is, vital godliness is dying out, and the spirit of the world is coming upon the church with an alarming progress.

WM. MILLER AND MOSES HULL.

When speaking of a four days Spiritualist meeting in Portsmouth, N. H., last March, Uriah Clark says, "On the last evening, a band of thirty or forty friends held a select circle, which was attended with some incidents of peculiar interest. Through Mrs. Albertson, Bro. Hull was very impressively addressed and consecrated anew to the spiritual work by the venerable Wm. Miller, the father of Second Adventism, from which Bro. Hull was converted to Spiritualism."

The spirits are opening an earnest war against those who believe in the personal coming of Christ, and the sleep of the dead. The latter truth silences all their batteries. Let every child of the Lord be firm and immovable. It is death to yield.

AN EDITOR'S PERPLEXITIES.

The following from one of our exchanges, will give the reader a pretty good idea of the peculiar position of an editor. Although the following applies more particularly to an editor of a secular paper, an editor of a religious paper finds it just as impossible to please all. We think he should always aim to please the Lord, and leave the results in his hands.

EDITING A PAPER.

"Editing a paper is a very pleasant business. If it contains too much political matter, people won't have it.

If it contains too little, they won't have it.

If we publish telegraph reports, folks say they are nothing but lies.

If we omit them, they say we have no enterprise, or suppress them for political effect.

If we have in a few jokes, folks say we are nothing but a rattle-head.

If we omit jokes, they say we are an old fossil.

If we publish original matter, they blame us for not giving selections.

If we publish selections, folks say we are lazy for not writing more, and giving them what they have not read in some other paper.

If we give complimentary notices, we are censured for being partial.

If we do not, all hands say we are a greedy hog.

If we attend church, they say it is only for effect.

If we do not, they denounce us as deceitful and desperately wicked.

If we remain in the office and attend to business, folks say we are too proud to mingle with our fellows.

If we go out, they say we never attend to business.

If we do not pay all bills promptly, folks say we are not to be trusted.

If we do pay promptly, they say we stole the money."

We solicit the prayers of our readers, that we may have special wisdom from the Lord to guide us right, and courage to do that which is well pleasing in his sight, regardless of censure or praise.

A MODERN PENTECOST.

The contrast between modern and ancient christianity is very striking. A pentecost in these days consists in "a most remarkable outburst of popular jollity, in which all sects, denominations and conditions" take a part. The following from the N. Y. Independent, is a part of the description of the Sanitary Fair in Brooklyn, N. Y. We think the contrast is very marked between that and the one described in Acts 2nd chapter, which was such a blessed season to the apostles. The Independent says:—

"Notwithstanding it is the season of Lent, when pious Catholics and good Episcopalians religiously abstain from all festive gatherings, except on mi careme, the City of Churches, during the past week, has been the scene of a most remarkable outburst of popular jollity, in which all sects, denominations and conditions have taken part. It has been a sort of pentecostal gathering, wherein Catholics, Jews, Presbyterians, Methodists, Unitarians, Swedenborgians, Baptists, Quakers, Congregationalists and Moravians forgot all their differences, and, moved by the human instincts of patriotsim and benevolence, poured into one common reservoir their thank-offerings, from the rich gift of the opulent merchants of the Hights to the widows' mites of the alleys and by-ways. No lovelier, soul-satisfying spectacle was ever witnessed on this earth. So far as we can see, there has been no base alloy mingled with this golden display of what is best and beautiful in humanity."

We may well inquire, what next? We may expect a deeper plunge into the spirit and manners of the world. The world and church have made friends as truly as did Pilate and Herod. We see no ground to hope for a better state of things till Jesus comes. It is time to separate from every thing unholy, and keep "unspotted from the world."

SCYTHES AND SPEARS.

According to the prophecy of Joel, "before the great and terrible day of the Lord come," "the mighty men" will be waked up, and "all the men of war," and they will beat "plow-shares into swords, and . . . pruning-hooks (margin, scythes) into spears."

A gentleman visiting Springfield, Mass., says:—

"Wednesday morning, before leaving, I had an opportunity lo visit the great U. S. Armory where I saw 185.000 musksts all ready for service, and had the privilege of viewing the different apartments where these implements of death are made. The business of this establishment has probababy been increased ten to twenty fold since the war began. They now employ eight thousand hands who run the machinery night and day (Sunday excepted) and turn out one thousand muskets every day. While conversing with a friend on the facts of the fulfillment of Joel's prophecy, 'Wake up the mighty men etc., beat your plowshares into swords, and your pruning hooks '(margin, scythes) into spears,' said he, that has had a literal fulfillment here, for they brought in several car loads of old scythes and made them over into bayonets."

DEMONIACAL INSTRUCTION.

In these days of infidelity, the people seem more anxious to know what the demons say, than they are to hear the word of the Lord; and more ready to believe them than him. In a late Spiritualist paper we find some questions put to the spirits, and their answers, as follows:—

Q. "Do you consider Supreme Being and Supreme power synonymous?"

A. "Yes, we do. . . . When you have done with human senses and the things of earth-life, then you will look upon the Supreme Being not as a personality, but as a wondrous principle; . . . will perceive that there is a God-principle dwelling within each human soul, that the Divine could not well dispense with; therefore its immortality."

Q. "What is the definition of the word dead?"

A. "There is no such thing as death."

Q. "Is not every human soul a portion of Deity?"

A. "Most certainly."

Q. "Did every soul in this room formerly exist as an individual human being?"

A. "We believe, in harmony with many ancients, that the soul never had a beginning, as we are assured it never will have an ending. Therefore it must have had a dwelling-place—must have been identified; it must have had a sphere in which to live previous to its entering the human form. We do not believe that the soul takes on its powers of individualization alone through the body; but we believe it has ever been an independent power."

Q. "How long is it before the spirit returns to consciousness after entering the spirit-world?"

A. "Generally, under favorable conditions, in a very few moments; sometimes hours, years—sometimes centuries."

LAST LETTER OF JOHN WESLEY.

The following letter from John Wesley to Mr. Wilberforce, M. P., is said to be the last from his pen. It shows very clearly what he thought of slavery. Would that all his followers were as bold and firm in denouncing the same evil, which is now, no doubt, much worse than in his day. This letter was dated just six days before his death.

February 24th, 1791.

My Dear Sir:—Unless Divine power has raised you up to be as "Athanasius contra mundum," I see not how you can go through your glorious enterprise in opposing that execrable villany which is the scandal of religion, of England, and human nature. Unless God has raised you up for this very thing, you will be worn out by the opposition of men and devils; but if God be for you, who can be against you? Are all of them stronger than God? Oh, be not weary in well-doing! Go on in the name of God and in the power of his might, till even American slavery, the vilest that ever saw the sun, shall vanish before it. That He who has guided you from your youth up may continue to strengthen you in this and all things is the prayer of,

Dear Sir, your affectionate servant,

John Wesley.

To Wm. Wilberforce, Esq., M. P.

SPIRIT CONTROL.

Light is being thrown upon the spiritual manifestations, which clearly shows how they are accomplished. For years, we have been satisfied that the only difference between mesmerism and Spiritualism was in the agents. In mesmerism they are men; in Spiritualism, demons. Both parties employ the same means to produce their manifestations.

The following questions to the spirits, and their answers, are to the point. They were published in the Banner of Light, Aug. 22nd, 1863.

"Q. How do we understand that spirits control an organism?

A. We have just informed you that they do so by means of the magnetic aura, or animal magnetism.

Q. Do spirits concentrate their power upon the brain and nerves?

A. Sometimes on the nervous system. In cases of mechanical writing, power is concentrated upon the ganglion of the arm, and is not at all connected with the brain. In cases of entire physical control, then it pervades the entire physical body."

PRAYER FOR THE DEAD.

As strange as it may seem to some, it is a fact that the Roman Catholic church prays for men after they are dead. In the notice of the "death of the Most Rev. Archbishop Hughes, D. D.," as given by The Catholic, of Jan. 9th, 1864, the Editor says, "We would ask our readers to offer up a prayer for the repose of his soul." What strange doctrines have arisen from the fable that man does not die! When will men see the snare of Satan, and escape from his fascinating wiles? If all could be made to see that no part of man is alive between death and the resurrection, the Devil's stronghold would be demolished. Let all who see this important truth be firm in its defense, yet kind to all opposers.

WHAT IT COSTS.

Reader, are you helping to increase the amount? Have you not done your part? Come, stop now. Do for the sake of the rising generation. Do not teach them any bad habits by your example. Save the money and give it to the poor. The following speaks for itself:

"The cost of tobacco in the United States is $17,000,000, which is at least three times the amount expended for religious purposes of every description, and fifty times the amount contributed by all denominations for foreign missions."—Montreal Witness, Sept. 1863.

For the World's Crisis.

REV. DENNIS CHAPIN,

Whose speeches have been published in the Crisis, of the Stanbridge Discussion notoriety, lies silent in death, in Berkshire, Vt., where, after a most distressing illness of nine days, he died, at the residence of E. M. Hull, of that ever to be dreaded and loathsome disease, confluent small pox, which he contracted in traveling, he knew not where. Thus he died, away from home and relatives, among strangers, deprived by the nature of his complaint of the cheering visits of his friends. A published account of his death, which I read, says: "He bore his sufferings with patience, and died as the christian dieth." It causes a feeling of sadness to think of circumstances so painful; and this case should be a solemn warning to parents and others to practice Jenner's art and be vaccinated, and have their children secured from death under such circumstances as above detailed. Infant baptism is neither scriptural or reasonable; but the vaccination of young children should be required by law.

MORE ABOUT LYNN.

The good work of which we spoke on a former occasion is progressing in this place. Fifteen or twenty have been hopefully converted, backsliders reclaimed, and sinners are still feeling their need of Christ. The most of those connected with this church have laid aside their hobbies (if they ever had any), and are determined to be at peace among themselves, contending for the moral qualifications requisite to constitute them heirs to the kingdom of God, and for the salvation of those who are out of Christ. They have established a prayer meeting every Tuesday evening, aside from their regular meetings, called the young folks' meeting, which is well attended, and the results thus far have been excellent. The earnest prayers, warm exhortations, and the powerful appeals to the unconverted, which characterize their meetings, cannot fail to be attended with good results.

According to appointment, we spent Lord's day, June 12th, with this church. After the morning service we repaired to the consecrated spot, where there was much water, and there buried five happy souls in the likeness of Christ's death, who we hope will be in the likeness of his resurrection. A large concourse of people assembled to witness this solemn christian requirement in its practical phase. We were reminded of those who came to John's baptism in the days of our Savior. We felt that the Spirit of God brooded over the waters and the audience assembled, and that it was good to be there. At the close of the service in the afternoon we commemorated the death of our Savior in partaking of the bread and wine—emblems of his body and blood. This was an additional good season to the saints.

The work is still progressing, and others will go forward in baptism soon. Your Bro. in Christ,

A. W. Sibley.

THE NEW WESTERN TABERNACLE.

A tent is a tabernacle. Then in plain English we are to have a tent for the north-west. The old tent can be reduced in size, and used by brethren in small places with good effect this season, although it is worn and somewhat rotten; but it will not answer at all for the large meetings of my summer campaign.

I have not till lately been able to see how we could afford to get a new tent, at a cost of from four to five hundred dollars this year. The paper and tract fund of $1,000 would be all we could raise in the West. And so I let the matter rest. But I knew if it was God's will to have me go into camp this year, he would provide a tent to shelter me from the burning heat and pitiless storm. So I said all that I had to say about the matter to Him whose I am, and whom I serve. About two weeks since the Lord sent a friend to me, to say that he wished to meet half the expenses of a tent, for my summer tour; a friend to whom I had said nothing, and I did not imagine the object of the interview until we met. From another friend I have the promise of something more; so that about two hundred dollars in addition will perfect this work. I shall be glad to hear from any who would like to own a strip of cloth in the WESTERN TABERNACLE, by which their money will be bringing in a good income for lost men.

The names of the above mentioned donors to this good work are not to be published; and any who send us help for this object can have it published or not, as they please, with or without their names. May the Lord dispose the hearts of his stewards aright in this matter.

By the help of God we shall blow the trumpet in Zion, and sound the alarm in God's holy mountain, to prepare a people for his coming. We shall live in camp and keep our banner flying till cold weather drives us in-doors.

LOVE, OR LIGHT.

FOR WHICH DO WE SHOW MOST ZEAL?

Light on the things of God is desirable at any time. Yet, in itself, light would not distinguish us from the most devoted emissaries of Satan. Light does not save a man from pride, envy, and malice. Its very tendency, in itself, is rather to promote these things; as Paul says, "Knowledge puffeth up." Nor does the possession of truth commend one's character necessarily, for we may "hold the truth in unrighteousness." We know this to be true in our past history. How many "ministerial rascals," smooth-tongued, and of like precious zeal with us for our peculiar doctrines, have passed current for a while among us, to the shame of some and the grief of more. How many there are among us whose qualification in the things of God goes no further than a knowledge of certain truths peculiar to our faith, with a pugilistic zeal in defense of them. We have a zeal to "understand all mysteries and all knowledge," and yet, with these simply, Paul says we are "nothing." We labor to speak these things "with the tongues of men and of angels," if possible; but these attainments would only make us "as sounding brass or a tinkling cymbal." With these, too, we may bestow all our goods to feed the poor, and yet it will "profit" us "nothing."

But notwithstanding these considerations so evident, with the scriptural admonitions so abundant, we persist in seeking the truth as the sum and substance of our religion. We bear with impatience an error in doctrine in our intercourse with others, yet we show less anxiety when we see the same individuals indulging in pride, covetousness and malice. We show skill and experience in meeting the evasions attending doctrinal controversies; but we seem "shorn of our strength"—mere babes—in our efforts in encountering the devices of Satan in spiritual wisdom and the love of God. Thus our zeal is manifestly a zeal for light rather than love; our experience is in the theory, rather than the practice; and our religion is of the head, rather than the heart.

In pursuing light, we have forsaken love. In deference to our hobbies, we have left it in the background. We have pursued our "new lights," till, distracted and divided, we are ready to devour each other.

Still we talk about the Lord's coming as near at hand. Still we complain that other professors of religion will not allow it, nor show any zeal for the event. Still we warn others of the degeneracy of the times, and scan with a scrutinizing glance the deviations of other churches. Still we prominently enforce the idea that the word shall judge us in the last day. And all without betraying a feeling of misgiving but what we are all right.

I tremble at the view of our coldness and worldly-mindedness, and especially that we rest so securely in our sins. And when I consider our past experience and blessings, our uniform pretensions as to a readiness to meet the Lord, and realize withal that the great day of his wrath cannot be ten years ahead, I stand appalled at the strange infatuation which has seized us, both preachers and people. Though I might find some relief in the thought that God is merciful, I have to reflect, too, that he is just.

I hear brethren say, sometimes, they believe all the prophecies are fulfilled, and Christ is liable to come any time. I wonder how any one in view of our degeneracy could bear the thought of Christ's coming to gather his elect in this state of things. Where could he find his elect? Would he take the covetous, the proud, and the worldly among us? If so, why not among others too? If not, "who then can be saved?" If he accepts of any others but those who are "dead to the world and alive to God," will he not trample his word under foot? But if such only can be saved, where will he find them?

In '44 there were thousands among us who were dead to the world. In '54 I could witness to many who were dead indeed to its charms. There may be some now, but I do not know where to find them, and I verily fear that there is not a hundred such among us. Should Christ come now, it could but result in the damnation of the mass of us. As God is just, his word would condemn us justly in such a case. But as he is merciful, he will give us a fair test as to our devotion to him, by bringing us into a persecution for Christ's sake. If called to endure this test, many love God and his word too well to give them up for fables. If we are brought through such an ordeal first, I believe he would find hundreds ready for translation where he would find one if he came now. The word admonishes us to look for such a persecution. The time will come when we shall cry day and night unto God for deliverance; when it can be said, Here is the patience and faith of the saints. The hour of temptation, that shall come upon all the world to try them, must yet be realized.

I feel it duty to go and warn my brethren of the dangers which threaten us. I cannot be indifferent to these things; if others are, I see the storm coming, and I cannot forbear. I must raise a warning voice. I must cry aloud and spare not. The dangers are fearfully threatening. The time is short. The judgment is just at hand. The perils of the last days are upon us, and where are the watchmen? O, my God! where are the watchmen in these last times? I feel that I am but a child, yet I cannot forbear to sound an alarm. God's grace assisting me, I will go on in a tone of warning, amidst surrounding darkness, stupidity, and spiritual death.

SUBJECTION.

"Shall we not much rather be in subjection unto the Father of spirits and live?"—Heb. 12: 9.

(See last Crisis.)

Granting, then, that God did so create a spirit-man, how much further was he advanced towards an intelligence than when he had completed the dust-man? Not one whit. For MIND being innate in deity alone, it must still be imparted, or the power of it, to the created spirit, before it can live, think or act, and without such impartation, you might as well put a load of icicles under a locomotive boiler to get the steam up, as to put such a spirit into a dust-man, expecting it to make an intelligence of him. But why admit the water into the cylinder at all? said Watt, and the steam engine was thenceforth a living monument to his genius.

And so, why create a spirit at all, why not the rather impart life and power of thought or reason, at once, and direct, to the dust-man? What! make matter THINK? Well, if it suit you better, endow it with reason, and yet a created spirit involves the same necessity. But, after all, no more power was requisite in God to say to the dust-man, Adam, arise, and be a living moral intelligence, subject to the laws of your organism, than was requisite when Christ said (Matt. 9: 5) to the palsied, "Arise and walk," or to putrifying Lazarus, "Come forth," and "he that was DEAD came forth," ALIVE, "bound hand and foot with grave clothes, and his face bound about with a napkin;" and Jesus said, "Loose him, and let him go." And where does revelation teach that God ever gave to animal man any thing more than the breath of (the spirit of) life, by which he became alive, and being alive, the fruit of his living organism is intellection, by the will of his Creator, subject to the law of his being.

A writer in the New York (Baptist) Recorder of April 6th, 1854, says of the critical reviewers of Dr. Beecher's "Conflict of Ages," "How singularly sure all these critics are that God is all the while creating souls, thousands per minute, each soul for its body, somewhere between conception and birth. How did they find it out? who told them (in the Bible) that the Almighty was thus critically and professionally occupied? Or how did they find out (as numbers seem to be just finding out) that the immaterial principle is not created directly, but propagated by ordinary generation? Clamorous against pre-existence as not proved, where is their proof of this on which they stand to be clamorous?"

Some may ask, Where is the Bible proof, and when has it ever been produced, that God created an "entity" and put it into the dust-man? Upon what sure foundation do they stand, who have come to make immortality of that supposed "entity," and its "consciousness in death" one of the "cardinal principles of christianity," and "hurl damnation" against all who venture to think for themselves, come to a different conclusion, and believe that God's "proclamation" will be literally carried out, when he says, "The soul that sinneth IT shall die?" Where is the Scribe? Where is the WISE man? And where is the Bible proof that death is either "separation of soul and body," or "life in misery," when God in his word makes it extinction of life?"

Prov. 20: 27, says "The spirit of man is the candle or lamp of the Lord," and (24: 20,) "The candle (or lamp) of the wicked shall be put out." And Job 18: 5, 6; "The light of the wicked shall be put out, and the spark of his fire shall not shine; his candle shall be put out with him." But it will be said, That m-e-a-n-s yes, yes, Solomon has told what the cause means, IT is man's SPIRIT, and may be extinguished; or Job and Solomon are not correct.

Olena, O. G. W. Stetson.

☞ "If any one speaks ill of thee," said Epictetus, "consider whether he has truth on his side; and if so, reform thyself, that his censures may not affect thee." When Anaximander was told that the very boys laughed at his singing—"Ay," says he, "then I must learn to sing better." Plato being told that he had many enemies who spoke ill of him—"It is no matter," said he, "I will live so that none shall believe them." This is a sure way to avoid calumny.

This is an entirely new chart of the Symbols and times of Daniel and John. It is also the largest and most important that has ever been published on this subject.

We live in the time when knowledge is increasing and the wise understand; when the watchmen are beginning to see eye to eye, on the nearness of the coming kingdom. Any helps to a better understanding of the times and seasons of the prophetic word, will be hailed with joy by the students of prophecy. This chart is designed as a help for all classes. It will not be dogmatical, but give the great facts of prophetic history and chronology, which can be explained and applied according to the convictions of the lecturer as to special views, all agreeing in the general descriptive view.

It will be three feet and one inch wide, and four feet six inches long. The symbols are given in sections.

First. The symbol of the image, with a scale of years reaching from B. C. 681 down into the present century, showing the chronology of the image, (Dan. 2,) and that we are on the eve of the act of the stone smiting the image, and filling the earth. The different periods are given in arches, by clear black lines over the scale, those which carry us to the end, are carried down to about 1867 to 1875.

In the second section the papacy has a prominent place, showing its rise, decay and final fall, with an explanation of the four great monarchies, ending in the kingdom of God. (Dan. 7.)

The third section gives the dragon of Rev. 12, and the beast and woman of Rev. 17.

The fourth section continues the symbols of the 8th of Daniel, with the 2,300 days, to the "cleansing of the sanctuary."

The fifth section gives the papal beasts of Rev. 13, or the first and second beasts. The woman in the wilderness (Rev. 12,) 1,260 years. The two witnesses, clothed in sackcloth (Rev. 11). Splendid pictures are given in this section of the leopard beast, the "two-horned" beast, the woman representing the true church, and the Bible covered with sackcloth,—then shut, and killed—then opened in light.

At the close of the 1,260 years, the seven vials are placed, as being poured out from 1863, to the end, when the scene will close by a voice from the throne, saying, "It is done."

The sixth gives a vivid view of the seven seals of (Rev. 6); with the beasts, horses, and all the imagery of that chapter; the best, and really the only view on so large a scale, ever given of this vision of the seals.

The seventh section gives the vision of the seven angels in (Rev. 8 and 9), with the eagle, crying, "Woe, woe, woe," which brings us to the end, when the seventh trump shall sound, and the kingdoms of this world shall become the kingdoms of our Lord and his Christ. The price will be $5,00, discount of $1,00 to agents who sell again. Address: J. V. Himes, Buchanan, Mich.

We had the pleasure, a few days ago, of seeing the first rough drawing of the above chart; and we can say, if, when finished, the execution shall be as good as the design, it will be the best chart of the kind ever got up among us. W. B. H.

Correspondence.

From Bro. A. T. Gorham.

Bro. Grant:—Perchance a few words from the little band of pilgrims in Castleton, who are watching and waiting for the second advent of our blessed Savior, would be acceptable to the readers of the Crisis; and supposing this to be the case, I take the liberty of engrossing their attention for a few moments. The good cause is not advancing as rapidly as we would desire and pray for, but nevertheless we have been the favored recipients of some drops of grace, which may eventually prove to be as harbingers of a plentiful shower. We meet with considerable opposition from those whose profession should rather lead them to become our friends than our enemies; but if the Lord is for us, who can be against us? "Truth is mighty and will prevail"; and having on the whole armor of God, and taking the blessed Bible as the guiding-star of our lonely pilgrimage, we shall be enabled to quench the fiery darts of the wicked, and at last receive a crown whose glory fadeth not away.

Dear Bro. and Sr. Mathewson (late of Sandy Hill, N. Y.), are now with us, and we feel, indeed, to bless the Lord for their presence. Bro. M. preaches the truth boldly, and we trust that the good seed will not altogether fall on barren ground. Our social meetings are very interesting, and the witnesses of Jesus many. Pray for us, dear brothers and sisters, that we may remain steadfast, and be reckoned among the faithful in the day of His appearing. Yours in the gospel hope,

Adrian T. Gorham.

Castleton, Vt., June, 1864.

From Bro. C. Bond.

Bro. Grant:—As I took up the Crisis of June 7th, my eyes caught the words,—"Theology vs. the Bible," as the heading of a short article over the signature of T. E. Wilson. I used to be greatly perplexed with such gross departure from the teachings of God's word by his professed ministers as pointed out by this brother, which led me to search for the cause of the inconsistency of much of the preaching of the present day.

For instance, I have frequently heard the preacher tell the sinner that nothing but the brittle thread of life kept him from a burning hell, and if the thread were cut he would in a moment fall into its fiery embrace, and in the same discourse tell him how great his disappointment must be at the day of judgment, when he shall come to the great tribunal, supposing himself a child of God, having done many wonderful works in his name, to hear the sentence, "Depart, I never knew you." Now it always seemed to me that the sinners that were cut of from life two, three and five thousand years ago, and spent the intervening time between earth and the judgment in the burning abyss, should know better, if they know any thing, than to entertain such groundless expectations.

But why is such stuff preached to intelligent congregations? Simply because our teachers have departed from the truth, as Paul said they would, and are teaching fables; and men will listen to them with itching ears, instead of listening to the word of truth in meekness and faith. This creates a demand for such preaching, and the demand calls for a supply, and hence it is that we have such

Voltaire. For years while reveling in wine and debauchery, they had held up religion to contempt. But they now suddenly became very devout, espoused the cause of their boon companions, the bishops, and remonstrated against laying unholy hands upon the treasury of the Lord. All over Europe, the two most formidable forces, secular and religious aristocracy, were now combined against the popular reform. It was this principle which led the Protestant English noble, and the papal Austrian bishop to make common cause against the regeneration of France." Abbott's History of the Revolution. p. 170.

Hence, says the historian again, "Despotic Europe combined, and with all her accumulated armies fell upon the people of France. A conference of the foreign powers was held on the 20th of May, A. D. 1791; at this conference it was agreed to assemble at once 100,000 men upon the frontiers of France, with the purpose if possible to arrest the progress of the revolution, by intimidation." These armies which were arrayed against France, were augmented from time to time, until, finally, in process of time the military element became predominant in France, when the allied armies were driven from the French frontiers. Thus it will be seen, that as early as the spring or summer of A. D. 1791, nearly all the nations of Europe were combined to hold in check the principles and progress of the revolution. This fact I think also positive proof that the two witnesses must have been slain as early as the above date.

We also learn from the verse under consideration, that "the two witnesses" were dead for "three days and a half." This period I understand to be symbolic time, and to mean three years and a half; as this view is generally admitted, I shall not need to offer evidence as proof. If the view that I have presented, namely, that the two witnesses were slain in the spring of A. D. 1791 is correct; then we must find a change in the spirit of the revolution to have attained in the autumn of A. D. 1794; three and a half years from the spring of A. D. 1791. This universal history testifies to be a fact.

The historian says, "At the death of Robespierre in the autumn of A. D. 1794, the Jacobin rule was overthrown and the reign of terror ended." Immediately after the fall of Robespierre, those stringent laws which had been enacted by the Jacobin party, and which had kept a part of the people of France in continual terror, began to be relaxed; "and the principles of mercy and toleration superseded the hideous dogmas of the Jacobins." "Within ten days, ten thousand persons were liberated from the French prisons." The party or government now in power, steadily retraced the steps which had been taken by the fanatics of the revolution, and within about four months, "the decrees which had been issued against priests and nobles were repealed, and the celebration of christian worship was permitted in the churches." See Redhead's History of the Revolution. Vol. II. p. 56.

These historical facts are sufficient and positive proof that the Bible ("the two witnesses") and its teachings had become, at least, somewhat revived at this point of time, namely, in the autumn of A. D. 1794; and from the fact that the decrees against priests were repealed, and permission to exercise religious worship in the churches, was granted at that time; it is evident the three years and a half period must have ended at the same time. Thus has been shown the date for the beginning and ending of the three days and a half period, during which time the two witnesses were dead; namely, that they were slain in the spring of A. D. 1791; and were revived to life in the autumn of A. D. 1794.

For the World's Crisis.

THE CHURCH'S STRENGTH.

It is in the union of its members. That in union is strength, is a well established maxim. A numerous membership may be desirable, but the strength of the church is not in that. Preachers in addressing a large assembly, are often favorably affected, but neither is it in that. Hear the Savior: "That if two of you shall agree as touching any thing they shall ask, it shall be done for them of my Father which is in heaven. For where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst of them." Matt. 18: 19, 20.

Here, then, the church's strength is clearly seen, and any church that has two or three members that meet in the name of Jesus, and are in the union of the gospel, is a strong church. Scores of members there may be, but the strength is with these peculiar ones. This is beautifully illustrated in the visits of Jesus to the house of Lazarus and his sisters in Bethany. See Luke 10: 38, and John, chapters eleven and twelve.

1. When Mary sat at Jesus' feet, and heard his word and Jesus declaring to Martha, Mary hath chosen that good part that shall not be taken from her.

2. In the sickness of Lazarus, the sisters sending for Jesus, their friend, he waiting until Lazarus was really dead, and then by his word brought him back from death's domain. (Bless the Lord! for such a friend.) Here then is a strong church, if we have never seen one before.

Now turn to John 17: 21–23, and see what this union is,—"That they all may be one as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us; that the world may believe that thou hast sent me. And the glory which thou gavest me I have given them; that they may be one as we are one." And also 1 John 1: 3, 7. "And truly our fellowship is with the Father, and with his Son Jesus Christ." "If we walk in the light as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth us from all sin."

As evidence of what may be done by one living in this union, please read this extract from the life of Nicholas Murray, Presbyterian minister:—

"One evening as I was about retiring to rest, I heard a knock at my door, and my German friend was introduced, his countenance full of emotion. On taking his seat, his first words were these:

'My dear pastor, I have come to tell you the Lord is about to revive his work here.'

Surprised at his appearance and language, and at the lateness of his visit, I asked him, Why do you think so? He replied as follows:

'About eight o'clock this evening I went up to my hay-mow, to give hay to my cattle, and while there the Spirit of God came upon me, and has kept me there praying till now. I feel that God is about to revive his work, and could not go in to my family till I told you.'

The entire simplicity and earnestness of the good man convinced me that God had vouchsafed to visit his servant. A few days convinced me that the Spirit of prayer was on the increase. And a few weeks after that evening of wrestling prayer with God on the haymow, found me in the midst of the first revival of my ministry, and one of the most precious I ever witnessed."

This was about 1830. SAMUEL CURRY.

The World's Crisis

AND SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER.

☞ NOTICE.

All orders and monies for the World's Crisis, or Books and Tracts for sale at this Office, and all matters pertaining to the business of the Office, must be addressed to the Business Agent,

MILES GRANT, Crisis Box, Boston.

RATHER COSTLY.

When the Savior came the first time, he was noted for associating with the poor, and for taking special pains to preach to them. When John sent to know if he was the Messiah, among other reasons given in answer to the inquiry, the messenger was instructed to say to John, "The poor have the gospel preached to them." This implies that before the Savior came, the Pharisees paid but little attention to the poor. They did not find a welcome in the popular synagogues. As human nature is the same now as then, we must expect to see the same state of things in these last days. We fear the Savior and his apostles would not receive much better treatment from popular Christendom at the present day than they did eighteen hundred years since.

The following shows what it costs to attend a fashionable house of worship:—"A pew in King's Chapel, Boston, was sold by auction on Monday last, for the enormous price of $5400." We do not see how the poor could buy a seat in such a house, or feel at home among the rich and fashionable who assemble there, even if they could succeed in gaining admittance. We presume it would be thought a great disturbance if one shout aloud the praises of the Lord, as saints once did in the great congregation.

It is very apparent that the life and power of godliness has nearly departed from the nominal churches of these last days. The form remains, and that alone. The poor are turned away from the gospel, instead of being invited to come and partake of its joys and blessings. Many are disgusted with the whole system of modern religion, and are swelling the ranks of infidelity. They have lost all confidence in those who profess to be the disciples of Jesus, because they live so like the world.

DEPOSITERY OF TRUTH.

We would inquire of the reader, where would you go to find "the deposit of moral truths"? We trust you would say, to the Bible. In an address to the Pope by three hundred Catholics of all nations, who were present at Rome a few months since, it is said, "It is she ("the Holy Roman Church") who keeps entire the deposit of moral truths, without which all societies would return to barbarism."

Notwithstanding the foregoing statement, we think the following prophetic language may be very properly applied to the so called "Holy Roman Church,"—"It cast down the truth to the ground; and it practiced, and prospered."—Dan. 8: 12. It is a well known fact that many of the ceremonies and doctrines of the Roman Catholic church were borrowed from the Pagans, and modified so as to make them palatable to the church, and still be acceptable to the Pagans; and by this means secure the influence of all. But her days of boasting are nearly ended, and her night of sorrow is at hand. Her end will be terrible, as described under the symbol of a "woman" in Rev. 17th and 18th chapters. Her former lovers are now her worst enemies, and only wait for an opportunity to "burn her with fire."

THE PROGRESS.

There is a very marked progress in these last days, as all must admit; but it is in the opposite direction from that of early christians. The following from the Tract Journal will give an indication of the progression of these times:—

"At the late meeting of one of the Conferences in Massachusetts, an essay was read on 'The duty of christians to make visits among their brethren, and in the surrounding community, for religious purposes.' The reporter adds:—'The novelty of the subject, and the happy manner in which it was treated, secured the attention of the audience, and prepared the way for a lively and protracted discussion.' Nothing more than this is needed to show how far our churches have departed from the primitive type of piety, when christians 'went every where, preaching the word.' Now this is a 'novel subject!' We hope it will not be such long."—Tract Journal.

We fear the subject will become more novel, before it is less. The fact is, vital godliness is dying out, and the spirit of the world is coming upon the church with an alarming progress.

WM. MILLER AND MOSES HULL.

When speaking of a four days Spiritualist meeting in Portsmouth, N. H., last March, Uriah Clark says, "On the last evening, a band of thirty or forty friends held a select circle, which was attended with some incidents of peculiar interest. Through Mrs. Albertson, Bro. Hull was very impressively addressed and consecrated anew to the spiritual work by the venerable Wm. Miller, the father of Second Adventism, from which Bro. Hull was converted to Spiritualism."

The spirits are opening an earnest war against those who believe in the personal coming of Christ, and the sleep of the dead. The latter truth silences all their batteries. Let every child of the Lord be firm and immovable. It is death to yield.

AN EDITOR'S PERPLEXITIES.

The following from one of our exchanges, will give the reader a pretty good idea of the peculiar position of an editor. Although the following applies more particularly to an editor of a secular paper, an editor of a religious paper finds it just as impossible to please all. We think he should always aim to please the Lord, and leave the results in his hands.

EDITING A PAPER.

"Editing a paper is a very pleasant business. If it contains too much political matter, people won't have it.

If it contains too little, they won't have it.

If we publish telegraph reports, folks say they are nothing but lies.

If we omit them, they say we have no enterprise, or suppress them for political effect.

If we have in a few jokes, folks say we are nothing but a rattle-head.

If we omit jokes, they say we are an old fossil.

If we publish original matter, they blame us for not giving selections.

If we publish selections, folks say we are lazy for not writing more, and giving them what they have not read in some other paper.

If we give complimentary notices, we are censured for being partial.

If we do not, all hands say we are a greedy hog.

If we attend church, they say it is only for effect.

If we do not, they denounce us as deceitful and desperately wicked.

If we remain in the office and attend to business, folks say we are too proud to mingle with our fellows.

If we go out, they say we never attend to business.

If we do not pay all bills promptly, folks say we are not to be trusted.

If we do pay promptly, they say we stole the money."

We solicit the prayers of our readers, that we may have special wisdom from the Lord to guide us right, and courage to do that which is well pleasing in his sight, regardless of censure or praise.

A MODERN PENTECOST.

The contrast between modern and ancient christianity is very striking. A pentecost in these days consists in "a most remarkable outburst of popular jollity, in which all sects, denominations and conditions" take a part. The following from the N. Y. Independent, is a part of the description of the Sanitary Fair in Brooklyn, N. Y. We think the contrast is very marked between that and the one described in Acts 2nd chapter, which was such a blessed season to the apostles. The Independent says:—

"Notwithstanding it is the season of Lent, when pious Catholics and good Episcopalians religiously abstain from all festive gatherings, except on mi careme, the City of Churches, during the past week, has been the scene of a most remarkable outburst of popular jollity, in which all sects, denominations and conditions have taken part. It has been a sort of pentecostal gathering, wherein Catholics, Jews, Presbyterians, Methodists, Unitarians, Swedenborgians, Baptists, Quakers, Congregationalists and Moravians forgot all their differences, and, moved by the human instincts of patriotsim and benevolence, poured into one common reservoir their thank-offerings, from the rich gift of the opulent merchants of the Hights to the widows' mites of the alleys and by-ways. No lovelier, soul-satisfying spectacle was ever witnessed on this earth. So far as we can see, there has been no base alloy mingled with this golden display of what is best and beautiful in humanity."

We may well inquire, what next? We may expect a deeper plunge into the spirit and manners of the world. The world and church have made friends as truly as did Pilate and Herod. We see no ground to hope for a better state of things till Jesus comes. It is time to separate from every thing unholy, and keep "unspotted from the world."

SCYTHES AND SPEARS.

According to the prophecy of Joel, "before the great and terrible day of the Lord come," "the mighty men" will be waked up, and "all the men of war," and they will beat "plow-shares into swords, and . . . pruning-hooks (margin, scythes) into spears."

A gentleman visiting Springfield, Mass., says:—

"Wednesday morning, before leaving, I had an opportunity lo visit the great U. S. Armory where I saw 185.000 muskets all ready for service, and had the privilege of viewing the different apartments where these implements of death are made. The business of this establishment has probabably been increased ten to twenty fold since the war began. They now employ eight thousand hands who run the machinery night and day (Sunday excepted) and turn out one thousand muskets every day. While conversing with a friend on the facts of the fulfillment of Joel's prophecy, 'Wake up the mighty men etc., beat your plowshares into swords, and your pruning hooks '(margin, scythes) into spears,' said he, that has had a literal fulfillment here, for they brought in several car loads of old scythes and made them over into bayonets."

DEMONIACAL INSTRUCTION.

In these days of infidelity, the people seem more anxious to know what the demons say, than they are to hear the word of the Lord; and more ready to believe them than him. In a late Spiritualist paper we find some questions put to the spirits, and their answers, as follows:—

Q. "Do you consider Supreme Being and Supreme power synonymous?"

A. "Yes, we do. . . . When you have done with human senses and the things of earth-life, then you will look upon the Supreme Being not as a personality, but as a wondrous principle; . . . will perceive that there is a God-principle dwelling within each human soul, that the Divine could not well dispense with; therefore its immortality."

Q. "What is the definition of the word dead?"

A. "There is no such thing as death."

Q. "Is not every human soul a portion of Deity?"

A. "Most certainly."

Q. "Did every soul in this room formerly exist as an individual human being?"

A. "We believe, in harmony with many ancients, that the soul never had a beginning, as we are assured it never will have an ending. Therefore it must have had a dwelling-place—must have been identified; it must have had a sphere in which to live previous to its entering the human form. We do not believe that the soul takes on its powers of individualization alone through the body; but we believe it has ever been an independent power."

Q. "How long is it before the spirit returns to consciousness after entering the spirit-world?"

A. "Generally, under favorable conditions, in a very few moments; sometimes hours, years—sometimes centuries."

LAST LETTER OF JOHN WESLEY.

The following letter from John Wesley to Mr. Wilberforce, M. P., is said to be the last from his pen. It shows very clearly what he thought of slavery. Would that all his followers were as bold and firm in denouncing the same evil, which is now, no doubt, much worse than in his day. This letter was dated just six days before his death.

FEBRUARY 24th, 1791.

My Dear Sir:—Unless Divine power has raised you up to be as "Athanasius contra mundum," I see not how you can go through your glorious enterprise in opposing that execrable villany which is the scandal of religion, of England, and human nature. Unless God has raised you up for this very thing, you will be worn out by the opposition of men and devils; but if God be for you, who can be against you? Are all of them stronger than God? Oh, be not weary in well-doing! Go on in the name of God and in the power of his might, till even American slavery, the vilest that ever saw the sun, shall vanish before it. That He who has guided you from your youth up may continue to strengthen you in this and all things is the prayer of,

Dear Sir, your affectionate servant,

JOHN WESLEY.

To Wm. Wilberforce, Esq., M. P.

SPIRIT CONTROL.

Light is being thrown upon the spiritual manifestations, which clearly shows how they are accomplished. For years, we have been satisfied that the only difference between mesmerism and Spiritualism was in the agents. In mesmerism they are men; in Spiritualism, demons. Both parties employ the same means to produce their manifestations.

The following questions to the spirits, and their answers, are to the point. They were published in the Banner of Light, Aug. 22nd, 1863.

"Q. How do we understand that spirits control an organism?

A. We have just informed you that they do so by means of the magnetic aura, or animal magnetism.

Q. Do spirits concentrate their power upon the brain and nerves?

A. Sometimes on the nervous system. In cases of mechanical writing, power is concentrated upon the ganglion of the arm, and is not at all connected with the brain. In cases of entire physical control, then it pervades the entire physical body."

PRAYER FOR THE DEAD.

As strange as it may seem to some, it is a fact that the Roman Catholic church prays for men after they are dead. In the notice of the "death of the Most Rev. Archbishop Hughes, D. D.," as given by The Catholic, of Jan. 9th, 1864, the Editor says, "We would ask our readers to offer up a prayer for the repose of his soul." What strange doctrines have arisen from the fable that man does not die! When will men see the snare of Satan, and escape from his fascinating wiles? If all could be made to see that no part of man is alive between death and the resurrection, the Devil's stronghold would be demolished. Let all who see this important truth be firm in its defense, yet kind to all opposers.

WHAT IT COSTS.

Reader, are you helping to increase the amount? Have you not done your part? Come, stop now. Do for the sake of the rising generation. Do not teach them any bad habits by your example. Save the money and give it to the poor. The following speaks for itself:

"The cost of tobacco in the United States is $17,000,000, which is at least three times the amount expended for religious purposes of every description, and fifty times the amount contributed by all denoninations for foreign missions."—Montreal Witness, Sept. 1863.

For the World's Crisis.

REV. DENNIS CHAPIN,

Whose speeches have been published in the Crisis, of the Stanbridge Discussion notoriety, lies silent in death, in Berkshire, Vt., where, after a most distressing illness of nine days, he died, at the residence of E. M. Hull, of that ever to be dreaded and loathsome disease, confluent small pox, which he contracted in traveling, he knew not where. Thus he died, away from home and relatives, among strangers, deprived by the nature of his complaint of the cheering visits of his friends. A published account of his death, which I read, says: "He bore his sufferings with patience, and died as the christian dieth." It causes a feeling of sadness to think of circumstances so painful; and this case should be a solemn warning to parents and others to practice Jenner's art and be vaccinated, and have their children secured from death under such circumstances as above detailed. Infant baptism is neither scriptural or reasonable; but the vaccination of young children should be required by law.

MORE ABOUT LYNN.

The good work of which we spoke on a former occasion is progressing in this place. Fifteen or twenty have been hopefully converted, backsliders reclaimed, and sinners are still feeling their need of Christ. The most of those connected with this church have laid aside their hobbies (if they ever had any), and are determined to be at peace among themselves, contending for the moral qualifications requisite to constitute them heirs to the kingdom of God, and for the salvation of those who are out of Christ. They have established a prayer meeting every Tuesday evening, aside from their regular meetings, called the young folks' meeting, which is well attended, and the results thus far have been excellent. The earnest prayers, warm exhortations, and the powerful appeals to the unconverted, which characterize their meetings, cannot fail to be attended with good results.

According to appointment, we spent Lord's day, June 12th, with this church. After the morning service we repaired to the consecrated spot, where there was much water, and there buried five happy souls in the likeness of Christ's death, who we hope will be in the likeness of his resurrection. A large concourse of people assembled to witness this solemn christian requirement in its practical phase. We were reminded of those who came to John's baptism in the days of our Savior. We felt that the Spirit of God brooded over the waters and the audience assembled, and that it was good to be there. At the close of the service in the afternoon we commemorated the death of our Savior in partaking of the bread and wine—emblems of his body and blood. This was an additional good season to the saints.

The work is still progressing, and others will go forward in baptism soon. Your Bro. in Christ,

A. W. SIBLEY.

THE NEW WESTERN TABERNACLE.

A tent is a tabernacle. Then in plain English we are to have a tent for the north-west. The old tent can be reduced in size, and used by brethren in small places with good effect this season, although it is worn and somewhat rotten; but it will not answer at all for the large meetings of my summer campaign.

I have not till lately been able to see how we could afford to get a new tent, at a cost of from four to five hundred dollars this year. The paper and tract fund of $1,000 would be all we could raise in the West. And so I let the matter rest. But I knew if it was God's will to have me go into camp this year, he would provide a tent to shelter me from the burning heat and pitiless storm. So I said all that I had to say about the matter to Him whose I am, and whom I serve. About two weeks since the Lord sent a friend to me, to say that he wished to meet half the expenses of a tent, for my summer tour; a friend to whom I had said nothing, and I did not imagine the object of the interview until we met. From another friend I have the promise of something more; so that about two hundred dollars in addition will perfect this work. I shall be glad to hear from any who would like to own a strip of cloth in the WESTERN TABERNACLE, by which their money will be bringing in a good income for lost men.

The names of the above mentioned donors to this good work are not to be published; and any who send us help for this object can have it published or not, as they please, with or without their names. May the Lord dispose the hearts of his stewards aright in this matter.

By the help of God we shall blow the trumpet in Zion, and sound the alarm in God's holy mountain, to prepare a people for his coming. We shall live in camp and keep our banner flying till cold weather drives us in-doors.

LOVE, OR LIGHT.

FOR WHICH DO WE SHOW MOST ZEAL?

Light on the things of God is desirable at any time. Yet, in itself, light would not distinguish us from the most devoted emissaries of Satan. Light does not save a man from pride, envy, and malice. Its very tendency, in itself, is rather to promote these things; as Paul says, "Knowledge puffeth up." Nor does the possession of truth commend one's character necessarily, for we may "hold the truth in unrighteousness." We know this to be true in our past history. How many "ministerial rascals," smooth-tongued, and of like precious zeal with us for our peculiar doctrines, have passed current for a while among us, to the shame of some and the grief of more. How many there are among us whose qualification in the things of God goes no further than a knowledge of certain truths peculiar to our faith, with a pugilistic zeal in defense of them. We have a zeal to "understand all mysteries and all knowledge," and yet, with these simply, Paul says we are "nothing." We labor to speak these things "with the tongues of men and of angels," if possible; but these attainments would only make us "as sounding brass or a tinkling cymbal." With these, too, we may bestow all our goods to feed the poor, and yet it will "profit" us "nothing."

But notwithstanding these considerations so evident, with the scriptural admonitions so abundant, we persist in seeking the truth as the sum and substance of our religion. We bear with impatience an error in doctrine in our intercourse with others, yet we show less anxiety when we see the same individuals indulging in pride, covetousness and malice. We show skill and experience in meeting the evasions attending doctrinal controversies; but we seem "shorn of our strength"—mere babes—in our efforts in encountering the devices of Satan in spiritual wisdom and the love of God. Thus our zeal is manifestly a zeal for light rather than love; our experience is in the theory, rather than the practice; and our religion is of the head, rather than the heart.

In pursuing light, we have forsaken love. In deference to our hobbies, we have left it in the background. We have pursued our "new lights," till, distracted and divided, we are ready to devour each other.

Still we talk about the Lord's coming as near at hand. Still we complain that other professors of religion will not allow it, nor show any zeal for the event. Still we warn others of the degeneracy of the times, and scan with a scrutinizing glance the deviations of other churches. Still we prominently enforce the idea that the word shall judge us in the last day. And all without betraying a feeling of misgiving but what we are all right.

I tremble at the view of our coldness and worldly-mindedness, and especially that we rest so securely in our sins. And when I consider our past experience and blessings, our uniform pretensions as to a readiness to meet the Lord, and realize withal that the great day of his wrath cannot be ten years ahead, I stand appalled at the strange infatuation which has seized us, both preachers and people. Though I might find some relief in the thought that God is merciful, I have to reflect, too, that he is just.

I hear brethren say, sometimes, they believe all the prophecies are fulfilled, and Christ is liable to come any time. I wonder how any one in view of our degeneracy could bear the thought of Christ's coming to gather his elect in this state of things. Where could he find his elect? Would he take the covetous, the proud, and the worldly among us? If so, why not among others too? If not, "who then can be saved?" If he accepts of any others but those who are "dead to the world and alive to God," will he not trample his word under foot? But if such only can be saved, where will he find them?

In '44 there were thousands among us who were dead to the world. In '54 I could witness to many who were dead indeed to its charms. There may be some now, but I do not know where to find them, and I verily fear that there is not a hundred such among us. Should Christ come now, it could but result in the damnation of the mass of us. As God is just, his word would condemn us justly in such a case. But as he is merciful, he will give us a fair test as to our devotion to him, by bringing us into a persecution for Christ's sake. If called to endure this test, many love God and his word too well to give them up for fables. If we are brought through such an ordeal first, I believe he would find hundreds ready for translation where he would find one if he came now. The word admonishes us to look for such a persecution. The time will come when we shall cry day and night unto God for deliverance; when it can be said, Here is the patience and faith of the saints. The hour of temptation, that shall come upon all the world to try them, must yet be realized.

I feel it duty to go and warn my brethren of the dangers which threaten us. I cannot be indifferent to these things; if others are, I see the storm coming, and I cannot forbear. I must raise a warning voice. I must cry aloud and spare not. The dangers are fearfully threatening. The time is short. The judgment is just at hand. The perils of the last days are upon us, and where are the watchmen? O, my God! where are the watchmen in these last times? I feel that I am but a child, yet I cannot forbear to sound an alarm. God's grace assisting me, I will go on in a tone of warning, amidst surrounding darkness, stupidity, and spiritual death.

SUBJECTION.

"Shall we not much rather be in subjection unto the Father of spirits and live?"—HEB. 12: 9.

(See last Crisis.)

Granting, then, that God did so create a spirit-man, how much further was he advanced towards an intelligence than when he had completed the dust-man? Not one whit. For MIND being innate in deity alone, it must still be imparted, or the power of it, to the created spirit, before it can live, think or act, and without such impartation, you might as well put a load of icicles under a locomotive boiler to get the steam up, as to put such a spirit into a dust-man, expecting it to make an intelligence of him. But why admit the water into the cylinder at all? said Watt, and the steam engine was thenceforth a living monument to his genius.

And so, why create a spirit at all, why not the rather impart life and power of thought or reason, at once, and direct, to the dust-man? What! make matter THINK? Well, if it suit you better, endow it with reason, and yet a created spirit involves the same necessity. But, after all, no more power was requisite in God to say to the dust-man, Adam, arise, and be a living moral intelligence, subject to the laws of your organism, than was requisite when Christ said (Matt. 9: 5) to the palsied, "Arise and walk," or to putrifying Lazarus, "Come forth," and "he that was DEAD came forth," ALIVE, "bound hand and foot with grave clothes, and his face bound about with a napkin;" and Jesus said, "Loose him, and let him go." And where does revelation teach that God ever gave to animal man any thing more than the breath of (the spirit of) life, by which he became alive, and being alive, the fruit of his living organism is intellection, by the will of his Creator, subject to the law of his being.

A writer in the New York (Baptist) Recorder of April 6th, 1854, says of the critical reviewers of Dr. Beecher's "Conflict of Ages," "How singularly sure all these critics are that God is all the while creating souls, thousands per minute, each soul for its body, somewhere between conception and birth. How did they find it out? who told them (in the Bible) that the Almighty was thus critically and professionally occupied? Or how did they find out (as numbers seem to be just finding out) that the immaterial principle is not created directly, but propagated by ordinary generation? Clamorous against pre-existence as not proved, where is their proof of this on which they stand to be clamorous?"

Some may ask, Where is the Bible proof, and when has it ever been produced, that God created an "entity" and put it into the dust-man? Upon what sure foundation do they stand, who have come to make immortality of that supposed "entity," and its "consciousness in death" one of the "cardinal principles of christianity," and "hurl damnation" against all who venture to think for themselves, come to a different conclusion, and believe that God's "proclamation" will be literally carried out, when he says, "The soul that sinneth IT shall die?" Where is the Scribe? Where is the WISE man? And where is the Bible proof that death is either "separation of soul and body," or "life in misery," when God in his word makes it extinction of life?"

Prov. 20: 27, says "The spirit of man is the candle or lamp of the Lord," and (24: 20,) "The candle (or lamp) of the wicked shall be put out." And Job 18: 5, 6; "The light of the wicked shall be put out, and the spark of his fire shall not shine; his candle shall be put out with him." But it will be said, That m-e-a-n-s yes, yes, Solomon has told what the cause means, IT is man's SPIRIT, and may be extinguished; or Job and Solomon are not correct.

G. W. STETSON.

☞ "If any one speaks ill of thee," said Epictetus, "consider whether he has truth on his side; and if so, reform thyself, that his censures may not affect thee." When Anaximander was told that the very boys laughed at his singing—"Ay," says he, "then I must learn to sing better." Plato being told that he had many enemies who spoke ill of him—"It is no matter," said he, "I will live so that none shall believe them." This is a sure way to avoid calumny.

This is an entirely new chart of the Symbols and times of Daniel and John. It is also the largest and most important that has ever been published on this subject.

We live in the time when knowledge is increasing and the wise understand; when the watchmen are beginning to see eye to eye, on the nearness of the coming kingdom. Any helps to a better understanding of the times and seasons of the prophetic word, will be hailed with joy by the students of prophecy. This chart is designed as a help for all classes. It will not be dogmatical, but give the great facts of prophetic history and chronology, which can be explained and applied according to the convictions of the lecturer as to special views, all agreeing in the general descriptive view.

It will be three feet and one inch wide, and four feet six inches long. The symbols are given in sections.

First. The symbol of the image, with a scale of years reaching from B. C. 681 down into the present century, showing the chronology of the image, (Dan. 2,) and that we are on the eve of the act of the stone smiting the image, and filling the earth. The different periods are given in arches, by clear black lines over the scale, those which carry us to the end, are carried down to about 1867 to 1875.

In the second section the papacy has a prominent place, showing its rise, decay and final fall, with an explanation of the four great monarchies, ending in the kingdom of God. (Dan. 7.)

The third section gives the dragon of Rev. 12, and the beast and woman of Rev. 17.

The fourth section continues the symbols of the 8th of Daniel, with the 2,300 days, to the "cleansing of the sanctuary."

The fifth section gives the papal beasts of Rev. 13, or the first and second beasts. The woman in the wilderness (Rev. 12,) 1,260 years. The two witnesses, clothed in sackcloth (Rev. 11). Splendid pictures are given in this section of the leopard beast, the "two-horned" beast, the woman representing the true church, and the Bible covered with sackcloth,—then shut, and killed—then opened in light.

At the close of the 1,260 years, the seven vials are placed, as being poured out from 1863, to the end, when the scene will close by a voice from the throne, saying, "It is done."

The sixth gives a vivid view of the seven seals of (Rev. 6); with the beasts, horses, and all the imagery of that chapter; the best, and really the only view on so large a scale, ever given of this vision of the seals.

The seventh section gives the vision of the seven angels in (Rev. 8 and 9), with the eagle, crying, "Woe, woe, woe," which brings us to the end, when the seventh trump shall sound, and the kingdoms of this world shall become the kingdoms of our Lord and his Christ. The price will be $5,00, discount of $1,00 to agents who sell again. Address: J. V. Himes, Buchanan, Mich.

We had the pleasure, a few days ago, of seeing the first rough drawing of the above chart; and we can say, if, when finished, the execution shall be as good as the design, it will be the best chart of the kind ever got up among us. W. B. H.

Correspondence.

From Bro. A. T. Gorham.

BRO. GRANT:—Perchance a few words from the little band of pilgrims in Castleton, who are watching and waiting for the second advent of our blessed Savior, would be acceptable to the readers of the Crisis; and supposing this to be the case, I take the liberty of engrossing their attention for a few moments. The good cause is not advancing as rapidly as we would desire and pray for, but nevertheless we have been the favored recipients of some drops of grace, which may eventually prove to be as harbingers of a plentiful shower. We meet with considerable opposition from those whose profession should rather lead them to become our friends than our enemies; but if the Lord is for us, who can be against us? "Truth is mighty and will prevail"; and having on the whole armor of God, and taking the blessed Bible as the guiding-star of our lonely pilgrimage, we shall be enabled to quench the fiery darts of the wicked, and at last receive a crown whose glory fadeth not away.

Dear Bro. and Sr. Mathewson (late of Sandy Hill, N. Y.), are now with us, and we feel, indeed, to bless the Lord for their presence. Bro. M. preaches the truth boldly, and we trust that the good seed will not altogether fall on barren ground. Our social meetings are very interesting, and the witnesses of Jesus many. Pray for us, dear brothers and sisters, that we may remain steadfast, and be reckoned among the faithful in the day of His appearing. Yours in the gospel hope,

ADRIAN T. GORHAM.

Castleton, Vt., June, 1864.

From Bro. C. Bond.

BRO. GRANT:—As I took up the Crisis of June 7th, my eyes caught the words,—"Theology vs. the Bible," as the heading of a short article over the signature of T. E. Wilson. I used to be greatly perplexed with such gross departure from the teachings of God's word by his professed ministers as pointed out by this brother, which led me to search for the cause of the inconsistency of much of the preaching of the present day.

For instance, I have frequently heard the preacher tell the sinner that nothing but the brittle thread of life kept him from a burning hell, and if the thread were cut he would in a moment fall into its fiery embrace, and in the same discourse tell him how great his disappointment must be at the day of judgment, when he shall come to the great tribunal, supposing himself a child of God, having done many wonderful works in his name, to hear the sentence, "Depart, I never knew you." Now it always seemed to me that the sinners that were cut off from life two, three and five thousand years ago, and spent the intervening time between earth and the judgment in the burning abyss, should know better, if they know any thing, than to entertain such groundless expectations.

But why is such stuff preached to intelligent congregations? Simply because our teachers have departed from the truth, as Paul said they would, and are teaching fables; and men will listen to them with itching ears, instead of listening to the word of truth in meekness and faith. This creates a demand for such preaching, and the demand calls for a supply, and hence it is that we have such teachers heaped together, three, four, five and six in a small town that needs but one at most.

But why do our teachers turn from the truth, so far as to have only a few words of it set at the head of their own flimsy compositions, as a kind of motto or key-note, I cannot tell. A man of very moderate talents may so enrich his discourse from the Lord's treasury, as to instruct and interest men of intelligence and learning. He may thus be "mighty in the Scriptures, and thus only can a preacher of the gospel be mighty.

Says Dr. Rice, in a recent discourse, "It is not too much to assert that in multitudes of instances, the poverty of the pastors discourse with regard to quotations from the word of God, has resulted in the decay of the piety of his people, and prepared the way for divisions and ruinous errors."—"I am persuaded that it is difficult to over estimate the importance of this point."—"Success in our warfare demands a more abundant and skillful use of the "sword of the Spirit."

Those who are accustomed to hear their pastor bring forth, from week to week, things new and old, rich and precious, out of the treasury, will search for themselves.

The same author says, "Unless I greatly err, the preaching of our day, with comparatively few exceptions, stands in strong contrast, in this respect, with that of the preceding generation. I am inclined to believe that one of the sermons of Witherspoon, Edwards, or Davies, contains as large a number of Scripture passages, literally quoted, as one could find in half a dozen sermons of our time."—"Those great men never seemed to feel that they had established any truth, till they had confirmed it by the language of Scripture." "On all subjects, doctrinal and practical, their discourses exhibit this admirable trait."

"This defect in modern discourses, which it is to be feared is not only real but growing, demands the prayerful attention of the ministers of Christ."

I fully endorse the sentiments of the above extracts, and consider the rebuke given by them not uncalled for by the teachers of these "last days." I well remember former days when I received instruction (?) from such teachers, and in my religious experience they were the "dark ages." For instance, one taught me that I was in the kingdom of God. Another, that the kingdom of God was like a little child and the kingdom was in me. And another, that I must obtain it by some violent effort. Another, that death would introduce me to its enjoyment and happiness. One would pray that it might come, another, that it might more fully come; another, that it might be extended; another, that it might be built up; and so on. The result was that by listening to such instruction(?) my mind became as beclouded with regard to the kingdom as brought to view in his holy word, as would be my natural eyes to the light of day were they covered with tarred canvas.

In conclusion, brethren, whether lay or clerical, remember Paul's admonition,—"Preach the word!" Yours for the Bible, Cabot, Vt. C. BOND.

From Bro. Elliot Braley.

DEAR BRETHREN:—We are more and more confirmed in the faith that the Gentile times are fast running out, and what we do must be done quickly. The interest out here is on the increase. Many are becoming anxious about their future welfare, and many want light on the subject of the speedy coming of the Lord. They begin to see "men as trees walking." We are destitute of preachers, with the exception of the old one-armed preacher, who, by the way, is doing all he can to wake up a sleepy church from their last slumber; and as he is traveling and preaching in places where they have never heard but little of anything said on the second coming of Christ, I thought perhaps it would not be amiss to draw on the Tract Fund for a lot of tracts for free distribution, believing that much good has been and is still being done through these little preachers. Will not some one that is a workman come this way and preach to us the way of life more perfectly? Your Bro. in Christ,

Macoupin Co., Ill. ELLIOT BRALEY.

From Bro. J. T. Ongley.

BRO. GRANT:—Last Sunday we organized a little church of eleven members at Mantua Station, Portage Co., Ohio, and have arranged to meet with them once in four weeks, and administer to them the word of life and attend to the ordinances of the Lord's house. We therefore, in behalf of the church there, extend an invitation to others in the neighboring towns to unite with us in the good work of preparing ourselves, and getting others prepared, for the coming of the Lord. Our next appointment will be July 10th, 10 1-2 A. M. Saturday evening previous, in Bro. Lord's neighborhood in Aurora. And Sunday eve. at Freedom, as Bro. Tuttle may appoint. We also preach once in four weeks at Edenboro, Erie Co., Pa. Appointment July 17th, 10 1-2 A. M. JOHN T. ONGLEY.

Edinboro, Erie Co., Pa.

From Bro. R. R. York.

BRO. GRANT:—It is with great reluctance I am compelled to say to numerous friends through the Crisis, that, owing to a constant pressure of labors, cares, and anxiety of mind, I am not able to labor publicly in meetings as for a few years past. I am not really sick, but weary and worn down with overwork. I must rest awhile, if possible. By the blessing of the Lord, I hope to be out and at work again in a few months. If ministers were made of "cast iron," they might possibly not get tired out; but, alas! we are like others, frail and human. Brethren, pray for us.

Your Bro. in hope, R. R. YORK.

Yarmouth, Me., June 20th, 1864.

From Bro. J. W. Taylor.

BRO. GRANT:—We have been holding glorious meetings at this place for a few weeks past. Truth has found its way to the hearts of some, and error begins to hide its head. Last Sabbath, after preaching, we repaired to the water, and four believing souls (the writer being one) put on Christ by baptism, performed by Eld. Jacob Shipman.

Chatham Valley, Pa. J. W. TAYLOR.

From Bro. O. D. Woodruff.

BRO. GRANT:—The interest continues to increase in Southington, Ct., and the presence of the Lord was felt in an especial manner yesterday. Some twenty-three testimonies were given in the morning, and about that number in the P. M. It could be truly said it was good to be there. To God be all the glory. Your Bro., O. D. WOODRUFF.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

From Liverpool 8th inst.

The pirate Alabama left Cape of Good Hope March 25th, cruising.

Orders have been issued by the French government to prevent certain vessels leaving, through the representations of the American Minister that they were pirates.

It is reported that the neutral powers in the Conference proposed the dismemberment of Denmark, which was rejected by the Danes.

The Post believes the Conference will fail, and warns the Germans that if war is resumed England will assist Denmark.

Advices from Denmark continue very warlike and there are many indications that the war will go on.

The cession of the Ionian Islands to Greece has been formerly completed.

The Moniteur publishes details of French victories in Algeria and indicates that the insurrectionists must soon be forced to disperse.

New Zealand advices report two severe engagements, in one of which the English troops suffered a reverse.

From Liverpool the 10th inst.

THE DANO-GERMAN QUESTION.—The Conference was to meet on the afternoon of the 9th.

The Paris Constitutionel learns that Prussia and Austria have consented to a prolongation of the armistice for a fortnight.

It is pointed out that the question of frontier is of momentous importance for the Danes, as the line of Schlei is of first rate strategic importance, while the frontier proposed by the Germans is perfectly indefensible, and would leave the Danes always at the mercy of Germany, hence the line of the Schlei is understood to be Danish ultimatum.

RUSSIA. M. De Bisseleff, the Russian minister at Rome, is recalled. This is regarded as a mark of the Czar's displeasure at the recent proceedings of the Pope relative to Poland.

The duty upon most kinds of goods exported from Russia and Poland for purposes of European commerce has been abolished.

DOMESTIC.

The Tribune's correspondent, dating Headquarters, Western Virginia, June 10th, says Gen. Hunter, with the combined forces of Gens. Averill and Crook, moved from Staunton at 5 o'clock this morning. He destroyed over $3,000,000 worth of property at Staunton.

Gen. Stahl was wounded in the shoulder at Piedmont, but kept in command.

The expedition to Waynesboro' destroyed several railroad bridges and tracks. Imboden's forces are completely demoralized. There is no force of consequence in our front. Our prisoners were not paroled; 1,040 arrived safely at Huntsville.

Memphis, June 14th. Considerable bodies of the missing infantry of Gen. Sturgis' expedition are constantly coming in, and our loss will probably not reach more than 1,000 all told. By to-night the casualties will be pretty accurately reported. Some of the officers blame Gen. Sturgis and say his management was bad.

All concur in stating that the men fought with desperation, the negro troops especially; but the ammunition of the troops being exhausted caused a panic.

It is reported that the force Gen. Sturgis encountered was en route to join Johnston's army, when they received information of the fitting out of this expedition and turned about to defeat it.

New York, June 14th. The steamer Metropolis, from Alexandria, has arrived with six hundred sick and wounded soldiers, some of whom are very bad cases. They were received from the steamers Daniel Webster and State of Maine, that had just arrived from White House. Seventeen died on board these vessels and eight on the Metropolis, during the passage.

New York, June 15th. The World's Washington dispatch says at an informal meeting of the Republican members of Congress, the $300 clause in the enrollment act was considered. Many deemed it injurious, and the impression is that it will not pass in the House.

Within a few days a draft for 200,000 men is expected to be ordered.

Fortress Monroe, June 15th. Two army corps crossed to the south side of James river last night. Other portions of the army are crossing at various points.

New York, June 16th. The Herald's Nassau correspondence says immense quantities of arms, ammunition, clothing, beef, pork, and breadstuffs continue to be received there from New York, Philadelphia and Portland, and are sent successfully to the rebels, who laugh at our blockade: Sixty thousand dollars were received there from Frazer & Co., of Charleston, which were given to the British officials who seized the pirate Florida and went through a mock trial when she was receiving her armament. The American Consul has been compelled to close his consulate there, as the secesh sympathizers refuse to let him office room.

The Herald's Key West correspondent says a detachment of Union troops marched from Fort Mayers to Fort Meade, ninety miles, and met the guerillas who fled. They captured twenty-two horses and herded over one thousand head of cattle and drove them all into our lines. A considerable quantity of provision and forage was also secured. Seventy-one Union prisoners were released, and seventy women and children, nearly starved, rescued. The expedition was absent fourteen days and marched over two hundred miles. Three small vessels with various cargoes were also captured.

Fortress Monroe, June 16th. Yesterday morning at 4 o'clock the 18th army corps under Gen. Kautz' cavalry, comprising the 5th and 11th Pennsylvania and the District of Columbia regiments, attacked the intrenchments outside of Petersburg, at 11 A. M. yesterday and succeeded in carrying them, and entered the city. They were supported by the advance guard of Smith's forces.

Troops at last accounts were marching, as fast as landed, in the direction of Petersburg.

The crossing of the James river by the army is described as one of the most brilliant scenes of the war.

Washington, June 17th. The Petersburg Express has a telegram to Gov. Smith from Lynchburg, stating that Gen. Hunter entered Lexington on the 11th. The rebels estimate Hunter's strength at 16,000. His advance was resisted by Gen. McCousland.

The Richmond Enquirer of 13th has official intelligence that Gen. Crook, with eight thousand men, was at Amherst Court House, only twelve miles from Lynchburg. He had destroyed the bridge over the Sye river. Lynchburg is defended, as the Enquirer says, by a much larger force of militia than had been expected.

The Herald's Fortress Monroe correspondent says the capture of Petersburg will place us in possession of all the railroads connecting with Richmond south, except the Lynchburg and Danville road, (that will be attended to by Gens. Hunter and Sheridan,) and will prevent supplies and conscripts reaching Richmond.

The World's Washington dispatch says rumors are rife that the rebels are evacuating Richmond. The rebel Congress adjourned hastily without closing the business before them. Not only prisoners but non-combatants have been sent South. There has been a heavy exodus of women and children recently. Some think the place evacuated now, and that Gen. Grant will take it without a struggle.

The World's Washington special dispatch says: "I have just learned that a large number of our wounded were in the wilderness a few days since. Some of the wounded hobbled in on rude crutches, traveling sixty miles, and reported. A force with ambulances was sent out, but found that the rebels had been there and taken off about two hundred, leaving the worst cases. Some of these died on their way in."

The same special dispatch says: "The best military critics say that Lee will be compelled to fight a battle at once or retreat from Richmond. It is not believed here that the defenses on the south side can be carried by a coup de main, but with the surrounding roads cut a large army in a large city cannot exist. It is rumored here that Lee will attempt to crush Hunter and then menace Washington, but there is no fear that he will expose himself to Grant in the rear."

Another dispatch to the World says: "For some nights past the enemy made attacks to learn our movements, in which their losses were severe. Deserters give doleful accounts of affairs in Richmond.

Washington, June 17. An explosion of fireworks occurred at the arsenal to-day, blowing up the laboratory. The occupants of the building were all females. Upon the explosion a terrible scene was witnessed. In the yard were about 1200 men and 300 women at work, a number of whom were burned while endeavoring to get away. After the fire was extinguished a search for bodies commenced. Eighteen bodies have thus far been taken out of the ruins, burned to a crisp, rendering it impossible to recognize them. Eight females were taken out badly burned and placed in the hospital.

New York, June 18. The Herald's correspondent with Gen. Hunter, writing June 12, says: The army is again advancing. A dispatch from Lee, captured, urges Imboden to hold out and he will reinforce him. Gen. Hunter is moving with the view to counteract the movements of the enemy, who are preparing to make a strong defense at Lynchburg.

GUERRILLA OUTRAGES IN MISSOURI.—A correspondent of the St. Louis Union, writing from Charlton, Brunswick Co., Mo., June 11th, says:

"Last Wednesday, (June 8th), about thirty men, mounted on excellent horses, armed with two revolvers each, and with bowie knives conspicuously displayed in their belts dashed into Keytesville from the north-east. They were all dressed in citizens' clothes. On their entrance to Keytesville they announced themselves as 'bush-whackers.' Soon afterward their captain ordered the citizens to assemble, as he was about to make them a speech. Before giving this order he and his men amused themselves by riding their horses into the grocery, and, without dismounting, called for whiskey, and drank toasts to Jeff. Davis and the Southern Confederacy.

Thursday morning Peter Fox was taken out of his house and shot. He resided about a mile from Keytesville, was hung up to a tree before the hotel. Jennings, a son-in-law of Fox, was taken out of bed and shot, in spite of the entreaties of his family. Tom Black was taken from his work in a tobacco factory and publicly cowhided. A boy of seventeen was taken from his plough in the field Friday noon, and after being conveyed a short distance was hung to a tree, and threats made that any one that removed his body should be shot. This last hanging took place last evening, and the boy's body still hangs, none daring to remove it. These are facts, and we could give the names of our informants, but they are withheld from prudential reasons. All this has happened within three days, and if rumor is to be believed, over twelve have been executed.

These raiders, or thieves, are gathering together all the horses and negroes they can find, but where they send them to has not been ascertained.

The streets of Brunswick have been crowded all day with an excited multitude, and only the counsels of the sober-minded have kept the citizens from taking up arms to expel these thieves and cut-throats. And to crown all, rumor says that the 'bushwhackers' in reality are about to make a raid on this place. So you can judge what a state of affairs really exists. Last Thursday evening one of the 'avengers' came dashing through the principal street of Brunswick and repeatedly cheered for Jeff. Davis and the Southern Confederacy. This we were witness of."

MEXICO. Maximilian arrived at Vera Cruz on the 28th ult. He stopped on the way at Martinique, liberated and carried with him four prisoners, condemned to hard labor by Forey; also eight more and paid their fare, and distributed 2,000 francs among the remainder.

The Emperor and Empress landed on the 29th, and were received with a salute of 101 guns. The keys of the city were presented to them. They immediately proceeded inland, and at last accounts had reached Sobdad.

Gen. Donai is reported to have won a victory on the 13th ult., capturing 100 men, 150 horses, 4 guns and killed 200. The force of the enemy (Mexicans) was only 300. Gen. Donai's loss was four killed and twenty wounded.

Gen. Megia reports defeating Doblado on the 17th ult., at Matchuate, and took 1117 prisoners, 17 guns, 27 wagons, 200 mules and large quantities of arms and ammunition.

It is also reported that a skirmish took place at Valparaiso, near Zacatecas, in which the Mexicans, of course, lost 120 killed, 300 taken prisoners, 8 guns, 500 small arms and 200 horses.

Ortega was reported at Atemajac with a considerable force. Vidaurri is at Lavedo, Texas.

GOVERNMENT PATRONAGE OF LITERATURE.—Miss Watt, the only surviving child of the greatest British bibliographer, Dr. Watt, has lately died at Glasgow in a workhouse. Last year a petition was presented to Lord Palmerston praying for a grant of £100 a year for the benefit of Miss Watt. The petition was signed by Alfred Tennyson, John Ruskin, Thomas Carlyle, George Grote, Sir Frederick Madden, Holman Hunt, Mrs. Gaskell, and many another names of note. An answer to it was promised in February, but none came till some days after the death of the poor lady had been announced to one of the Premier's secretaries. Then a fellow secretary wrote to ask if Miss Watt could be supported on £50 a year; and if so, that sum might probably be given to her. It was well, perhaps, that the offer came to a corpse—N. Y. Tribune.

AMERICAN AFFAIRS IN FRANCE. The Paris correspondent of the New York Commercial writes that there is no prospect now of any of the Confederate ships in French ports ever getting to sea as Confederate vessels. The matter has been too thoroughly ventilated to permit of any swindling operation under the plea of ignorance.

The Mexican and Confederate loans are laboring under a considerable depreciation, owing to the progress of Grant's campaign against Richmond, and lies of a most fabulous character are invented to bolster them up.

The formation of the Ladies' Union against the use of foreign goods has scattered terror and confusion among the European manufacturers. The buyers for large houses in the United States have suspended operations.

A HISTORICAL BALE OF COTTON.—When the steamer Lexington was burnt in Long Island Sound, Jan. 13th, 1840, David Crowley, of this city, second mate, was saved on a bale of cotton, upon which he drifted two days and nights, and finally went ashore at Riverhead, L. I. This bale of cotton Mr. Crowley has preserved with religious care until the present time, but the price of the staple to-day has brought out the sacred relic for sale. It is of remarkable quality, and the three hundred pound bale is worth from four to five hundred dollars.—Providence Journal.

"The most remarkable case of gunshot wound we ever heard of is that of a soldier wounded at Resaca, brought to Marietta on Wednesday, and now in the hospital at that place. Two bullets passed through his head, making four holes, at which the brains were oozing out, and, astonishing to tell, he was perfectly conscious, and conversed intelligently concerning his situation, and was anxious to know the doctor's opinion of his case.

DENVER, June 14. There is much excitement in consequence of the Indians murdering and scalping a man, woman and two children, and burning a ranch, twenty miles east of this city. The bodies were exhibited in the streets of this city to-day. Many wild rumors are afloat. The militia are organizing, and soldiers have been sent in pursuit of the Indians. Much stock has been stolen at different points lately. On Saturday night twenty-six mules were stolen within fourteen miles of this city.

RAILROAD CATASTROPHE.—Hartford, June 20.—A terrible accident occurred to-day noon on the Hartford, New Haven and Springfield railroad, caused by two of the passenger cars being thrown off the track a couple of miles this side of Berlin depot. The whole number seriously hurt is said to be thirty-five. Mrs. Eusen, an elderly lady, living in Hartford, was severely injured, and died soon after reaching the depot at that place.

EUROPEAN INTERVENTION. The London correspondent of the New York Commercial writes that Louis Napoleon has again sounded the English government on the subject of recognizing the Southern Confederacy, but neither now nor at any future time will the English Cabinet depart in the slightest degree from the policy it has hitherto pursued. Rigid non-intervention will still be its practice.

ARMING CONVICTS.—The Louisville Journal states that at Bardstown Morgan's raiders broke open the jail and released the prisoners, twenty-three in number, among whom was one who was indicted for murder. The convicts, after being released, were armed, and the majority of them joined the guerrilla band and left with them.

☞ It has been stated that Dr. Grusselback, of the University of Upsala, lately restored to activity a snake which had been frozen to torpidity for ten years. It is also reported that he proposed to the Swedish Government to experiment on criminals. He proposes to reduce the individual to complete torpor by the gradual application of cold, and to resuscitate him after a year or two.

☞ The Wisconsin papers generally concur in the opinion that the crops in that State are already permanently affected by the absence of rain, and that the yield for the season, in proportion to the extent sown, must be extremely light. The Milwaukee News says it is more than five weeks since rain has fallen in that vicinity.

☞ The pauperism of the British cotton manufacturing districts continues to decline steadily.

Items.

☞ Three hundred old men, women and children, refugees from Arkansas, have arrived at St. Louis on steamboats from Cairo, and are in a condition of great destitution. They occupy a warehouse on the levee. Nothing has been done yet for their relief. The whole number of white refugees in that city now is 1500.

☞ The Woonsocket (R. I.) Patriot says the prospects of the cotton manufacture are so discouraging that some owners of mills in that village and vicinity contemplate stopping their works soon, unless the price of the raw material recedes. Cotton has been selling this week at $1.28 per pound.

☞ The iron shipbuilding trade is said to be unusually brisk on both sides of the Mersey just now. The builders, in fact have a difficulty in obtaining ground, and some firms are about to migrate to Garston, about four miles above Liverpool.

☞ Refugees who have lately reached Nashville from Georgia, represent the people as having lost all confidence, in view of Gen. Sherman's victorious advance, and abandoned every hope of achieving independence.

☞ The Richmond Sentinel of June 6th, says that an official dispatch received at the Rebel War Department states that Admiral Farragut had arrived off Mobile with a fleet consisting of sixteen large ships.

☞ There is only about six weeks difference in the ages of the candidates nominated for President and Vice President. Mr. Johnson is the oldest; he was born December 29th, 1808, and Mr. Lincoln on the 12th of February following.

☞ Rt. Rev. John McClosky, D. D., of Albany, has received official intelligence from Rome of his appointment to the Arch-episcopate of New York, vacated by the death of Archbishop Hughes.

☞ On the 10th of June the Crystal Palace had been opened ten years. During that period it has been visited by the extraordinary number of more than fifteen million and a quarter.

☞ A mush and milk festival was held a few days since, at Dubuque, Iowa, by a church aid society.

☞ Henry W. Johnson of Canandaigua, N. Y., a colored man, has been admitted to the bar in Rochester.

☞ The total number of prisoners captured by Grant since the commencement of the present campaign (as officially reported) is about 12,000.

The Washington Republican states on authority that proposals are to be made by Secretary Chase for a foreign loan.

☞ The Siamese twins still live in North Carolina. Half the time they stay at Chang's house and half the time at Eng's.

☞ Bishop Colenso has been deposed by the Metropolitan Bishop of Capetown.

☞ It is stated that tanzy steeped in hot water and sprinkled over melon and other vines, will instantly kill or drive off all bugs and worms.

Tremont Grove and Campmeeting.

This meeting will be held upon the same ground as last year, one half mile from the Tremont Depot, West Wareham, Mass., on the Old Colony and Cape Cod R. R., thirty-five miles from Boston, and eighteen from New Bedford. It will commence with preaching in the grove Sunday, June 26th, and continue till July 5th. We hope to greet the many we have greeted there before, and many more beside. Shall we not see many from Portsmouth, Concord, Lawrence, and from towns round about Boston? Encouraged by the blessings of God upon this meeting in the past, we expect a larger and a better one this year. Brn. Grant, Hastings, and M. Batchelor are among those engaged to preach the word. Will Bro. Munger attend? Other preachers who may come in the name of the Lord will find a cordial welcome. We, however, assume no responsibilities save with such as are engaged. None are desired who come in their own name or in the name of some strange doctrine. The objects of this meeting are to comfort and strengthen the saints and save men "from the wrath to come." I propose Friday, June 24th, as a day of fasting and prayer for divine blessing upon the meeting to this end. "Our help is in the name of the Lord." H. F. CARPENTER.

P. S. Board will be provided on the ground on terms as reasonable as the times will admit; also accommodations for those who wish to board themselves. Lodgings can be secured in private dwellings by coming early. Every one should come prepared with bedding for camp life. Those who can should bring tents. Fare from Boston and New Bedford reduced to half price. Come!

In behalf of Committee. H. F. C.

Those coming by railroad will stop at Albion, on the Rochester and Niagara Falls Road, and provision will be made to convey them to the meeting, which is about eight miles from that place. Brethren who intend to come will do well to drop a line, stating how many will be with them, and what day they will come, directed to me at Brockport.

Teams will meet the cars at noon, at Albion, on Friday and Saturday, the 1st and 2nd inst., and the morning train from the east, Sunday. So any persons coming from the west will come on an early train, and wait in Albion about two hours. If brethren will write me as above, it will cost them only three or four cents, and may save some expense to the brethren who furnish teams. Come praying and expecting a blessing.

For the World's Crisis.

"PREPARE TO MEET THY GOD!"

This life is as a vapor thin,
Soon vanishing away!
The brightest and the fairest seem
To bloom but to decay.
Ere the to-morrow's sun is set
We may lie 'neath the sod,
Then let us while we have to-day
Prepare to meet our God.

Should we here ease and pleasure choose,
And from the paths of sin turn not,
What then shall be our soul's excuse
When to the judgment-seat we're brought?
While rocks and mountains flee away,
And Christ rules with an iron rod,
Where shall we hide in that dread day,
Unless prepared to meet our God?

"Give me thine heart" hear Jesus call,
"And then I will your refuge be;
Though storms of fiery vengeance fall,
They all are safe who hide in me."
Then let us haste while pleads to-day
The Spirit of our gracious Lord!
Through him we may be reconciled—
Prepared to meet our God.

For the World's Crisis.

LETTER FROM MONTREAL.

Bro. Grant:—Your expected presence in this city appears to be dreaded; for denunciations have already gone forth from some of the pulpits, warning the people to keep away from false teachers as you and others. In a valedictory address by a Methodist minister here, he took occasion to denounce, in the most severe and bitter manner, all who differed with him in respect to the doctrine of man's natural immortality, as well as all those who preached and taught the doctrine of the second advent of Christ. But it has invariably turned out that these denunciations do their cause more harm than good. It is all very well for Papist priests to make denunciations from their altars, for they can do it effectually; but when Protestant ministers attempt it, they can only make impressions upon the priest-ridden portion of their congregations; the intelligent, independent, and common-sense portion, only wink at such weakness, perceiving that priestcraft and bigotry were at the bottom of it. It is certainly not a very philosophic method of convincing one of error; but almost invariably it is selfishness and spleen which prompt priests (Protestant) to take this course. The scriptural method is quite different from such a course as that. Love to our fellow men will not certainly lead any one to denounce and brand as heretics and infidels those who differ from them in opinion, and especially if that opinion is professed to be formed from the Scriptures. Reason and the Bible are the legitimate weapons to be employed if we wish to correct errors in doctrine. These are all-powerful; but failing there, the dogmatical resort to calling hard names, abuse and denunciation; and wherever these are resorted to, the cause is a weak one, and hence such props to support it.

But there will be differences of opinion on doctrines as well as every thing else. It is not absolutely necessary for all men to think alike; and if my opinion differs from another, I have no right to coerce others to adopt my views, and abuse them because they do not think as I do. And when a person believes he has the truth, and his opinions are well founded, it is nothing more than his duty to convince others, by sound reason and argument, that he has the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth; and to endeavor by these means to gain converts to his views. This is the only proper method of procedure. Mankind are not kept in the faith of any particular church, or converts made, by a resort to coercion and abuse, except a few timid and weak-minded ones. Coercion has been resorted to, and martyrs burned to the stake for their opinions; but those extreme measures have failed to do what they were destined to accomplish; and men have persisted in departing from the faith (so called); and it was well they did so; for coercion on the one hand, and departure on the other, were the means of having the truth established.

When the christian church departed from the true faith, and remained in darkness for fourteen or fifteen centuries, until Luther and other reformers were raised up to arouse her from error and ignorance, it was not in the power of these reformers to accomplish all the reforms necessary to make her a pure and holy church; but the spirit of reform and the dissemination of truth have been going on ever since. But all the heathen practices and doctrines, which were introduced into the christian church when she departed from the true faith delivered to her by the apostles, have not yet been entirely rooted out. The heathen doctrine of the immortality of the soul still remains in the christian church generally; but men have been raised up to expose the falsity of that doctrine, which is the foundation of all the religious systems in the world; and well they have succeeded so far; but they must expect opposition and persecution. Prayer and perseverance, however, will accomplish much; and though the oft-repeated question is put, "Why was not this false doctrine, as you say, found out before?" it can be easily answered by an appeal to the Bible; it is as old as the word of God. All the prophets and apostles taught it, as well as the early fathers and men in all ages of the church. Why did not the Reformation take place until the fifteenth century? Why was printing not invented before it was? Why were not the steamboat and telegraph discovered until the present century? Are these inventions and improvements to be hooted at because they are modern?

The Methodist minister above alluded to, who was so severe in his denunciations against all those who differed from him in their religious opinions, had just completed his term of three years as pastor of the church in which I had been brought up, and regularly attended almost since infancy. I therefore went to hear his valedictory address, partly because I anticipated he would allude to the heterodox views entertained by me. I was not disappointed, but even exceeded in my anticipations; for he very emphatically denounced as heretics and vile persons all those who doubted man's natural immortality. I was surprised that a christian minister (so called) could so far forget himself as to denounce in such terms those who were sincere in their opinions, and whose opinions (they believe) are based upon the Scriptures. Although I requested a conversation with him on the subject, he refused, and studiously avoided me. His duty, in such case, was plain from the Scriptures, but instead of carrying out the scriptural rule, he in the most bitter and sarcastic language denounced me as a heretic and vile person, trying to disseminate false doctrines. This method was taken to put me down and prejudice me in the eyes of the congregation assembled, knowing that I had no means of defense.

But these denunciations and anathemas will not move any in the least from what they believe to be true. It is more important to have the truth than the favor or frowns of any man or set of men. Some of the best biblical scholars are obliged to admit that this doctrine of the immortality of the soul has no foundation in Scripture, but that of assumption. Shall we take for granted what is assumed, when the Scriptures flatly contradict it? When our first parents fell, death was pronounced upon them, and a flaming cherubim placed to guard the "tree of life," lest they should eat and live forever, and thus become immortal. But Satan said, "Thou shalt not surely die"; and so modern theologians say, "O man, thou art immortal; thou shalt not surely die." The devil is quite orthodox on this question, just as orthodox as the most violent opposer of those who believe that when a man dies "his thoughts perish" until the resurrection.

But whom do the Scriptures say are immortal? 1 Tim. 1:17;—"The king eternal, immortal, invisible," etc. This is the only place in the whole Bible where this word occurs. Then who has immortality? 1 Tim. 1:16;—"The blessed and only potentate, the King of kings and Lord of lords, who only hath immortality." To whom will God impart immortality? Rom. 2:7;—"To those who, by patient continuance in well doing, seek for glory and honor and immortality," they will be rewarded with "eternal life." Why seek for what orthodoxy says we have already got? The word immortality occurs but five times in all the Bible, and is only applied to the righteous; the wicked are not promised it. We are exhorted to seek for immortality, and it is only obtained at the resurrection. The Scriptures are very clear on this point, but they have been perverted by false teachers. Plato, the heathen philosopher, was the originator of this doctrine (next to Satan). So that this most cherished doctrine was Pagan by birth, and papal by adoption; yet Protestants cherish it still.

Then what are the fruits of the heathen doctrine of the immortality of the soul? These may be seen by examining the different religious systems in the world. Heathenism, Mohammedanism, the transmigration of souls, Spiritualism, Mormonism, Purgatory, praying to saints, and other false theories, depend upon this doctrine for their very existence, and could not live without it. Teach the people correctly with respect to man's nature and destiny, and all these false systems must necessarily fall to the ground. Not one good fruit does this doctrine produce, but only evil, and that continually. The teachings of that good old book, the Bible, will yet be fully vindicated.

We believe that a dead man is a dead man, and that nothing leaves man at death but the breath of life. The Scriptures do not warrant me in believing any thing else, and I will give any one fifty dollars who will produce one such passage from Scripture as "never-dying soul," or "immortal soul." These terms may be found in hymn books, and other works of modern theologians; but I have failed to find them in the Scriptures. Take for example the case of Lazarus, of Bethany, a good and pious man, who died; and, according to the popular theory, he was praising God in heaven, while only his body was in the tomb. How cruel was it of Christ to bring this man from the society of angels again into this wicked world! But was Lazarus during those four days praising God in heaven in the company of the holy angels? The orthodoxy of the present day says so; but does the Scriptural account say so? We find that Jesus wept for the grief and misfortune that happened to this family in the loss of their beloved brother and his intimate friend. Would Christ have wept if Lazarus had been in heaven? Was he really in heaven? Let us see. Of course if he was in heaven he would call him down. Did he call Lazarus down from heaven? No, he went to the tomb, and said, "Lazarus, come forth." So then Lazarus was not really in heaven, but in the tomb. How can this be reconciled with the orthodox notion that the soul of the saint immediately goes to glory, and that the body is only the case or house for the soul? Strange that Christ did not address the soul! Strange that the dead body of Lazarus should answer the summons of Christ! Stranger still that Lazarus had no account to give of his four days' sojourn in heaven! Where is orthodoxy now? Where is there one single passage in all the Bible, from Genesis to Revelation, to support the popular theory of a ghost leaving man at death, and soaring away to heaven or hell, as the case may be? Not one. But you will find it in heathen mythology, and no where else.

But let us hear what the Scriptures say about dead folks. To the law and the testimony. "The soul that sinneth it shall die." Ezek. 18:4. Also Gen. 19:20, Ps. 89:48, 33:19. What becomes of your never-dying soul, if the Scriptures say it shall die? "In that very day his thoughts perish."—Ps. 146:4. "The dead know not any thing, neither have they any more a reward; also their love and their hatred and their envy is now perished."—Eccl. 9:5, 6, 10. If the thoughts and affections perish, where is the soul? What is the soul? "In death there is no remembrance of thee."—Ps. 6:5.

The pious poet said—

"And when my voice is lost in death, Praise shall employ my nobler powers."

The pious Psalmist said—"The dead praise not the Lord."—Ps. 115:17. "Man giveth up the ghost, and where is he?" Would Job have used such language if he believed that at death the souls of believers "immediately pass into glory"? Would he have asked, "If a man die shall he live again?" if he believed that the principal part of a man never died at all? "Even one thing befalleth them; as the one dieth, so dieth the other; yea, they have all one breath (ruah—spirit); so that a man hath no pre-eminence above a beast."—Eccl. 3:19. It is the glorious doctrine of a resurrection unto eternal life which gives man the pre-eminence.

Perhaps some of our Rev. D. D.'s, M. A.'s, or B. A.'s, will give us the definition of the original word nephesh (soul). Does it signify the spiritual part of man, commonly called soul? Where is the passage to be found that gives it that signification? What is the definition of the original word ruah (spirit)? and does it signify an immortal soul which survives the death of the body? If so, where is the passage in the Bible which proves this? To understand this subject, I consider it necessary to get at the meaning of these two original words, and to what they are applied in the Scriptures. If you ask some persons What is the soul? they will tell you it is the spirit; and the spirit is the soul, and vice versa. Of course they have been taught so, and they believe what the church believes, and the church believes what they believe, and they both believe alike; and they would be filled with holy indignation and pious horror if you did not believe as they believe; and thus it goes on, the blind leading the blind.

WELL SPENT HOURS.

"And what, oh! what is good?"
'Tis first to seek the favor of thy God;
Let thy will blend with his, and honor him
By walking in the way thy Savior trod.

And then it is whate'er
Tendeth to raise thy heart and hopes on high,
Or to make others happier here
On earth to live, and peacefully to die.

Go wipe from sorrow's eye
The burning tear; go aid the poor and lone,
Visit the sick, the stricken mourner cheer,
And oh! of Jesus tell the erring one.

Or it may only be
A cup of water to some wanderer given,
A word, a smile, but 'twill be written—Good!
On the great record of thy life in heaven.

JESUS IS YOUR FRIEND.

Yes, my unconverted friends, Jesus is your friend, your sincere, loving, true friend. Could you but realize this truth you would no longer put your trust in those friends which may at any time forsake you; but in an everlasting friend—a friend to-day, to-morrow, and to all eternity. Doubt him not; for he has given unmistakable evidences of his power, wisdom and love; in his many miracles, his wise commands and true prophecies, and in his many sacrifices and disinterested efforts to promote man's happiness. The happiness and honor which he has promised to give the faithful, both here and hereafter, is all that the soul can desire.

But you may say that this is "the same old story," and that the lives of many professors of religion do not prove it, and if they are safe, you are." Ah, they are not safe. Take not their lives as a specimen of the religion of Jesus Christ, neither seek their end; for you will gain nothing thereby.

Is Jesus your friend? Do you not, will you not answer, yes? O! why do you refuse his assistance in your perilous journey through life! Why do you withstand his entreaties? he is willing and ready to save you. "Him that cometh unto me, I will in no wise cast out;" and again he says, "Knock, and it shall be opened." By simply obeying him—reciprocating his love, you are saved. And let what will come he will stand by you. When death threatens you he will be near and comfort you.

O come, if you value your soul, come to this friend. Every thing bespeaks the nearness of an awful crisis. Soon will the archangel's trumpet, like heaviest thunder, sound on a death-deserving world. O! careless, indifferent sinner! delay no longer. To-day Jesus is thy friend, to-morrow he may be thy judge. Act NOW.

"THEY ARE NOT OF THE WORLD."

The journey of the Israelites from Egypt to Palestine fitly represents the christian's course through this world. They were to "go forward," looking toward the land of promise; were forbidden to settle down in permanent dwellings, or turn to the right or left to form alliances, and imbibe the spirit of the idolatrous people that lived around them. And yet many professing to be followers of Jesus, who may turn to the eleventh of Hebrews and learn that the Lord's elect are but pilgrims and strangers, hastening to Mt. Zion, affect to wonder at the man who is now pursuing the old pilgrim track, avoiding the old political and warlike spirit that prevails all over the land. In the South, the so called ministry of Christ join hand in hand with oppressors, and blindly claim the Divine sanction for their proceedings. In the North, a great multitude of church members, with their pastors in the lead, believe they are justified by the gospel of the Son of God in engaging in political enterprises, and shedding blood in maintaining their government. Their argument is, slavery is a curse to man, and christians may exterminate it by the sword; or, our government is in danger of being overthrown by traitors; and if we keep aloof from politics and war, we are responsible for the ruin that will follow.

The majority of professedly religious journals are full of war and political agitation, as though the Savior had commanded his disciples to go forth and redress the evils in earthly governments with carnal weapons. And when we tell such advocates that the church of the living God must keep clear of such matters, and let the nations rush on to the sure destruction which prophecy has foretold; when the case of Peter is named, who was prohibited from using the sword against a band of the meanest murderers that ever lived; whose oppressed Master taught him that the children of the kingdom must commit their cause to him that judgeth righteously, and not take it into their own hands; we are looked upon as worthy of censure for a want of "patriotism." Just so was Jeremiah esteemed, because he uttered the plain testimony of God. I verily believe that the position of Advent brethren generally in regard to politics and war is by the direction of the Holy Spirit; and in every age of this new covenant dispensation, those who have walked in its clear light have had the same convictions.

I have been much edified in reading the life of John Newton, a minister of the church of England. He was a faithful witness of the grace that plucked him as a brand from the burning, after being seemingly given over to hardness of heart. I came across one of his letters on "Political debate," which goes to prove that the Holy Spirit teaches but one thing to christians in every age of the gospel in reference to politics. We must make a fair allowance for his Calvinistic bias, and his view of man in death, remembering that he lived in the last century. His letter is dated 1793. The following is a copy of a portion of it:—

Newark, June 1864.

THE REV. D—— W——.

"The kind present of your book, and your kind intention in addressing your sermons to me by name, deserved a more early acknowledgement. I am pleased with every mark of regard from a christian brother, though I could have wished not to be held up to public notice; and Mr. J——t, who likewise meant well, has made the business a little more awkward to me, by styling me Doctor, an honor which, the newspapers informed me, (for I have no official intelligence), has been conferred upon me by the college of Princetown, in America. However, by the grace of God, I am determined not to assume the title of Doctor, unless I should receive a diploma from a college in the new settlement of Sierra Leone. The dreary coast of Africa was the university to which the Lord was pleased to send me, and I dare not acknowledge a relation to any other.

I need not express my approbation of your sermons in stronger terms than by saying, that I have seldom met with any thing more congenial to my own sentiments and taste. I read them with great satisfaction. Though I have very little time for reading, had your whole volume consisted of such sermons, I should have gone through it much sooner; but your lectures on liberty, though ingenious and well written, were not so interesting to me. It was therefore longer before I could find leisure to finish them; and this has occasioned the delay of my letter, for I thought it would be premature to write till I could say I had read them. I hope I am a friend to liberty, both civil and religious; but I fear you will hardly allow it when I say, I think myself possessed of as much of these blessings at present as I wish for. I can, indeed, form an idea of something more perfect; but I expect no perfection in this state; and, when I consider the Lord's question, 'Shall not my soul be avenged on such a nation as this?' I cannot but wonder that such a nation as this should still be favored with so many privileges, which we still enjoy and still abuse.

Allow me to say, that it excites both my wonder and concern that a minister possessed of the great and important views expressed in your two sermons, should think it worth his while to appear in the line of a political writer, or expects to amend our constitution or situation by proposals of a political reform. When I look around upon the present state of the nation, such an attempt appears to me to be no less vain and unreasonable, than it would be to paint a cabin while the ship is sinking, or a parlor when the house is already on fire. My dear sir, my prayer to God for you is, that he may induce you to employ the talents he has given you in pointing out sin as the great cause and source of every existing evil, and to engage those who love and fear him, instead of losing time in political speculation, for which very few of them are tolerably competent, to sigh and cry for our abounding abominations, and to stand in the breach, by prayer, that, if it may be, wrath may yet be averted and our national mercies prolonged. This I think is the true patriotism, the best if not the only way, in which persons in private life can serve their country."

TELLING JESUS.

"They took up the body and buried it, and went and told Jesus."

"Go and tell Jesus when thy heart is full
Of keen and bitter agony and woe;
When the dear, precious form of one beloved
Is parted from thee, in the grave laid low;
Go and tell Jesus—he will soothe thy grief—
To thy poor suffering spirit bring relief."

Are you bereaved? Have you lost a husband, a wife, a father, a mother, a son, or a daughter, one dear as your life? "Go and tell Jesus." He will bind up the broken heart, weep with you as he did with Martha and Mary at the grave of Lazarus.

Are you troubled on every side, tempest-tossed? Tell Jesus all about it; he will say to the raging billows, "Peace, be still," and there will be a great calm.

"When the clouds are gathering o'er thee,
And the path looks dark before thee;
When thy feet are worn and weary,
And thy way seems long and dreary,
Go to Jesus."

Are you tempted to pride, vainglorying, to think more highly of yourself than you ought? Take this serpent of serpents to Jesus, nail it to his cross. "I am the Lord: that is my name: and my glory will I not give to another, neither my praise to graven images." Isa. 42:8, "Let him that glorieth, glory in the Lord."

Are you bowed down under manifold temptations? Go to Jesus with them, lay them at his feet—"Cast all your care upon him, for he careth for you."

"Look unto Jesus when thine aching heart
Is with remembrance of its sin opprest:
He careth for thee: weary as thou art,
And heavy laden, he will give thee rest.
Look to thy Savior; he has ransomed thee,
And paid thy debt of sin on Calvary."

Are you joyful in God? Is your soul on fire with holy love?

"Go and tell Jesus when thy heart is glad,
And hope, and joy, and friendship crowd thy way,
Ask for his sanctifying grace o'er all,
That naught may cause thy heart from them to stray;
Go and tell Jesus, making joy more bright,
Shedding o'er all thy path a holy light."

"This going to Jesus, and telling him all that is in our hearts, little things and great things," says President A. Mahan, "is the secret of all holy living, the pre-eminent piety of Paul and the primitive christians. It is explained in one single expression of the sacred writer, 'Looking unto Jesus, the author and finisher of our faith.' They were 'determined to know nothing but Jesus Christ and him crucified.' They literally counted all things but loss, for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus our Lord.' He was their 'wisdom,' their 'righteousness,' their 'sanctification,' and 'redemption.' He was their consolation in affliction. He was their pattern, their leader, and guide. He was their victory in every conflict with the 'world, the flesh, and the devil.' He was their joy, their hope, their inheritance, their shield, and their 'exceeding great reward.' He was their 'bright and morning star,' the magnet of their souls, which held all the powers of their being in a blissful fixedness to one changeless centre.

"Now, christian, if you will believe it, Christ will be to you all that he was to them. 'He is the same yesterday, to-day, and forever;' and you may share as they did in the infinite fullness of the love and grace of Christ. But if you would enjoy this full redemption, the powers of your being must be brought under the influence of this one principle, 'Looking unto Jesus.'

"Do your sins rise up before you, and fill you with apprehensions of coming retribution? 'Look to Jesus.' Do you desire to be freed from the power of sin, and be presented to God 'without spot, or wrinkle, or any such thing?' 'Look to Jesus.' Are you burdened with care, or do the storms of affliction gather around you? 'Look to Jesus.' Is your temper unsubdued, do your appetites and propensities rebel, and call for unhallowed gratification? 'Look to Jesus.' Whatever your condition or necessities may be, hear his gracious voice, 'Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me, for I am meek and lowly in heart, and you shall find rest unto your souls.'"

There is not a want in the sinner, but there is a corresponding fullness in Christ. For "it pleased the Father that in him should all fullness dwell." Is the sinner hungry? Let him come to Christ, and he shall be made to partake of the bread of life. Is he thirsty? Let him come to Christ, and he shall be permitted to drink of the wells of salvation. Is the sinner sick? Let him come to Christ, and he shall have life and vigor infused into his soul. Is he naked? Let him come to Christ, and he shall receive a beauteous robe. Is he blind? Let him come to Christ, and he shall have his eyes opened to see wondrous things. Is he deaf? Let him come to Christ, and he shall hear the voice of uncreated harmony, speaking peace to his happy soul. Is the sinner burdened? Let him come to Christ, and his burden shall be taken away. Does he long for rest? Let him come to Christ, and he shall have sweet repose. Yes, no matter what may be the sinner's wants or woes, only let him come to Christ, and he shall be made rich and happy, throughout all time, and throughout all eternity.

CROWN AND CROSS.

It seemed a crown of cruel thorn,
It seemed a cross of bitter scorn,
I bent my suffering brow to wear,
I raised my feeble arms to bear.

I might have cast away the crown,
But hands I loved had crushed it down,
And pressed its stinging points of pain
Through quivering nerve and bursting vein.

I might have shunned the cross to bear,
But One—the Master—placed it there;
And, falling the appointed task,
No other service I might ask.

As on my weary way I passed,
Ready to faint and fall at last,
The burden under which I bent
Became the staff on which I leant;

And blossoms for the thorns had place,
Upon my head a crowning grace,
That brought me through the burning hours,
The cool and healing touch of flowers.

* * * * * * *

My crown was love maintained through loss,
And truth upheld through scorn my cross.

FEARFUL SIGHTS.

The Savior says—"Fearful sights and great signs shall there be from heaven." Luke 21:11. The prophet Joel (2:30,) in speaking of these wonders, calls them "blood, and fire, and pillars of smoke." The historian has recorded that a comet like a sword hung over Jerusalem for a year before its destruction. God faithfully warned that city of its final doom. First, having sent his holy prophets and his only and well beloved Son, to warn them to flee the wrath to come, and to lay hold of eternal life. After they had rejected all God's kind invitations, blasphemed against the Holy Spirit, put the Son of God to death, and stoned to death holy men whom God sent to tell them the truth, they were left to their own shame and destruction. Is it any more miraculous that great signs and fearful sights in the heavens should be witnessed just before the great day of judgment? We think not.

The heavens are to present these "sights." The northern lights, as they are called, I believe are a fulfillment of prophecy. But it is said they are no fulfillment of the sign of the end of the world, or age; for they always have been seen. But where, I ask, is the proof? Who can find a particle of ancient history in support of that assertion? It appears from modern historians that in March, 1716, these lights were first seen with great brilliancy and astonishment in England, though never seen before by the oldest inhabitants. Since that time they have often been witnessed. The following article, taken from a London paper, is an illustration of this subject:—

"Between the hours of ten at midnight and three o'clock in the morning, in the heavens was observed one of the most magnificent specimens of these extraordinary phenomena, the falling stars and northern lights. The first indication of this singular phenomenon was about ten o'clock, when a bright crimson, apparently vapors, arose from the northern portion of the hemisphere, and gradually extended to the centre of the heavens, and by quarter past ten the whole, from east to west, was one vast sheet of light. It had a most alarming appearance, and was exactly like that occasioned by a terrific fire. The light varied considerably; at one time it seemed to fall, and directly after rose with intense brightness. There was to be seen mingled with it volumes of smoke, which rolled over and over, and every beholder seemed convinced that it was a tremendous conflagration. The consternation in the metropolis was very great; thousands of persons were running in the direction of the supposed awful catastrophe. The engines were horsed, and galloped to the supposed scene of destruction with more than ordinary energy, followed by carriages, horsemen, and vast mobs. Some of the engines proceeded a long distance before they discovered the error. These appearances lasted for upwards of two hours, and towards morning the spectacle became one of more grandeur.

At two o'clock in the morning the phenomenon presented a most gorgeous scene. The whole of London was illuminated as light as noonday. It was clear at the time. At half past two o'clock the scene changed to darkness."

The phenomenon described in this London paper was this side of the Atlantic with less brilliancy, and was described in the New York papers at the time. This occurred in the year 1839.

These lights appeared in this country with great brilliancy from 1840 to 1843, and with less brilliancy ever since. At times they present a most magnificent appearance. Says the prophet Joel, "Blood, and fire, and pillars of smoke." We have it recorded that some three years ago in some localities it rained blood, so that the Cumberland river in the State of Tennessee was red with it, and the papers teemed with the news at the time. People are living who saw this rain of blood. Was it not a fearful sight in the heavens on that doleful day when the sun was darkened, and on the following night when the moon became as blood? Also in the year 1833, when the stars fell from heaven. On seeing these sights and signs, the people exclaimed, The judgment day has come. Others cried for mercy.

These sights were but signs. What must the reality be? You who have your Lord denied, will for rocks and mountains cry in that tremendous day. Amid all these fearful sights and signs of these last days, men still harden their hearts, and go on in sin, heedless of the warning. Like as it was in the days of Noah and of Lot, so it will be when the Son of man is revealed. When He cometh shall he find faith in the earth? Time will soon tell, and decide earth's destiny. The judgment will be set and the books be opened, and also the book, which is the "book of life." Let us try and prove faithful, that our names may be found written in the "book of life."

A GOOD DISPOSITION.

There is nothing like it. Honors may tarnish, riches may take wings, and beauty become the feast of worms; but a good disposition is a hoard of wealth to the possessor, a crown of glory, a beauty on which angels may gaze forever and never be tired. Feuds, bickerings, envyings, slanderings, and all the furious ills of life hide their ugly heads at the approach of a good disposition. The world would be a paradise if all were in possession of kind hearts, generous feelings, and pleasant dispositions. Ye who would have more influence than kings, more wealth than the Indies boast, labor for this treasure, and you will not labor in vain.

Give me a dwelling amidst the eternal roar of the ocean, or in the bowels of a growling earthquake, but deliver me from the tongue that never tires and the mouth that is never shut! O that God would have mercy on all such as turn every thing upside down by their tongue! One word more. Did Jesus have a good disposition while on earth? Will he have the same when he comes the second time? Then what must we have if we would be like him?

ISA. 42:9.

"Behold the former things are come to pass, and new things do I declare; before they spring forth I tell you of them."

Brothers and sisters, is the above text true? I believe it is. Then we need not be in darkness so that day overtake us as a thief. Nay, verily, for if the former things, such as were foretold, the flood, the destruction of the cities of the plain, the rise and fall of earthly kingdoms, as declared by the prophets, till, according to history, we are now in the fourth and last kingdom that is to be universal; Babylon being in the past, Medo Persia in the past, Grecia in the past, Rome, or the fourth kingdom, all in the past, except some of its last segments, which are liable to pass away any day,—then comes in the eternal or fifth kingdom, set up by the God of heaven, and is to stand forever.

Glory to God in the highest! That is the kingdom for me. And if as the text declares before the new things spring forth he tells us of them, we may be in expectation of whatever is before us. And as the 2300 days, or, as we understand, years were to reach to the end, and sixty-nine weeks of years to the cross, leaving after the cross 1817, and the cross cannot be later than 49,—for the Jews said of Christ, "Thou art not yet fifty,"—so when we make 1817 + 49, this side of the cross, how can time reach beyond the year 1866?

Dear waiting ones, let us be ready, loving each other fervently, and God supremely; thus we may hear it said, "Well done, good and faithful servants."

TOBACCO CHEWERS, ATTENTION!

Dr. Wilson of Owego, N. Y., proclaims to have found a remedy for tobacco chewing, and it is the following:—Take the leaves of the common red plantain, and chew them three or four days, swallowing the juice, which is harmless, and after that it will be impossible to use tobacco without sickening. Be careful and not use the green plantain, but the red-veined kind, which is very common.

Now I hope every tobacco chewer will try this remedy, and thus make an effort to cleanse himself from this "filthiness of the flesh." And if this will accomplish the work, I hope it will remove the stumbling block of tobacco chewing christians forever away, and we shall not have to preach against the matter in the church any more.

Dansville, N. Y. F. Burr.

ABUSE OF THE STOMACH.

It is one of the myteries of human nature that mankind abuse themselves in some respects worse than they would animals. The careful farmer sees that his stock has every thing needful to health and comfort, that it is under shelter, and has enough, but not too much to eat; and from this prudent provision for his pocket's sake, the farmer goes straightway to his own table and eats greasy fried meats, vegetables sodden in butter, and pastry or pudding as a makeweight to keep the load down; the farmer is only the representative of a class, for persons of all conditions in life are guilty of similar practices. As this performance is solely a matter of individual concern the law has no right to interfere, but we should like to know why a man in such a case is not equally a suicide with him who saps the foundation of life with slow but subtle narcotics—laudanum, opium in other forms, and the immoderate use of tobacco?

Perhaps we erred in drawing an illustration between a man and his beasts, because the latter seldom or never exceed the bounds of the instinct which nature has provided them with; but this trait being removed in the sentient being—man—he gorges himself to repletion, and sooner or later his or her posterity fall victims to the abuse of the stomach. Some digestive organs are strong fortresses. Fifteen-inch shot in the shape of huge, doughy, apple dumplings, Greek fire in the semblance of scalding liquids, followed by deluges of ice water at the same meal, rifle shot and Minie bullets, disguised as pickels and sharp spices, have no apparent effect. "Pshaw," says the robust reader, "my stomach can stand anything. I never was sick in my life." All that is quite probabte; but the strongest fortification in the world cannot resist the slow advance of rifle-pit, sap, mine and parallel, and the engineer knows full well that when he puts spade into the ground the stronghold is virtually his. The comparison holds good with the stomachs of men; although for a time the individuals who compose generations of families may defy disease of the peculiar nature discussed, their posterity will be enfeebled until they are literally swept off the face of the earth entirely, or their blood absorbed into new and healthier organizations. Thus we see races, or rather families, die out; so great names perish. In some cases drink has destroyed the coating of the stomach; in others high living and dissipation generally, kept up through a series of years, are the sap and mine of which we spoke previously.

To paraphrase Patrick Henry, "Is money so dear and ease so sweet as to be purchased at the sacrifice of life and health?" Far better, in a physical sense, the humblest laborer, with his simple fare and regular habits, than the millionaire and his disordered constitution. The latter is of no more use to civilization as regards re-populating the world with healthy human beings than a wooden puppet.

The great social vice of the American people is eating too much and too fast. We are as a race naturally nervous in temperament, and this added to the evils first mentioned results in the long, lean physiognomies characteristic of the nation. When an American business man takes dinner he does so generally with over-eagerness and a sort of gulping choke, as if it were an unpleasant duty which is painful to witness. In all probability his mind is actively engaged in calculating his profits and losses, when he should be wholly at ease and cheerful. Now, every one must know that such practices are wrong—that they are not what nature intended. The organs of the human body, particularly the digestive ones, are delicate in the extreme, and when used rudely nature revolts and disease results. If it is disputed that stomachs are naturally delicate, we may take the case of a hardy outdoor worker; confine him to a sedentary life and require him to overload his stomach as too many men do, and then mark the result. He will as assuredly become dyspeptic as any one else.

The punishment inflicted on such infractions of common sense are severe but justly imposed, and the remedy is as simple as obvious. Of all the ills that flesh is heir to there are none more distressing than those which arise from indigestion. We are not of that class who put faith in nostrums, bitters, purges and the whole nauseous category of the pharmacopœia for the reduction of the disease in question. When the system is already enfeebled we are to sustain it, not debilitate it; and this can only be done by food of the proper kind, taken in the right way at certain times. We are not going to run a raid against doctors or poach over their field; but we do think that patients afflicted with dyspepsia have the means of cure within their own reach. We have no recipes to furnish, as we are not exactly in the medical line of business; But we feel it incumbent to lift up our voices against the universal abuse of the stomach and digestive organs which prevail so extensively. Advice is very cheap, and those who fear the approach of a disordered condition of the parts mentioned, should take measures in time to prevent the real attack. Nature makes feints in every part of the system; she hangs out head aches and stomach aches, pains in the back and limbs, horrible lassitude and inanity generally over the whole system, as warnings that ere long the grand attack which cannot be repulsed will take place. Eat slowly, and even solemnly, if you must, reader, but be cheerful and merry if you can; eat slowly; make your teeth do what nature intended they should, and do not delegate their work to the stomach; it has no teeth and is intended for another purpose than mastication. Live temperately and avoid excitement; eschew quack medicines; eat only the best and simplest food, and if you do not recover wholly you will at least be improved, and certainly will be living in obedience, not only to the laws of nature, but to those of prudence and common sense.—Scientific American.

SALT FOR THE THROAT.

In these days, when diseases of the throat are so universally prevalent, and so many cases are fatal, we feel it a duty to say a word in behalf of a simple, and what has been with us a most effectual preventive, if not a positive cure, of sore throat. For many years past, indeed we may say during the whole of a life of over forty years, we have been subject to a sore throat, and more particularly to a dry, hacking cough, which was not only distressing to ourselves, but to our friends and to those with whom we were brought into business contact. Last fall we were induced to try what virtue there was in common salt. We commenced by using it three times a day, morning, noon and night. We dissolved a large table spoonful of common salt in about half of a tumbler full of cold water. With this we gargled the throat most thoroughly just before meal time. The result has been that during the entire winter we were not only free from the usual coughs and colds to which, as far as our memory extends, we have always been subject; but the dry, hacking cough has entirely disappeared. We attribute it entirely to the salt gargle, and do most cordially recommend it to those of our readers who are subject to diseases of the thoat.

Many persons who have never tried the salt gargle, have the impression that it is unpleasant. Such is not the case. On the contrary it is pleasant, and after a few days use, no person who loves a nice, clean mouth, and a first rate sharpener of the appetite, will abandon it.—Exchange.

☞ A distinguished English physician has shown the difference in the average time of recovery from sickness between those who have been in the habit of using alcoholic drinks moderately, and those who were total abstinents. The number who became infected from the same exposure of those who used the alcohol was nearly two to one of the the other, and the time of recovery double.

☞ The London Mechanic's Magazine states that a remedy for the poison of strychnine and mushrooms has been discovered, and consists in making a poisoned person eat large quantities of refined sugar, and in desperate cases opening a vein and injecting water in which sugar has been dissolved.

MY SHEPHERD.

The Lord's my Shepherd, on him I lean,
And I shall never fear;
He leadeth me to pastures green,
To fountains deep and clear.

The Lord's my life, my strength, my shield,
My rock and my high tower;
My God, my all to thee I yield,
Keep me from Satan's power.

Help me to trust, O Lord, in thee,
Be thou my stay, my all;
From every sin, O keep me free,
Oh! guide me lest I fall.

O may I never from thee stray,
Nor leave the heavenly road;
Help me to trust thee day by day,
My Savior and my God.

And when my work on earth is done,
Then, Lord, remember me;
Then take me to my heavenly home,
To live and reign with thee.

MAN AS HE WAS, IS, AND IS TO BE.

BY JOHN P. BELT.

NUMBER TWO.

THE ATONEMENT.

We are led to inquire what remedy has been provided for the human family, that meets the exigencies of man's moral condition at the commencement of his natural life? And this involves "The nature and extent of the atonement, and merits of the vicarious death of Christ."

To say that Jesus Christ undertook a work in which he failed to accomplish the end in view, is not only an impeachment of his wisdom; but is also to deny the purpose of God, and to say that he did not see "the end from the beginning." And if Jesus failed in any point to accomplish the design of his death and sufferings, he cannot be said to have Almighty power given into his hands; nor would it be true that "He hath done all things well." But as there was design in all that was done by Jesus Christ, we do not suppose that when "he tasted death for every man" that he died for those who will be finally lost and destroyed, in the same sense, and with the intent that he died for those who will finally be made immortal. Yet there is a sense in which "Christ died for the ungodly." He died for all in such a sense, "That there shall be a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and unjust." Acts 24: 15. "For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive."

Then as the race of Adam are mortal, and thereby subjected to death; none but He who is "the resurrection and the life" can bring them again from the graves. "For since by man came death, by man came also the resurrection from the dead." When he "gave himself a ransom for all," he covenanted to take the race with all the ruin that sin had brought upon them. "For Christ also hath once suffered for sins, the just for the unjust, that he might bring us to God." 1 Peter 3: 18. He did not pay the penalty of death for fallen man, for if he did, none would have died since. He only suffered death, that those who die may live again. And it was in this view that John the Baptist said, "Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world." That is, he would in the end destroy "the vail that is spread over all nations," when all who have returned to the dust will be made to live again when the time which is appointed comes, that they may appear at the judgment seat of Christ, to answer for the deeds done in the body. Therefore, when Jesus Christ "tasted death for every man," he did not by his perfect obedience make them innocent; for he only "died for all, that they which live should not henceforth live unto themselves, but unto him which died for them and rose again." They would not have to answer for Adam's sin, when they appear at the judgment, although its consequences still cleave to them in this life. To them, individually, the imputation of his sin was borne away into the wilderness, as it was typically illustrated by the ordinance concerning the scapegoat under the Levitical law. Hence it is, "if any man sin, we have an advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous." And "he is the propitiation for our sins; and not for our sins only, but also for the sins of the whole world." 1 John 2: 1, 2. Therefore, "it is appointed unto man once to die, after this the judgment."

That there is a first or temporal death, and a second, or eternal death, brought to view in the Bible, is positively shown by the word of the Lord, saying, "What mean ye, that ye use this proverb concerning the land of Israel, saying, the fathers have eaten sour grapes, and the children's teeth are set on edge?" That is, the children are subjected to the consequences of their father's (Adam) sin, which saying is true, so far as the infirmities of the flesh in this life are concerned, inasmuch as men are still mortal and under the power of death. But this condition will not always so remain, for "As I live, saith the Lord God, ye shall not have occasion any more to use this proverb in Israel." Why shall there be no more occasion to use it? "Behold, all souls are mine; as the soul of the father, so also the soul of the son; the soul that sinneth, it shall die." Then as all men are liable to and do go down in sorrow to the grave for the sin of another man, there must be another death, which is the wages of their own sins. "For, the soul that sinneth, it shall die. The son shall not bear the iniquity of the father, neither shall the father bear the iniquity of the son. The righteousness of the righteous shall be upon him and the wickedness of the wicked shall be upon him. Have I any pleasure at all that the wicked should die? saith the Lord God; and not that he should return from his ways and live." Ezek. 18: 2, 3, 4, 20, 23. Then as all inherit temporal death from Adam, which consigns them to the grave, they must come forth again in order that they may die for their own iniquity. "So then every one of us shall give account of himself to God." Rom. 14: 12. The benefit that first resulted to the human race by virtue of the atonement, was the placing of all on probation, that eternal life might be offered to them through the gospel. Christ gave himself a ransom for all, and he is the Savior of all, in such a sense that the provisions of the gospel are sufficient for all. "For until the law sin was in the world; but sin is not imputed where there is no law. Nevertheless death reigned from Adam to Moses, even over them that had not sinned after the similitude of Adam's transgression, who is the figure of him that was to come." Rom. 5: 13, 14.

The prophet foreseeing the time when Jesus Christ would make the new covenant, which would be sealed by the blood of atonement for the redemption of transgressors, that they which are called might receive the promise of eternal life, said, "In those days they shall say no more, the fathers have eaten a sour grape, and the children's teeth are set on edge. But every one shall die for his own iniquity; every man that eateth the sour grape, his teeth shall be set on edge." Jer. 31: 29, 30. It was to the end that each individual person is made to answer for his own deeds, that the apostle Paul uses the term "justification," when he said, "Therefore as by the offence of one judgment came upon all men to condemnation; even so by the righteousness of one the free gift came upon all men unto justification of life." Rom. 5: 18. Then it is but a false assumption to say that the term justification is only used in the sense of remission of sins. To make such a use of the word justify as that, is about as great an abuse of language and the perversion of the Scriptures, as can possibly be made.

The word justify is a legal term which is the opposite of condemn, and both words are used to state a fact. Thus for instance, a man may be on trial, in court, under charge of murder; when it is made to appear from the evidence that he acted in necessary self-defence, he is said to be justified. But if the evidence shows that he committed a premeditated murder, he is condemned. Now when the court pronounces the justification of the act, it does not make the man innocent, it simply states the fact that he is innocent of the charge. And when the court pronounces him condemned, it does not make him guilty, it only states the fact that he is guilty of the crime. These terms are used in this sense in Deut. 25: 1, and in 1 Kings 8: 31, 32. In the former, the judges are directed to declare the facts; and in the latter, the Lord is requested to do the same thing. But in neither case would the declaration change the character of those concerned. That is the light in which Paul views the condition of the human race. They had received the free gift of justification of life. That is, the fact is stated that they would be made alive again; but the declaration does not change their character.

The term justification of life, should never be confounded with justification by faith. In the first case, the term does not imply the pardon and remission of sins. That idea would exhibit an absurdity; for it would represent the Almighty as pardoning the sinner in advance of trial; even before the court is in session. And that too, in the face of what Christ himself proclaimed, "The Father judgeth no man, but hath committed all judgment unto the Son." In fact, if the entire race were both condemned and sentenced, an executive pardon could not justify them. It is true that Christ did say to Nicodemus, "He that believeth not is condemned already." But he also said at the same time, "He that believeth is not condemned." In the second case, the term "justification by faith" is the doctrine of the gospel, and not pardon by prerogative power. The question involved, is not about the state of an unbeliever, or the guilty sinner; much less about a condemned or sentenced one. It has reference only to the justified believer, "whose faith is counted to him for righteousness." One who by faith has his sins taken away by the Lamb of God, "For he was manifested to take away our sins." It was to give assurance that the whole race of man would again be raised up, that Christ said, "And I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto me." John 12: 32. It is also in this view that Paul said, "For whether we live, we live unto the Lord; and whether we die, we die unto the Lord; whether we live therefore, or die, we are the Lord's. For to this end Christ both died and rose and revived, that he might be Lord both of the dead and living. . . . For we shall all stand before the judgment-seat of Christ. For it is written, As I live, saith the Lord, every knee shall bow to me, and every tongue shall confess to God," etc. Rom. 13: 8–12.

When Christ made atonement for sin, he suffered and laid down his life by covenant. He died in a general sense for all, that every man might be on probation. But he died in a special sense for his church. Hence it is that the gospel was to be preached to every man, with the assurance that all who believed would be saved from eternal death. "On such the second death hath no power." With this intent the new covenant was made and confirmed, that his covenant people might be "brought to God." For this purpose a new and royal priesthood was instituted, and the gift of the Holy Ghost was bestowed, "that they may obtain the salvation that is in Christ Jesus with eternal glory." 2 Tim. 2: 10. From this text it is intimated that the atonement was the appointed means to open up the way to secure eternal life. The salvation that is in Jesus Christ refers to what takes place in this life or in time; and the eternal glory is what takes place in the eternal state. Although Christ did not really die until some four thousand years after the creation, yet he was "the Lamb of God slain from the foundation of the world."

It was in view of that provision for salvation that Adam went forth from the garden on probation. Hence it was said to his first-born son, (Cain,) "If thou doest well, shalt thou not be accepted? and if thou doest not well, sin lieth at the door." Gen. 4: 7. It is also in this view that the gospel was preached to men before the flood.

The apostle Peter not only recognizes Noah as a preacher of righteousness before the flood, but he also settles the fact that Christ also preached by the Spirit to them; and was the object of faith, and the appointed Savior of all who obeyed and were obedient to the dictates of that divine influence, long before he came in the flesh to make the atonement. "For Christ also hath once suffered for sins, the just for the unjust, that he might bring us to God, being put to death in the flesh, but quickened by the Spirit; by which also he went and preached unto the spirits in prison, which sometimes were disobedient, when once the long suffering of God waited in the days of Noah." 1 Peter 3: 18, 19, 20. Hence it is, that not only in the age before the flood, but also in the succeeding generations since the days of Noah, eternal life has been offered in the gospel through Jesus Christ, the promised seed. And as surely as the obedient believer shall be made alive, in order that he may live forever; so must the disobedient wicked class live again, before the second death takes place on them. For "they that sow to the Spirit, shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting; and they that sow to the flesh, shall of the flesh reap corruption." Then again, there is a class of writers who put great stress upon the word "all." But in every passage of Scripture where it is used, there need be no difficulty as to what it implies; for such expressions are common in all languages, and are limited in their meaning to what the sense requires in the connection where they stand. The same is true in regard to the atonement.

For the World's Crisis.

THE RENEWED HEART.

The subject of a renewed or regenerated heart, is made such by causes either external or internal, or both. If we look for the external cause, we read, "God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have eternal life." John 3: 16. Again, in the epistle to the Hebrews, we read, "We are sanctified through the offering of the body of Jesus Christ once for all." Heb. 10: 10. Here is seen the infinite love of God—the slain Lamb—the almighty sacrifice for the sinner's conversion. If we inquire for the internal cause, we find all our righteousness is as filthy rags; all our tears, trials, martyrdom, yea, death itself, are unavailing penance; "By grace are ye saved." "According to his mercy he saved us, by the washing of regeneration, and renewing of the Holy Ghost" Tit. 3: 5. Hence, the atoning blood, the renovating power of the Holy Spirit, working conjointly with all might in the inner man, constitute free grace; the cause internal. But so intimately connected are the two causes, in many instances of conversion, that it seems difficult to attribute the leading impulse exclusively to either.

Whether or not we regard the associations of Gethsemane, together with the more executive and tragical scenes of Calvary, the mighty works, collectively, of his three years' ministration on earth; or, some more sudden demonstration of the Spirit's power, acting directly on the heart, as the incipient cause of this or that conversion, we have to acknowledge the merits and intercessions of Jesus as the only efficient cause.

Turning from the cause, we find the subject of a renewed heart, to have undergone a grand moral change; once, spiritually naked, he is now clothed, and in his right mind. Once, the slave of every malignant passion, now, all submissive, under the overcoming influence of divine love; receiving every adverse providence, as from his Father's chastening rod. Constrained by the love of God, he has forbearance and forgiveness ever in exercise towards those who offend him. Adverse to every thing which might wound the cause of his blessed Savior, he feels a constant solicitude, lest he displease in thought, word or deed. The recollection of follies past, cover his mind with an inward blush, and cause him to repel every temptation, lest he be defiled with sin. Full of that meekness which entitles him to an inheritance among the saints, he looks upon the children of God with an eye of peculiar respect, sympathizing with them deeply in all their sorrows, since they stand related to that Being whom he supremely loves.

His most delightful meditations are connected with the courts of Zion, and like David, he is glad when they say to him, "Let us go into the house of the Lord," for he prefers to be a doorkeeper there, rather than dwell in the tents of wickedness. He is ill at ease in every place where the honor of God is wanting. The Bible is a source of sweet entertainment for all his solitary hours. With strong faith and holy hope, he often looks across the dark swellings of Jordan, to the promised land, the evergreen fields, the amaranthine flowers, the jasper walls, and the golden streets in the city of God, and rejoices that he shall see them with immortal eyes. THE TWO WITNESSES.

"And I will give power unto my two witnesses, and they shall prophesy a thousand two hundred and threescore days, clothed in sackcloth."—Rev. 11: 3.

(Concluded.)

10th verse;—"And they that dwell upon the earth shall rejoice over them and make merry, and shall send gifts one to another; because these two prophets tormented them that dwelt upon the earth." At the adoption of the new constitution by the nation in A. D. 1791, Paris was in a delirium of joy, and the people held a magnificent festival on the field of Mars, in honor of the liberty which they had gained. The historian says: * * * "In the evening Paris and all France blazed with illuminations, and resounded with the shout of enfranchised millions. Balloons rose, from which copies of the constitution were scattered as snow-flakes upon the multitude. The Elysian Fields, from the Arc de l' Etoile to the Tuileries, were brilliant with garlands and stars and pyramids of flame. Every tree blazed with quivering tongues of fire. Majestic orchestras pealed forth the notes of national triumph, and a multitude which no man could number filled that most magnificent avenue of Europe with plays, dances, shouts, and songs of exultation."—Abbott's History of the Revolution, p. 234.

The events recorded in the above quotation transpired in A. D. 1791. It was one of the first outbursts of joy by the people, after having attained their liberty as they supposed, based upon the principles brought to view in the foregoing. A little later in the history of the Revolution, when they had become more hardened in wickedness, the historian says: "Feasts of horrid license were held in the Metropolitan churches, and the Carmagnole was danced around the desecrated altars. Gifts of church furniture, bells for melting into cannon, gold and silver vessels to be fashioned in the mint, poured in from all parts of the country. Holidays consecrated to genius, to labor, to opinions, and other abstractions, were substituted for the feasts and festivals of the church."—History of France, by A. B. Edwards. Again, Lamartine says, Vol. III. p. 297:

"In every direction the churches are shut, the confessionals and saints burned, and wadding for cannon is made of the sacred books of the liturgy. All the citizens cry out, 'No more priests—equality and reason.' * * At Nantes large piles, lighted upon the public place, burned the statues, images, and sacred books. Deputations of patriots came at each sitting of the convention to bear as tribute the spoils of the altar. The towns and neighboring villages of Paris run occasionally to bring also to the convention, upon chariots, relivuaries of gold, mitres, chalices, pyx, patern, and chandeliers of their churches.

"Banners planted in this heap of spoils, piled up in irregular masses, were inscribed—Destruction of fanaticism! The people were avenged by their power to insult what they had so long adored. * * * A fete in honor of Reason was decreed in the cathedral of Paris; songs and dances hailed the decree. * * * On the day fixed for the fete to take place, popular societies, fraternal female societies, revolutionary committees, sections, groups of choristers, singers and opera-dancers encircled the throne."

From what I have now written upon this point, I think the reader will see the proof that the French nation did rejoice and send gifts one to another, at and after the inauguration of the new state of things, namely, Liberty without religion. This great rejoicing was caused from the fact that they had slain "the two witnesses," and because (as we are told in the verse under consideration, that before they were slain) "these two prophets (two witnesses) tormented them." As I have already shown in this article, when presenting the history of the condition of France at and prior to the breaking out of the Revolution, that there were two classes of individuals which constituted nearly the whole population of France, who were tormented by the teachings of the Bible (the two witnesses), and consequently labored together for its overthrow,—it will not be necessary for me to present proof on that point.

11th verse;—"And after three days and a half, the spirit of life from God entered into them, and they stood upon their feet, and great fear fell upon them which saw them." From the fact that the events recorded as having transpired in connection with the slaying of the two witnesses, were events wrought out by the nation, it is evident that had not the nation believed in the existence of God at that time (autumn of 1794), the spirit of life from God could not have entered into them (the two witnesses) to have caused their partial restoration. Hence I understand the figure,—"the spirit of life from God entered into them," is used to show that the party who had now obtained the power (at the overthrow of the Jacobins in the autumn of A. D. 1794), believed in the existence of God; and therefore we find them as soon as practicable restoring the authority of the Bible, the word of God, by relaxing the laws against priests, and by permitting the exercise of religious worship.

There was, however, as yet no fixed or staple government in France; therefore whatever was granted in religious matters by the party power was simply a permit, and not a decree which could rudely be enforced by them, should the rebellious mob rise against them. Hence the expression in the verse under consideration—"And they stood upon their feet"—seems to have been fulfilled in the fact that the party now in power no longer trod under foot the Bible, "the two witnesses," but permitted its use, and also the exercise of religious worship; although they (the two witnesses) had not as yet been decreed to an exalted position in the nation: in other words, a national religion had not yet been established.

Again, we learn from the verse under consideration that "great fear fell upon them which saw them"; in other words, great fear fell upon a certain class when they saw "the two witnesses" "stand upon their feet," or, partially restored or revived, by the permission of religious worship. To show the fulfillment of this point, I will refer to the history of those times.

There still remained in France a large and powerful party, consisting of the Jacobins and their followers, who had been deprived of their power, and who still remained deadly hostile to the Bible and to the Christian worship. "They professed to see in the return of the multitude to the christian worship (by the permit of the party in power) the return of the ancient superstitions. They were therefore full of envyings and fears, and uttered loud murmurs, and expressed open dissatisfaction." They used all their efforts to overawe the convention, and bring about another reign of terror, that they might quench again all thoughts of God and his word, and establish the republic without religion: but in this they were defeated, and the party were finally wholly suppressed. In this I see the fulfillment of the expression, "And great fear fell upon them which saw them."

12th verse;—"And they heard a great voice from heaven saying unto them, Come up hither. And they ascended up to heaven in a cloud; and their enemies beheld them." If we still bear in mind that all the events which transpired in connection with the slaying of the two witnesses, and their revival to life again, were national acts, I think it will be easy to understand the verse under consideration. The events recorded in this verse evidently bring us to the event of the nationalizing of the professed christian religion in France. The great voice denotes the commanding authority of the party or person in power, who accomplishes the work of nationalizing a christian worship. Again, as the literal heaven is exalted above the literal earth; so the place referred to in the text by the symbolic word heaven, from which the voice came, and to which "the two witnesses" ascended, must mean an exalted place or position in the government of the nation. The ascending in a cloud evidently refers to the multitude in connection with the regal authority, who aided in the work and ceremony of nationalizing a christian form of worship, together perhaps with the surpassing celerity with which the work was accomplished. The enemies who beheld them evidently refer to the great opposition and malignity manifested by many, and some high in authority, against the nationalizing of a christian form of worship.

I will now make a few historical quotations showing the fulfillment of the verse under consideration. "From early recollections, and the conservative bias of his mind, he (Bonaparte) was favorably inclined towards religion—the ancient Catholic religion of his fathers and his country, its rights and its pastors. Moreover, he judged that a national faith, as a mere element of social order, was indispensable to a community. * * * Upon these and other points the negotiations lingered on for several months, until the patience of the First Consul was exhausted; and sending one day for Spina to attend him at Malmaison, he rebuked him with great severity, and threatened vengeance on the court of Rome if his terms were not complied with. This exercise of direct intimidation produced a powerful effect. Cardinal Consalvi, principal secretary of state, hastened from Rome to appease the anger of Bonaparte; and after another interval of tedious negotiation, conditions of accommodation were finally agreed upon. The Gallican church was anew constituted on the former principle of a spiritual union with Rome, but shorn of its territorial basis, and, in all temporal matters, and in the administration of religious affairs, made dependent on the civil government of France. The First Consul, in fact, only allowed the Pope such sway as was consistent with his own dominion over the church as an institution of the State, and its absolute freedom from foreign interference or influence.

"On the 15th of July, 1801, the treaty consummating this great work of reconstruction and pacification was signed, and an established religion once more conferred on France, after a tempest of violence and impiety which had threatened the Roman Catholic church with utter annihilation. * * This restoration of religion cost the First Consul a greater effort than had yet attended any of his reactionary labors. It was violently opposed even in the council of State, and he had to enforce it with all the vigor of his reasoning and determination. Among the generals of the army, likewise, it excited extreme dissatisfaction; and so unequivocal were the symptoms of opposition in the Tribunate and the Legislative Body, that it was deemed prudent to defer its presentation for a legislative sanction. * * There was nothing Bonaparte had so much at heart as the consummation of the religious peace, and he was intent to celebrate it with extraordinary pomp. ('To cause them to ascend in a cloud.') He had yet several difficulties to encounter touching the nomination of the new prelates with the court of Rome, which had deputed Cardinal Caprura as papal legate to Paris; but after many altercations, he succeeded in carrying all his points, and Easter Sunday was finally appointed for the solemn festival of the restoration of religion in France. At this great event all the bodies of state were to attend in the cathedral of Notre Dame, before whose long-forsaken shrine the cardinal, assisted by the sixty archbishops and bishops of the new church, was to perform the ceremonies of divine worship.

"It is a singular proof of the rooted aversion towards religion then prevalent in France, that the generals of the army, through the most turbulent and democratic of their number—Augerean—openly mutinied ('and their enemies beheld them') against the order issued for their presence at the celebration; and it was only at the stern and reiterated command of Bonaparte that they consented to obey. On the day assigned, the 18th of April, 1802, the streets from the Tuileries to Notre-Dame were lined with troops and thronged by the applauding multitudes. The First Consul appeared, surrounded by a brilliant staff of officers, and was accompanied by a long train of carriages, bearing the principal functionaries of government and the ladies of the court. He was received at the door of the cathedral by the Archbishop of Paris at the head of his clergy, and conducted to the seat set apart for him. The Senate, the Council of State, the Legislative Body, and the Tribunate, were ranged around and in front of the altar. Mingled with the dazzling uniforms of the military, were the waving plumes and bespangled dresses of the females who clustered around Madame Bonaparte. The pious services were rendered amidst a hushed silence; and whilst many, especially amongst the females, were affected to tears at this renovation of a cherished faith, some of the officers present took pains to manifest indifference and scorn. ('And their enemies beheld them.') Bonaparte preserved throughout the ceremony a grave expression of countenance, and afterwards severely rebuked those who had violated decorum by an irreverent demeanor. * *

"Thus through the determined perseverance of Bonaparte, who had to combat prejudices and difficulties on all sides,—in France itself among both laity and clergy, at Rome with bigoted ecclesiastics,—was the Catholic church re-established in France: which but for him would probably have remained forever annihilated."—Redhead's History of the Revolution, Vol. 2, pp. 160, 161, 167.

To show that the Bible had now attained to an exalted position (symbolic heaven) in France, the same historian says (p. 186) that at the ceremony of the coronation of Bonaparte, which occurred two years later, "He took the oath prescribed by the constitution, repeating it with his hand resting on a copy of the Evangelists."

From what I have now written upon this point, I think it will appear evident that the verse under consideration had its complete fulfillment at and by the nationalizing of a christian form of worship in France by Bonaparte. We hear his commanding voice demanding that the Bible shall be recognized as the word of God in the highest office of the nation; and that a national christian form of worship shall be adopted. Again, we see all the majesty, glory and dazzling brilliancy the nation could command present at the ceremony of restoring the Bible ("the two witnesses") and christianity to an exalted position in the government of the nation; hence in a figure, they may be said to ascend in a cloud. Again, from the great hatred and animosity manifested against the nationalizing of a christian form of worship by a large part of the officers of state, and even at the ceremony, I think the reader will see the fulfillment of the following text,—"and their enemies beheld them."

As I have now carried my investigation to the end of all that is said concerning "the two witnesses," I will simply remark concerning the 13th verse, that the "great earthquake" spoken of as transpiring at "the same hour," evidently refers to the great commotions caused by the wars of Bonaparte, which shook nearly all Europe to its foundations. Again, as France was one of the ten divisions of the old Roman Empire, and as a nation she had stood connected for centuries with the woman (apostate church), who has her seat at Rome, and who the angel informs us in the 17th chapter "is that great city," I understand the figure of expression "and the tenth part of the city fell" to represent the fall or overthrow of France in A. D. 1815: for, further, it is evident from the language in this verse that this fall of the tenth part of the city was caused by the great earthquake; and France is the nation that fell in consequence of the wars and commotions ("earthquake") in Europe at that time.

I will now close this article by calling the attention of the reader for one moment to the three days and a half period. If the position I have advocated is in harmony with the prophecy (and I have no doubt that it is), namely, that the two witnesses were slain in the spring of A. D. 1791, then it is certain that the 1260 days (years) of papal supremacy must have ended at or prior to that point of time: for the two witnesses were to prophesy clothed in sackcloth during the above mentioned period of time; and when that period of time had ended, or when they had finished their testimony, for 1260 years they were to be slain. If then we add 75 years to the spring of A.D. 1791, to make up the 1335 years, it will reach the spring of A. D. 1866; beyond which time I do not believe the 1335 years can be extended. But the question arises, Did not the 1260 years end prior to the time the two witnesses were slain? In answer, I will quote the text refering to it. Rev. 11: 7;—"And when they shall have finished their testimony (for 1260 days), the beast that ascendeth out of the bottomless pit shall make war against them." It would seem that the first movement that is made by the beast against "the two witnesses," after they have finished their testimony, is to make war against them.

Now the question will arise, When did the war commence against "the two witnesses"? This question I cannot answer satisfactorily to my own mind; but from the facts it sometimes seems that the war must have commenced against "the two witnesses" at the breaking out of the Revolution in A. D. 1789: if so, then the 1335 years would end this year, 1864. To this I will add, that there would be some reason to suppose that the 1335 years might have commenced in A. D. 529, the year we should touch if we run back 1335 years from the present; for the historian says, "The Justinian code was solemnly proclaimed as the universal law of the empire, in A. D. 529."—Enc. Metropolitana, Vol. 8, p. 410. Again, "That Justinian is a christian emperor appears in the front of his jurisprudence. * * * The christian emperor treats all mankind as his subjects, in their religious as well as their civil capacity. The emperor's creed, as well as his edicts, is the universal law of the empire. * * * His code opens with the Imperial creed on the Trinity, and the Imperial Anathema against Nestorius, Eutyches, Apollinaris. Justinian declares indeed that he holds the doctrine of the church, of the apostles and their successors. He recognizes the authority of the four great councils. He even acknowledges the supremacy of the Roman Church, and commands all churches to be united with her. * * * The Justinian code defined as heretics all who do not believe the Catholic faith."—Millman's Latin Christianity, Vol. [illegible] pp. 485, 513.

The code containing the above was promulgated in every province of the empire, and went into force in A. D. 529. See Blair's Chronological Tables, p. 229. Gibbon also says that Justinian caused the code to be several times written upon parchment by his scribes; and then caused it to be read and proclaimed in the public assemblies, in every province of the empire, to be in force as the law of the empire in A. D. 529.

I have offered the above historical facts that others may judge for themselves of their showing the commencement of the supremacy of the apostate church, and also of the 1335 days (years) in A. D. 529. From all the facts concerning the matter which I have presented in this article, it appears perfectly evident to my mind that the 1335 days will end at some point of time between where we now stand, and the spring of A. D. 1866. If this be so, how careful then ought we to walk every moment of the remaining time, so that we may be ready at any hour to hail the return of our blessed Savior with the shout—"This is our God, we have waited for him."

PREACH PLAIN TRUTH.

In these "last days," when those who pretend to be at work on God's building "daub with untempered mortar," and cater to the cry of the people, who love to sin, "Speak to us smooth things," (Isa. 30: 10), it is necessary that some body "preach plain truth," and so daub with mortar that will be substantial in the building.

I have listened to the popular preachers of the day, and they have talked about sin, sin, SIN, as a sort of abstraction, separated from humanity, not daring to say that it was a reality, a hydra-headed monster, which exerts a powerful influence over men and makes them lie, swear, steal, commit adultery, quarrel with neighbors, grind the faces of the poor, indulge in pride and every form of ungodliness;—because that man sitting in the five hundred dollar pew would get mad, and thus show how much he needed just such truth, and leave, and take his three or four hundred dollar salary stipend with him; and then the minister's wife could not have that nice silk dress "she wanted so much"; or if he did not leave, he might get up a flurry and have the poor preacher turned off, or not let him come back after the next conference.

I have listened to sermons faultless as to moral philosophy, but blunt, pointless, without edge as to effect, because pointed sharp truth would cut some big man in a tender place. I do not mean one should be rough. He who is harsh misses his mark as much as the "smooth" preacher. There should be wisdom about handling these edged tools—these "mighty weapons." "A workman who needeth not to be ashamed," who rightly divides "the word of truth," will follow the direction of Jude 22, 23,—"And of some have compassion, making a difference, and others save with fear, pulling them out of the fire," all the time "hating even the garments spotted with the flesh."

We labor to save men, to prepare them for the coming judgment; and we should not "mince matters" and be "over nice" and take the edge all off the truth to please any one or "to save our bread and butter." Thank God, we can labor with our hands and "eat our own bread," if they are disposed to withhold aid because we preach plain truth.

It was said of Jesus, "Never man spake like this man." "The common people heard him gladly"; and it was all because he "rightly divided" and gave "each his portion in due season." He could weep over sinners, or use the scourge of small cords. It was a hard thing for Scribes and Pharisees to hear him. They were "big men," and his plain talk cut close. The "common people" had less worldly policy, or self-esteem, and less money, and so were more glad to hear him; and they are more glad to hear us when we imitate Jesus' example; and if they have no money and are glad to hear, we will work and pay ourselves, "that we may not be chargeable to any" of them. And so we will preach, warning every one night and day with tears; not being too modest (?) and refined (?) to call sins by their Bible names, but in the fear of God denouncing sin and entreating the sinner to "confess and forsake" and "find mercy."

Preach holiness—purity of heart. Preach the nearness of the judgment. Preach the whole truth and nothing but the truth. Then shall every man have praise of God.

ELIAS SMITH.

Some two years since, and perhaps longer, Eld. D. T. Taylor furnished some items concerning this man of God, which were published in the Crisis, calling attention to the fact that he published the first religious newspaper, and also that he believed and taught the destruction of the wicked. It is well to carefully note the progress of events, as we approach the solemn end, see how God has prepared the way of his word, and by what varied means he has called a chosen people to occupy a scriptural position and "wait for his Son from heaven," as their only hope.

We regard Elias Smith as one of God's instruments, chosen to aid in spreading the truth most important to the last generation. I have his life published by himself in 1816 before me; from which I will make some extracts for the benefit of the readers of the Crisis. They will prove interesting. Smith was one of the first of a class described in the "Religious Encyclopædia," by our beloved Bro. Himes, who was then a distinguished minister of the Christian connection, thus:

"Christian connection or Christians, sometimes erroneously pronounced Christ-ians. This is a religious denomination of recent origin in the United States of America, and among the last that has arisen, which, from its numbers and character, has attained much consideration and influence. Its beginning may be dated about the year 1800; and the circumstances attending its rise and progress are somewhat peculiar. This sect recognizes no individual as its leader or founder. They have no Calvin, or Luther, or Wesley, to whom they refer as an authority for articles of faith and rules of practice. The denomination seems to have sprung up almost simultaneously in different and remote parts of the country without any preliminary interchange of sentiments or concerted plan of action.

Their leading purposes, at first, appear to have been, not so much to establish any peculiar and distinctive doctrines, as to assert, for individuals and churches, more liberty and independence in relation to matters of faith and practice, to shake off the authority of human creeds and the shackles of prescribed modes and forms, to make the Bible their only guide, claiming for every man the right to be his own expositor of it, to judge for himself what are its doctrines and requirements, and in practice to follow more strictly the simplicity of the apostles and primitive christians." Surely such a movement was needed. For one who said, "Smith, you are like the devil, walking to and fro upon the earth," he replied, "No, sir, I am one of those mentioned in Dan. 12: 4, that should run to and fro, to increase knowledge. The devil and his children walk, but the Lord's servants run, and by this means the devil and his servants are always behind."

"On the first day of September, 1808, the first number of the Herald was published in Portsmouth, N. H., which was, perhaps, the first religious newspaper ever published. Only two hundred and seventy-four subscribers were obtained. In September, 1815, they had increased to fifteen hundred."

On page 347, I find the following: "This year," (1804), "in June, my attention was called to think of the real state of the wicked after the last judgment. Before this time, I had taken for truth," (like too many others), "the old pagan doctrine of eternal misery for the wicked." In June, 1804, being in Mr. Holme's book-store, in Boston, I asked him if he had any new publications. He handed me "Evan's Sketch." On opening the book, my eyes first fixed on the word "destructionists." I read one page, and concluded people who held the wicked would be destroyed, were in a strange error, as no such thing ever before entered my mind.

I bought the book. Often after that the destruction of the wicked would pass through my mind, though I supposed eternal misery was recorded in the Bible. In April, 1805, I concluded to take my Bible and concordance and find "eternal misery," and not have my mind any longer troubled about destruction. I examined the words, misery, miserable and miserably; and found there was not one place in the Bible, where the word was used to describe the state of man beyond death. Next I looked for the word torment, and found that was limited, and that there was no torment mentioned beyond the day of judgment. I then looked at the words destroy, destruction, death, second death, perish, consumed, perdition, burnt up, end, etc. I examined the similitudes used to describe the end of the wicked, such as chaff, and stubble burnt up; dry trees cast into the fire, and tares burnt; the fat of lambs consumed, whirlninds, a dream, and noise.

All these thinks proved to me that at the last judgment, the wicked would be punished with everlasting destruction, which would be their end. My mind was settled upon the subject; but concluded to keep my discovery to myself, as the people were almost distracted with having so many new things; such as that God was one and not three, and that all rules but the Bible were useless, and that salvation was free for all.

My first preaching and writing disturbed the clergy and the wicked; the next disturbed the Baptists, and I was about certain, if this was known, it would disturb my brethren with whom I was connected. I kept it back as long as duty would suffer me, and was constrained at last to make it known or preach no more. It made some stir, but people bore it as well as could be expected. Soon after preaching it, I wrote and published five sermons upon the subject, which have never been answered to this day. Though the doctrine was then new, yet it has since spread into almost every part of the United States, and in Vermont it has been the means of bringing many from Universalism to Christ for life."

Let us be thankful for the light of truth—the "light of life" that shines so clearly from the precious "word of life,"—the Bible, to cheer the way that leads to life eternal; and let us be so faithful that when the Life-giver comes he may save us with the power of an endless life. If christians would study their Bibles more faithfully, they would come to a happy agreement in feeling, faith and practice.

VISIT TO MONTREAL.

Our late visit to the church in the city of Montreal, C. E., has been one of much interest and profit; not only to the members of the church, but to many outside. Our meetings began Thursday evening, June 9th, and closed Sabbath evening, June 19th.

Montreal is quite pleasant at this season of the year. The business part of the city is very substantially built. A large proportion of its buildings are made of stone, and many of them are quite costly. Some of the church edifices are very large and expensive. The Notre Dame cathedral, (Catholic) is much the largest and most costly. It stands in the heart of the city, and makes a very imposing appearance. It is said to seat seven thousand people. The Catholic church has great power in the city. That and the church of England have the controlling influence in the city government and business matters. We have been in no place where the priests bear rule as they do in Montreal. The people have great fear of their anathemas. Their curse has a withering influence upon the one who happens to receive it. This keeps many from being free in Christ, and from embracing the truth.

We see the same spirit as in Rome, when the "mother of harlots" was drinking the blood of martyrs. It is a lamentable fact that this spirit has taken possession of many professed Protestant churches, who are as bitter against the simple truth of the Bible, and its humble believers, as the "mother of .... abominations." This is particularly true in Montreal.

The tongue of slander and reproach falls heavily upon him who dares to break loose from the dogmatic creeds, based on human tradition and speculation, and instead of these takes the plain Bible doctrine in its simple harmony. But as heavy as is the cross, a goodly number have decided to bear it; and in doing so have received great peace and joy. We have heard many say who have been members of churches for years, that they never felt such peace and joy before, as they have since they embraced the "blessed hope," which the popular churches are pleased to call infidelity. Friends have forsaken them, and have become bitter enemies. One case came to our knowledge of two who were special friends, and because one of them came to our meetings and became a believer in what we preach, the other would not speak to him. But this is nothing new. It is a part of the christian's legacy in this world, and must be borne with patience. We are called all sorts of names, but good ones, by those who hate the doctrine we preach; while on the other hand, those who receive it and confess it, can hardly find words to express their gratitude and joy. They feel like men delivered from dungeon-chains and darkness, into the light and liberty of a beautiful home, where they can enjoy all human heart can wish. They are now free in Christ, which is what they have never felt before, although some of them have professed religion for years. This fact astonishes and convicts others, and convinces them there must be something more in it than the scoffer apprehends. On this account new ones are embracing the truth, in spite of all the efforts to hedge up its way.

When talking with a member of one of the popular churches, who has seen the light, and is now rejoicing in it, he remarked that the bitter opposition of his minister was what induced him to come the first time. His minister warned all to keep away from our meetings. This was so like the Roman Catholic church, that he felt unwilling to submit at all, and at once concluded to go and hear for himself. After hearing, he believed, embraced the hope, and received a richer peace and joy than ever before experienced. His experience corresponds with all others who have embraced these truths, for the belief of which we are called "infidels."

We have rarely met a church that was more delighted with the gospel hope, than the one in Montreal. Its members are earnest seekers after the truth. They prize it more highly because they have been in darkness so long. They are now surprised that they did not see it sooner. They stumbled over its simplicity. Now it would be as difficult to persuade them they are wrong in their present belief, as to convince a christian that the religion of Jesus is a humbug. Their testimony is, "we were never satisfied before. We used to have doubts, but now we have none. All is clear." Those who have been members of churches for years, feel almost as great a change in their joy and peace as is expressed by the young converts. They now have a Bible reason for their hope. During our meetings several individuals asked us questions, which assisted in bringing the truth before the people. The theological waters are much troubled. No small effort is made to keep them quiet, and put down all investigation; but so many have become interested, the clergy are not able to stay the rising tide of inquiry for truth and light. Thinking men are dissatisfied with the theological jargon so often set before them, instead of the simple teachings of Jesus, and are turning from it with a sad heart, sighing for something that looks consistent and harmonious. They are also disgusted with the lives of a large number who profess religion, and even those who are set up as teachers. They see so little harmony between the Bible pattern for a christian, and the mass of professors, they have almost lost their confidence in every thing connected with nominal christianity. We see here what Paul said should come in the last days: "Men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, ... lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God, having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof;" yet but few are willing to follow his advice, and "from such turn away." This last step is a very crossing one, and many are being condemned because they will not take a bold stand for the right, when they see it. All such must pass into a state of condemnation, unless they cease to be ashamed of Jesus' words. All who have given up friends and honors for Jesus and his word, feel most richly rewarded already. The sacrifices we make for the Lord's sake bring a very sweet peace, and abundance of true riches.

During our meetings several new ones have decided to be the followers of Jesus, and others are almost persuaded. The work is onward.

On Lord's day, June 12th, at 4 1-2 o'clock, we assembled upon the banks of the noble river St. Lawrence, for the purpose of baptism. This was a scene of great interest to the intelligent and orderly spectators, who were estimated to be some two thousand. This was said to be the first time that the ordinance of baptism had been received in the waters of the St. Lawrence, in this city. Some had fears that the crowd would disturb us, but all passed off very pleasantly. Eighteen were buried with Christ, and received very rich blessings. It was a scene that will be long remembered by those present, especially by those who there obeyed the Lord. All, so far as we could learn, said they never felt such peace before. Some were out of health, and friends thought it presumptuous for them to go into the water, but all felt better physically, as well as spiritually.

The following from the Herald of Life, published in New York, dated Feb. 17th, 1864, may not be out of place in this connection:—

"An Immersionist in a Fix.—Eld. Miles Grant visited Montreal the first of this month (Feb.), and wished to baptize some who believed, and found himself in a dilemma, which he describes as follows:—

We found several who wished to be baptized, but the waters of the St. Lawrence river are almost inaccessible for baptism at this season of the year, on account of the piles of ice on its banks, and its depth where an entrance might be found. On this account we saw no way to baptize unless we could get the use of a baptistry. On inquiry, we found one had been prepared in Nordheimer's Hall, but it was under the control of the minister who called our visit to the city a sign of the times. But as we thought he would let us have it for the purpose of baptizing some of Jesus' disciples, when not wanted for any other use, we went to the one who has charge of the hall, and found that we could have that if desired. Then all that was wanting was the privilege to use the baptistry. We accordingly sought an interview with the minister, entered his presence, and stated our wishes, when the following conversation took place: 'What is your name, sir?' 'Miles Grant.' 'I should not dream of letting you have it.' We said, 'Good morning, sir,' and departed, thinking that Jesus Christ had said, 'Verily I say unto you, Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me.' We felt a sweet peace of mind as we wound our way back to our resting place in the house of the friends of our Savior, and concluded that we had found an answer to Peter's inquiry in Acts 10: 47, 'Can any man forbid water, that these should not be baptized?'

Br. Grant does not tell us whether he succeeded in immersing these believers anywhere else. It seems the Lord had 'forbid' him using the St. Lawrence river,' and why should the minister at Nordheimer's Hall be any more yielding? Did Br. G. leave Montreal without baptizing the converts? If so, did he feel as 'sweet peace of mind' in having been forbidden the use of the 'St. Lawrence river,' as when the same thing happened at the baptistry? He might have consoled himself by reflecting on Paul's testimony, 'Christ sent me not to baptize, but to preach the gospel.' Eld. G. found this a truth, it seems, on this occasion, and we trust he may be profited by it hereafter."

Our meetings during the week ending June 20th continued to increase in interest. New ones saw the light of truth, and rejoiced when they embraced it; notwithstanding they were called "infidels" for so doing. They felt they could well afford to bear any amount of reproach to secure such sweet peace as they felt. Those who embrace the truth and defend it in Montreal are looked upon with contempt by nearly all the ministers, and most of the church members. They are thought to be unworthy the society of respectable people. This prevents persons from joining us for the sake of being popular, as with other churches at the present day. Those who go with us, do so because they really love Jesus and his word more than reputation, hence they are more likely to endure to the end. The heavier the cross borne, the firmer they stand, and the brighter their evidence of acceptance. On this account, those who have fully committed themselves feel very clear in their minds.

Almost every evening, some would ask us questions on points of doctrine, and thus help to develop the truth; for the more it is criticized and cross-questioned, the brighter it looks. Several prominent members of other churches have become much interested, and begin to see the Bible as it is,—a book of beautiful, simple harmony, adapted to the capacity of the common people. The theological scales are falling from their eyes, and we trust they will be instrumental in bringing others to a knowledge of the truth.

Some of the soldiers are among those interested. One has been converted and baptized. He is now anxious to get out of the army, for he feels satisfied that the military armor is not becoming to a christian soldier. Efforts are being made to buy his freedom. He is an intelligent and earnest disciple of Jesus. He says, as do others, that he has learned more about christianity and the plan of salvation within the last few months than in all the rest of his life. He is delighted with the consistency of the christian doctrine, and feels ready to suffer any amount of persecution for the sake of his blessed hope. He stands as nobly for the defense of Jesus and his word as any soldier could for his country. He can truly say, with many others, "Jesus is my all."

On Lord's day, June 19th, ten more happy souls were buried by baptism in the St. Lawrence. A large crowd assembled, estimated at some three or four thousand.

"Public Baptism.—It having been announced last week that Elder Miles Grant, recently arrived from Boston, would on Sunday administer the rite of baptism by immersion to a number of converts, a very large number of persons desirous of witnessing the ceremony assembled yesterday afternoon at the place appointed, near the Lower Lachine road, where the race from the City Water Works empties into the river. For more than an hour previous to the time announced for the commencement of the proceedings, the road leading from the city to the picturesque spot selected for the performance of the ceremony was filled with men, women and children, all hastening onward, as if afraid that the interesting services would terminate before they reached their journey's end. The weather was oppressively warm, and the dust plentiful; but the long procession of pedestrians appeared to regard these inconveniences as too insignificant for consideration, and the whole pressed forward with almost as much eagerness as if each expected to find his or her fortune on reaching the point of attraction. As they arrived on the spot, covered with dust and exhibiting the usual marks of over exertion on a hot day, the spectators took up the most eligible positions on the banks of the stream, and awaited the arrival of the appointed hour—half-past four.

The time at length came, and a commotion in the crowd collected below the right bank gave notice that the proceedings were about to begin. Presently the Elder, clad in a loose black coat and long water-proof overalls,* stepped from the shore into the river, and walked out cautiously for some distance, as if to ascertain how far he might venture with safety; and having apparently satisfied himself in this respect, he returned to proceed with the baptisms. The first of the candidates led into the water was a woman, about thirty years of age. She walked out without exhibiting any signs of nervousness, and was duly immersed for 'the remission of her sins,' the baptizer having first pronounced in a loud, clear voice the words, 'I baptize thee,' etc., etc. The immersion was greeted with shouts of laughter and many indelicate expressions among the spectators on the banks, and the conclusion of each succeeding baptism was marked in the same disreputable manner. The rite was administered to about a dozen persons, five of whom were women and girls; and the proceedings having been brought to a close by the singing of a hymn, the crowd, which numbered several thousand persons, left the scene and turned their faces homeward. Such open-air services as that of yesterday afternoon are almost invariably treated with levity by unbelieving spectators, and it may well be questioned whether they tend to promote religion and morality among the people."

The scene at the baptism was somewhat exciting. In the crowd were many Irish Catholics, who seemed very strongly disposed to make disturbance, and turn the solemn ordinance into ridicule; and had it not been for the presence of a large number of citizens who were friends of order, we think there would have been serious trouble. When engaged in prayer, and while passing into the water, we were pelted in our face with filthy tobacco quids; and afterwards with stones, when returning from the baptism; but through it all the Lord gave a calm and heavenly peace. This class of persons seemed as determined we should not baptize in the St. Lawrence, as did the ministers last winter that we should not use their baptistries. The abuse received raised us up many friends among the crowd. As we walked through the crowd, in passing from the water, we overheard one saying to one standing near, "Don't strike him." This all tended to strengthen and confirm the disciples of Jesus, and make them bolder in his service.

In the evening we had a large and very attentive audience. We closed the exercises of the day by a heavenly communion season, seated around a table some thirty feet in length.

On Monday evening we had our last meeting, which will be long remembered. The Spirit of God was upon us with power to convict the sinner and comfort the saint. Some requested prayers, one of whom said he had been an infidel for ten years.

During the evening Bro. L. C. McKinstry was ordained for the work of the ministry. It was a very solemn occasion. We think all felt more decided to be wholly the Lord's than ever before. We could truly say it was good to be there. Though we parted with them in tears, we did so in the full hope of soon meeting where all tears will be wiped away.

At 10.15 P. M. we took the cars for our next appointment, at Danville. After riding all night, we found a happy home and a quiet resting place at Bro. J. Porter's.

THE LAKE OF FIRE.

Bro. Grant:—Will you give an exposition of Rev. 14: 11, 19: 20, 20: 10, 2 Cor. 5: 6–8 and 12: 2? J. G. Graham.

For an exposition of Rev. 14: 11, see Crisis of April 26.

Rev. 19: 19–21 reads as follows:—"And I saw the beast, and the kings of the earth, and their armies, gathered together to make war against him that sat on the horse, and against his army. And the beast was taken, and with him the false prophet that wrought miracles before him, with which he deceived them that had received the mark of the beast, and them that worshiped his image. These both were cast alive into a lake of fire burning with brimstone. And the remnant were slain with the sword of him that sat upon the horse, which sword proceeded out of his mouth; and all the fowls were filled with their flesh."

It will be seen by reading the first part of the 19th chap. of Rev., that the saints are taken to the marriage supper of the Lamb before the fulfillment of the 19th, 20th, and 21st verses, which we have just quoted.

If we wish to know the result produced by the fire and brimstone, we have only to look at its effect upon the Sodomites; for we read in Jude and Peter that they "are set forth for an example" "unto those that after should live ungodly." We may learn from the destruction of the Sodomites what effect will be produced upon those who are yet to be cast into a similar fire. That fire and brimstone burnt them up; so all the wicked are to be consumed, as we read in Mal. 4: 1;—"Behold the day cometh, that shall burn as an oven; and all the proud, yea, and all that do wickedly, shall be stubble; and the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the Lord of hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch." When speaking of the wicked, which the Savior represents by tares, he says: "As therefore the tares are gathered and burned in the fire, so shall it be in the end of the world." We do not see how language could be plainer or stronger. No one would argue that when the tares are burned, they are still growing in the field. Why, then, should any one be required to believe that the wicked are still alive after they are "burnt up" root and branch? Such a position seems absurd. But as the Sodomites were burnt up, so will those be who are represented by the beast and false prophet in Rev. 19: 20, when they are cast "into a lake of fire burning with brimstone."

We pass to consider Rev. 20: 10, which reads,—"And the Devil that deceived them was cast into the lake of fire and brimstone, where the beast and the false prophet are, and shall be tormented day and night for ever and ever." Tyndale's old version reads, where the beast and the false prophet "were." The word "are" is inserted by the translators, there being no word in the text of the original to correspond with it.

The phrase "for ever and ever" implies the longest duration of that to which it is applied. It may be for a life time, or only a few days, as in the case of Jonah, who says, when speaking of the time he was in the whale's belly, "The earth with her bars was about me for ever." This "for ever" was only three days and nights.

We determine the time signified by the words "for ever" by the context, or the words limiting the phrase. In the case mentioned in Rev. 20: 10, the torment is only during the continuance of day and night. As we understand the Scriptures, day and night close up at the beginning of the new earth. Job says the Lord has "compassed the waters with bounds, until the day and night come to an end." As the torment of the Devil is not represented as continuing beyond the present arrangement of day and night; neither is it said it will continue to its close; therefore we do not see any proof in this text that he will exist eternally. We find other scriptures which show clearly that the time is coming when there will be no Devil in existence. In Heb. 2: 14, we read that Christ is to "destroy him that had the power of death, that is, the Devil." But this is not to be done till after the coming of Christ, but before "the meek . . . inherit the earth."

For an exposition of 2 Cor. 5: 6–8, see Crisis of May 24th.

We now come to 2 Cor. 12: 2. This passage has been frequently noticed in the columns of the Crisis, but we will look at it again. Says Paul, "I will now come to visions and revelations of the Lord. I knew a man in Christ about fourteen years ago (whether in the body, I cannot tell; or whether out of the body, I cannot tell; God knoweth), such an one caught up to the third heaven."

Instead of "caught up," Wakefield's translation reads, "carried away"; Thompson's,—suddenly conveyed." These renderings give the better idea of the original.

This scripture proves nothing in favor of consciousness between death and the resurrection, as the whole affair took place before the death of Paul. We understand the simple meaning of the passage to be, that when Paul was in the vision, he did not know whether he was carried away bodily to see what was presented to him, or only mentally. The prophet Ezekiel speaks of being carried personally, by a spirit, to see events; at other times he sees them only in a trance state. Paul, like one in a dream, did not know which, while in that condition. This is common, we think, to all who see things in dreams; they cannot tell whether they are actually present with the friends and objects seen, or whether they were presented to them mentally.

BURNING OF ROME.

Bro. Grant:—What is your mind about the burning of Rome before the coming of Christ? W. D. Davenport.

Our belief is that it will be burnt before he comes. If we turn to Rev. 18: 8, we read, "She shall be utterly burned with fire." While she is burning, those who have supported her and sympathized with her are represented as mourning over her, while her smoke is ascending. If the Lord had then come, we think they would not be mourning about Rome, but their own sad condition. After the Lord appears, they will be more interested in his movements than in the city of the "seven hills."

THE NEW S. S. QUESTION BOOK.

The Scriptural Question Book. "Sanctify them through thy truth: thy Word is Truth." Issued by the Christian Publication Society, Boston. 127 pp. Price, 15 cts.; postage 4 cts. $1.50 per dozen; postage 8 cts. on every three copies.

This little work, sometime since announced, is now out, and ready for delivery. It is a good book, and should be widely circulated. It is designed as a help to a general knowledge of the Scriptures and Scripture doctrine; is free from popular fables, inculcates truth, and guards the young mind from error. Due prominence is given to the faith once delivered to the saints,—the coming and kingdom of Christ, resurrection of the dead, doom of the wicked, inheritance of the saints, etc., etc. Adapted to children from twelve to fifteen, it may, until we have another, be used to advantage by those who are younger or older. Two more, at least, are needed; one for the little ones, and one for more advanced scholars. Shall we have them? In the mean time, let us make the best use of what we have, and pray for more. A great want, so long felt, and so earnestly desired, is now in part supplied. May it find its way into the hands of every family of children and Sunday school in the land.

For the World's Crisis.

IN AFFLICTION.

Dear Bre. and Srs. in Christ:—It is with a sad heart I take my pen to address you at this time. Death has entered our home and taken from our circle our dear Charlie. He did not come in angel form, but as an enemy, to mar and torture and destroy one we loved. Yet with the foe came a Friend, clothed with robes of light. He came with balm to heal, with the garment of salvation to enrobe, with costly ornaments to adorn and beautify the "inner man," while death was doing his dreadful work on the outer tabernacle. Thus with the sorrow there is much joy commingled, for out of death came life.

For Charlie we had often prayed, but never with so much earnestness as for a few weeks previous to his decease. About two weeks since we were enabled to bear his case before God with such faith as to feel assured he would be led to Christ. During the forenoon of the day he was taken sick, while we were employed in the pantry, all at once his case was so laid upon our heart that we bowed there in prayer for his immediate salvation. We were impressed with the thought that he would die, and we must hasten to direct his attention to the work of preparation. We entered his room and said,

"Charlie, you are sick with a very dangerous disease. You know that very many die with the diphtheria. Are you prepared to die?" He wept, and replied,

"No, mother, I am not."

"Well, Charlie, you may soon be too sick to seek the Savior. I advise you at once to give yourself to him, and obtain the pardon of your sins. He has said in his word, 'He that cometh to me I will in no wise cast out,' and the promise is, 'If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness.' He says to you, 'Son, give me thy heart.' Now, Charlie, give your heart, your sinful heart to Jesus, and he will cleanse it with his blood. Will you do so?"

"Yes, mother, I will.

"And if your life is spared, you will be a christian and serve the Lord, will you?"

"Yes, if I get well I will live a christian."

I then knelt down by his bed, and brought him in the arms of faith to Jesus, who waited to receive him. The burden was taken from my heart, and I fully believed he would be saved. In the afternoon I asked him if he had been praying. He said he had.

Have you given yourself to Christ?

"Yes, mother, I have."

Do you believe he has received you?

"Yes, I believe he has."

He used to kneel by the side of his bed and pray mentally, for he could not speak aloud, except with difficulty, his throat was so dreadfully swollen; until he became so weak he could not kneel. Our prayer went up before the throne, bearing this petition—"O my Father, let us have such a clear assurance, such manifest tokens of his conversion, as shall leave no room for doubt."

How graciously was our request granted! A clearer testimony was never bequeathed to friends by dying saint, than was given by our dear boy during the last two days of his life.

He was always patient, though his sufferings were great; his countenance was never ruffled. But the calmness with which he spoke of dying was truly astonishing. He said he had rather die than live and be wicked. Said he, "I have been a wicked boy, but the Lord has forgiven me, and I am not afraid to die." He asked us to forgive him all his wrong doings.

The morning before his death, he asked me to bring his books and toys to him, that he might give directions how they should be divided among his playmates. He wished me to write his name in each, and tell them to be christians and meet him in the kingdom. He wished me to take his money to the Sabbath School (Methodist), and give it to the missionary cause, and tell the scholars about his death, and ask them to become christians and meet him in the kingdom. (In a subsequent conversation with his father, he requested that some money due him might be given to the Advent mission.) Feeling as though we might not be able to talk composedly to the children, we asked if it would not do for Bro. R. (the pastor) to tell them. He rather reluctantly consented, but added—"I think it would do more good, if you were to do it."

God helping us, we will endeavor to comply with the dear child's request, and may the Spirit make it effective to the salvation of some souls.

He also requested me to write a letter, which he dictated, for the "Young Pilgrim," and sign it with his name. This we shall do, and thus will Charlie, though dead, yet speak to many hearts; and our prayer is that these messages sent forth by dying lips may lead many of the dear children to seek the same Savior he sought, and enjoy the same happiness and blissful hope of eternal life. After this work was finished, he calmly waited his release. We thought him dying near noon, and he kissed us, bidding us good bye. We asked him if he wanted to see his little brother Frankie, to whom he was devotedly attached. He shook his head. He felt afraid to have him near, lest he take the disease and die; but he wanted Frankie to see him after he was put into the coffin. Told us to kiss him for him. After dinner he somewhat revived. He felt disappointed, as he longed to go. His work was not quite done. About six P. M. his countenance changed for death. The blood began to settle under his nails. His father told him he was dying. It was welcome tidings, for he wanted to sleep in Jesus.

To an unconverted young lady who resides in the same house he put the question,

"Will you be a christian?" She replied with much feeling,

"Yes, Charlie, I will try." Turning to her mother he said,

"Will you be a christian?"

She answered in the affirmative. To others he put the same question, but all did not reply. For one of his young friends he seemed to feel more than for any other. Not satisfied with the message to be given with the book selected for him, he repeated it again, and then said,

"Mother, pray for Horace." Then turning to his companion's mother he said, "Pray for Horace." God grant that the earnest desires of his dying friend may speedily be granted, and his dear parents' hearts be made glad by seeing him truly penitent and yielding his heart to Christ; then will he enjoy the society of Charlie forever in that blessed land where sin will never mar their friendship.

Greatly were our hearts comforted by the words spoken to us on the funeral occasion by our dear Bro. York. Never did the hope of the resurrection beam with such glorious light as then. How sweet the thought, as we leave our dear ones locked up in the dark chamber, that Jesus has the keys of Death and Hades, and will when he comes unlock the door, and bring them forth clothed with immortality, to die no more. The jewel so valuable, and for which we have had so much anxiety, lest it be lost, is now locked up in God's casket, and it cannot be lost. The thought of its perfect security fills my heart with joy, and leads me to feel more than ever like being faithful, so that when the Lord comes to make up his jewels, i. e., to beautify and make them resplendent with glory, fit for his royal diadem, I may be numbered with him and dear little Henry, who for many years has been slumbering in dust. Never did I so realize the power of sustaining grace as when watching by the dying boy, for hours beholding his sufferings, and again upon my return from the graveyard.

Jesus so filled my poor heart on entering the house now so vacant and lonely, that I felt more like giving expression to shouts of praise than to emotions of grief. O how sufficient is the grace of God for every time of need! While wounding with one hand, he pours in the heavenly, all-healing balm with the other. Perfect submission to the divine will has been the state of my mind during the trying scene. God doeth all things well. Pray for us, that the Comforter may abide with us forever. Your sorrowful, yet rejoicing Sister in Christ,

Mary D. Wellcome.

Correspondence.

From Bro. J. T. Dixon.

Bro. Grant:—If any of our brethren wish to witness some of creation's groans, they can have an opportunity here. I came here Friday last, by request of anxious friends and relatives in Rocky Brook and Peacedale, to look after the wounded soldiers of the Rhode Island regiments, such as might have fallen in the late terrible conflict. Such scenes of suffering and misery cannot be realized save by eye witnesses. The city is one vast hospital, more than six thousand of the slightly wounded were in Washington as I passed through the city. The transports on the Potomac were crowded with fresh regiments passing to the front. I footed it from Bell Plains on the Potomac to Fredericksburg, some ten miles. Met hundreds of wounded on the road,—tents at Bell Plains filled with them. Long lines of ambulances filled with others more severly wounded. Many died on the way. Nine thousand rebel prisoners were at the landing, guarded by a regiment of colored soldiers and a few white ones. It was no doubt galling to the "chivalry." I found a large proportion of the 2d Rhode Island regiment "hors du combat," but the largest proportion will recover. I have a free pass to all the hospitals within the lines. Cannot get permit as yet to go to the front, in fact I cannot find time to go as yet.

There is so much to do here. There are some ten thousand wounded in this city. All the churches, public buildings, and most of the private residences, are filled with them. O! it is a terrible sight. It is impossible to get matresses for them. They lie on the hard floors, in long rows, with nothing but their blankets and coats for bedding, wounded and maimed in every possible manner, legs broken and amputated, arms also; shots in lungs, back, breast, sides, hips, abdomen, eyes shot out, jaws shot off, some dying, scores dead and constantly being buried. As I write they are interring five poor fellows, side by side, in the garden back of the house, with boards at their heads, with names and regiment labelled thereon. The Sanitary Commission, and Chirstian also, male and female, are doing all they can possibly to alleviate the suffering; dealing out clothing and delicacies, sending round nurses, dressing wounds, watching night and day, praying with the dying, etc., etc. I am doing all I can in same way; have distributed some of our tracts, what I have with me.

O! here are scenes calculated to humble human pride. Here we may realize that man is a poor, corruptible creature. And here is a chance to develope the finest traits of our natures, and call out our heart's best sympathies, and lead us in our desires to benefit and assist the suffering and unfortunate ones around, to forget ourselves and crucify every selfish feeling. My heart has bled as I have witnessed, and still do, the heart-rending scenes all around and thought how all this (suffering) or nearly all has been produced by man's selfishness and disobedience of God's holy precepts, how every earnest christian heart must feel (in view of the dire state of things now transpiring all around) to pray, "Let thy kingdom come."

Brethren, here is a chance for you to really bear crosses and spread truth. Here you can easily convince many that the present is far from being a beautiful world. I bunk right in with the soldiers and share their rations. As soon as I can shall go to the front, and may write you of other scenes as there are preparations for another battle. Five thousand in one legion just marched through here for the front, others are going and have gone. I have seen splendid mansions of the old residents all dismantled, libraries of rare and costly books scattered all about. Still the Union officers do the best they can to protect private property, though the owners are rebels.

Yours, praying for redemption,
JOHN T. DIXON.

Fredericksburg, Va., June 16th.

P. S. Arrived home Saturday, June 11th, with the 2nd Rhode Island Regiment, whose time had expired, after visiting Fredericksburg, Port Royal, White House, and going to the front some eighteen miles from White House, and visiting the 2nd and 7th Rhode Island Regiments in the field, and the 9th and 6th army corps. My address till further notice will be at my home, Rocky Brook, R. I.

From Sr. S. A. Isbell.

BRO. GRANT:—I have long had a desire to do something in behalf of the tract cause. Knowing that I have been greatly benefited myself by their perusal, I now wish to add my mite to help scatter truth among the people; for I feel that we are living in perilous times, and what is done for the good of a sinful world must be done quickly. I think there is no better way than to scatter books and papers far and wide.

It has been some three years since I have heard a gospel sermon, as I live in a part of Wisconsin where the Advent doctrine has not been preached, and most of the people think it heresy; and if we try to give a reason of the hope that is within us, we get but little sympathy from the formal church-goers that surround us. But we thank our Heavenly Father for the privilege of reading the Crisis, which seems to keep us alive and gives us encouragement amid the perils of these last days. Being poor in this world's goods, it is but little that I can do, but that I endeavor to do cheerfully as doing it for the Lord; and my feeble prayers go with it, hoping that it may be instrumental in the hands of God as causing some weary one to be made happy in a belief of the truth. Pray for me that my faith fail not. Your sister hoping for eternal life at the appearing of Jesus,

Big Patch, Wis. SUSAN A. ISBELL.

From Sr. S. Bolles.

BRO. GRANT:—I want to say to you that I am still striving for the kingdom. The way looks brighter. I am glad I was ever led in this good way. We are very few in this place that are looking for Jesus' soon coming. We have felt in days past almost forgotten by those of like precious faith. But our trust has been in the Lord. We have had no preaching for months. But we have asked Father to send some of his dear children this way, to stir us up, and I believe he has. Bro. Whitehead has been here a few days. I feel to bless the Lord for what he has done for me. I believe there are those in our village that are feeling anxious about these things. Pray for us, dear brethren and sisters, that wh may prove faithful to our blessed Master when he comes. Yours in hope of eternal life when Jesus comes. SOPHIA BOLLES.

New Preston, Ct., May 28th.

BRO. T. W. SMITH writes from Nevada, Ia.:—

"I think the Crisis is growing better constantly. The Lord is with you of a truth. O that many more may see the blessed truths it advocates! I feel almost sick at heart on account of the worldliness and consequent lukewarmness of the church. Our efforts seem almost in vain. Can the world become more corrupt? 'Are there few that be saved?' God bless you.

Yours looking for the Lord."

Obituaries.

Killed by the cars at a crossing near West Bloomfield, Ont. Co., N. Y., June 14th. Sr. Lucy Caskey, of Richmond, near Honeoye, Ont. Co., N. Y.

Also, by the same accident, Georgie, infant son of David and Eliza Slout, of the same place.

Sister Caskey was a widow with two small children, who are by this sudden stroke left orphans. Her husband fell asleep in Jesus a little more than a year ago.

Early Tuesday morning, June 14th, Sister Caskey, in company with David Slout, wife and child, started to drive to Rochester to purchase goods. About seven o'clock A. M., while crossing the R. R. track at a deep cut, they came in collision with the cars, and were all thrown with great force some distance to the ground. Sister Caskey was thrown through a stout board fence, breaking the boards and killing her instantly. The child died in a short time. Sister Slout was so severely injured her recovery is doubtful. Mr. Slout, although badly bruised, is likely to recover.

This event has cast a deep gloom over the church in Honeoye, for Sister Caskey was an earnest worker in the cause of Christ, and beloved by all. Her life and substance were devoted to the Lord, as all who knew her can testify, and those who did not know her, if faithful will meet and know her in the kingdom, for she will surely be there. She has the seal of the Lord Jesus upon her, viz., "The Lord knoweth them that are his." The Lord gave much grace in addressing the large concourse of people gathered at her funeral, from Rev. 21: 3-4. F. BURR.

CHESTER J. DUNN.

Died, in Fredricksburg, Va., May 17th, from the effects of a wound in the left arm, received May 6th, Chester J. Dunn, aged nineteen years, seven months, seventeen days.

A little drummer boy of Co. C., 17th Regt. Maine Vols., son of the late Rev. Elbridge G. Dunn. A noble youth as ever trod the Virginia soil, and most dearly beloved by all that knew him, and his death has filled many a heart with the deepest sorrow, especially the heart of his widowed mother.

They've closed thy once bright eyes,
And laid thee down to rest,
Till Christ, descending from the skies,
Shall raise thee with the blest.

SARAH H. DUNN.

EDWARD A. LOCK.

Died in Hollis, May 30th, 1864, Edward A. Lock, aged twenty-seven years and five months.

Edward was a promising young man. He leaves a large circle of friends and relatives to mourn his loss, but they mourn not as those that have no hope, for they know that he was a true christian and follower of the meek and lowly Savior. He suffered exceedingly in his last days, but murmured not, for he had a hope of one day reaching that better land where sickness and death are no more.

JEFFERSON CARLL.

WALTER MITSON.

Died in Magog, C. E., June 8th, 1864, of diphtheria, Walter Mitson, son of George and Mary Jane Mitson, aged four years and one month.

Walter was really a child of promise. Unlike most children of his age the obedience which he always yielded to his parents, and the love he always manifested for those around him, had won for him many friends outside the family circle. But how suddenly our highest hopes are blasted. The fairest of flowers must fade.

A discourse was delivered by the writer from Jer. 31: 17. May the blessing of God rest upon the afflicted parents, and they be guided into all truth, and be found ready to meet their children when they shall come from the land of the enemy to enter upon the joys of Paradise restored.

Death enters and there's no defence,
His time there's none can tell;
He'll in a moment call thee hence,
Low in the grave to dwell.

JOHN CHAPMAN.

EDWIN BURNHAM MERRILL.

Died in Vernon, Vt., June 3d, of canker rash, Edwin Burnham, son of Ira and Abby Merrill, aged six years and seven months.

A discourse was delivered on the occasion by the writer from 1 Cor. 15: 26,—"The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death."

"When those we love are snatched away
By death's resistless hand,
Our hearts the mournful tribute pay
That friendship must demand.
O let us to that Savior fly
Whose arm alone can save;
Then shall our hopes ascend on high,
And triumph o'er the grave.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

From Liverpool June 11 and Queenstown 12.

The Augsburg Gazette publishes the text of the proposal made by England. It concludes by suggesting that if Denmark consents to the sacrifices demanded, justice requires that the independence of the kingdom shall be guarantied by the great Powers. England also proposed that South Schleswig should not be annexed to Holstein without the consent of the inhabitants.

The Moniteur says that the representatives of belligerents at the conference had agreed to meet in order to come to an amicable settlement under the auspices of one of the neutral representatives, and that the French plenipotentiary had been selected.

It is reported that the third division of the Austrian fleet will be sent forthwith to the North Sea.

The British Channel squadron is again about to leave Plymouth for Spithead.

A telegram from Constantinople states that Prince Cousa had been received by the Sultan, and that in consequence of this visit the concentration of Turkish troops on the Danube had been countermanded. The Circassian emigrants were dying by hundreds.

The Deutsche (Petersburg) Zeitung of the 11th says, in announcing the transfer to the Grand Duke of Oldenburg of Russia's claims upon Holstein: "By this step of Russia the succession question between the houses of Oldenburg and Augustenburg is made essentially an internal question of Federal right to be settled by the Diet."

COPENHAGEN, June 10. The Dabladat of today says it is asserted that Baron Von Plessen, the Danish Minister at St. Petersburg, has left for Copenhagen. He is the bearer of a proposal on the part of Russia to re-establish Schleswig and Holstein within the Danish monarchy, thus preserving the integrity of the Kingdom.

Le Nord says Russia will not send a new Minister to Rome, and that the connection between the two Courts will be confined simply to the dispatch of business having no political character.

COPENHAGEN, June 11. The Germans have abandoned Aalborg and withdrawn south. The Dannebrog is displayed upon all the houses in the town.

The Dagbladat says that Schleswig Holstein, as a separate State within the monarchy, is incompatible with Denmark's rights and honor, and that no Danish king can listen to such a plan.

PARIS, June 11. The Emperor will return to Paris on Tuesday next. Baron De Budberg will shortly proceed to Kinsengen to pay his respects to the Czar.

There is a rumor that the Emperor of Russia will come to Paris on Monday next, under the strictest incognito.

DOMESTIC.

Headquarters Department of South Carolina, Georgia and Florida,
Charleston, June 13th, 1864.

General: Five Grnerals and forty-five field officers of the United States army—all of them prisoners of war—have been sent to this city for safe keeping. They have been turned over to Brig. Gen. Ripley, commanding the first military district of this department, who will see that they are provided with commodious quarters in a part of the city occupied by non-combatants, the majority of whom are women and children. It is proper, however, that I should inform you that it is a part of the city which has for many months been exposed, day and night, to the fire of your guns.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,
SAM. JONES, Maj. Gen. Commanding.

To Maj. Gen. J. G. Foster, commanding United States forces on coast of South Carolina, Confederate States.

The Herald's James river dispatch of the 20th says the rebels have been shelled out of their position on Melvern Hill by the gunboat Eutaw. Three of the rebel rams came down nearly to Dutch Gap, amd were fired on by our monitors. The rams steamed slowly back. Gens. Grant and Butler were on the Agawam, having an interview with Admiral Lee at the time, and witnessed the firing.

Headquarters Army of the Potomac, June 22nd, 5 A. M. There was artillery firing on the right and picket skirmishing at various points along the line the whole of yesterday, resulting in the wounding of a few men, but no change in our position. A battery stationed on an elevated piece of ground in front of Petersburg kept annoying one of our batteries on the left for some time, when the latter opened in return. One of the shells exploded among the men at the rebel guns, causing a cessation of firing on their part.

Gen. Hancock is recovering from his indisposition, and expects to resume the command of his corps in a few days.

New York, June 22nd. The Herald's correspondent with Hunter, writing 14th, says the lines of railroad between Charlottesville and Lynchburg is effectually destroyed for two miles, thus cutting in two the rebel forces at the two places.

The Herald's Beverly Court House correspondent, writing June 19th, says information has been received that Hunter had a heavy engagement near Lynchburg on the 15th and 16th. All accounts but one represent it favorable to our side.

New York, June 23d. The Times' dispatch of the 10th says: This morning Gen. Birney, who is nearest Petersburg, bombarded the city for five hours.

The World's dispatch of the 21st says: It is expected that Gen. Grant will flank the rebels next, instead of assaulting.

The World has a rumor from Washington that Fort Darling is under siege.

The Herald's dispatch of the 21st says: The rebel cavalry and artillery attacked White House yesterday from 4 A. M. until 4.30 P. M. Our loss was from two to three killed and wounded. Gen. Sheridan arrived in time to participate.

The Herald's correspondent, writing June 20th, 10 P. M., says: The rebels did not reply to us while we were shelling the city from their works in front, for the reason, herbaps, that their batteries are so well covered by our sharpshooters that it is difficult to work their guns.

Gen. Birney has strengthened the lines in front of the Second corps and made them perfectly secure.

Prisoners report that both Hill's and Longstreet's corps arrived at Petersburg on Friday.

Gen. Wilson and his cavalry were about three miles south of Prince George Court House on the 18th, to protect our left flank and rear.

New York, June 24th. The Tribune's special from Washington, June 23rd, says advices from the army to June 21, 11 P. M., state that another important movement of this army is being executed. The last of sick and wounded are being placed in ambulances and started for City Point, and the hospital tents will be struck and loaded for a general movement to-morrow which cannot be made known. The movement must be of Gen. Meade's own choice as we have not and could not be driven from our position here, and the public will be satisfied that the change is not forced by necessity. The headquarters of Gen. Meade were moved yesterday.

New York, June 25. The Times' Washington dispatch says: On Tuesday the 2d corps moved to a position half-way between the Norfolk and Petersburg and the Weldon and Petersburg railroads. The enemy was found in force two miles this side of the latter road. Lively skirmishing ensued, but the enemy's position was found to be strong, and our advance fell back to the main body. On Wednesday the army was put in line of battle ready for action.

Heavy cannonading was heard at City Point on Thursday, but it was not known whether it proceeded from a general engagement.

The steeples and towers of Petersburg have been shot away.

The Washington Star of last evening says Gen. Grant's army occupies the position in Piney Woods and the outskirts of Petersburg lately occupied by the rebels, including all their works south of the Appomattox river. These entirely command Petersburg, which is the only one between Richmond and Weldon. Our guns stop all continuous communication by rail between Richmond and points south so long as Gen. Grant elects. He can thus hold the enemy at Petersburg from his present position, or he can move south with twenty days' rations, compel Lee to follow him and risk a heavy engagement on unfortified ground.

Assistant Secretary Dana has just arrived here and says our entire loss since crossing the James river is not over ten thousand. The rebel loss is proportionately as great.

The Tribune's correspondent, writing from Gen. Butler's headqnarters 21st, says Gen. Foster has moved north of the James river and took a position within nine miles of Richmond and intrenched himself. This movement puzzles the rebels greatly.

The Tribune's correspondent, writing from near Petersburg, says it is ascertained that Lee has disposed of his troops thus: garrisoned Richmond and Petersburg; has a slender force between the two cities; has sent nine brigades to operate against Hunter, and has guarded his still unbroken lines of railroads with a large force.

The Herald's correspondent says Gen. Foster's operations are perilous and important. He is expected to do the rebels much damage. The rebels are in full force on his front and right. The gunboats are on his left.

An officer at Bermuda Hundred says the rebels are using shells made of stone, in conical form. Some are a foot long, with a hole which contains the fuse and combustible material, the same as in any shell. The advantages claimed for these shells are that they fly into more fragments and are cheaper, but they are less reliable for accuracy. The stone is a kind of quartz.

Rebel prisoners report Richmond prepared for a long siege, and state that for three months past army supplies have been forwarded to the city in anticipation of Grant's intentions.

A camp of rebel conscripts on the Hendersonville road, six miles from Atlanta, on Friday broke for our lines. They numbered 800, 600 of whom got into our lines and remain; 200 were recaptured hy the rebels.

The World's dispatch says our forces now permanently hold the Petersburg and Weldon railroad south. This was accomplished by the 6th corps driving Hill's corps back several miles. Other important movements are in progress.

The whole of Pierce's brigade and part of another were captured. Longstreet's and Hill's corps are moving toward Weldon.

Beauregard's main army now covers Petersburg, while Lee's forces are moving to our left.

The rebels are marching and counter-marching to guard against our attacks.

COLORED SCHOOLS IN NASHVILLE.—There are a number of colored schools in Nashville, in a flourishing condition. When first started, great efforts were made to crush them; but they were protected by Gov. Johnson, and now they have become so numerous, and the attendance so large, that all open opposition to them has ceased. I can still, however, see rebels, both grown and juvenile, scowl at the little colored urchins, who, book and slate in hand, pass their door. This little species of bravado is all the revenge that the rebel natives can now exercise. A large number of grown people of color, also, attend these schools—especially females; as the men, who are compelled to labor for the support of their families, are determined that their wives shall possess the rudiments of an education.—Chicago Tribune.

☞ A severe drouth is prevailing in New England as well as at the West, and threatens to cut short the hay crop, which gave excellent promise three weeks ago. Other crops are suffering, but not severely, but genial showers are much needed. The roads in the neighborhood of Boston were never more dusty.

☞ A terrible drouth prevails in Texas, extending throughout that whole region, and, in fact, into Louisiana. The prairies of Texas are absolutely so parched that the earth is cracked into fissures, rendering it hazardous to journey on horseback by night. Cattle are dying by thousands.

☞ A severe drouth is prevailing in Illinois, Wisconsin and Iowa, and the crops are suffering for want of rain. In some places sharp frost has been experienced.

☞ Gen. Sully has 7000 troops in his expedition for the Indian country of the Northwest. A severe drought prevails throughout that region.

☞ The Senate has repealed the Fugutive Slave law by a vote of 27 to 12.

Tremont Grove and Campmeeting.

This meeting is now being held upon the same ground as last year, one half mile from the Tremont Depot, West Wareham, Mass., on the Old Colony and Cape Cod R. R., thirty-five miles from Boston, and eighteen from New Bedford. It commenced with preaching in the grove Sunday, June 26th, and will continue till July 5th. Fare from Boston and New Bedford reduced at half price.

Conference.

The Lord willing, there will be a conference in the Town Hall, Holliston, Mass., commencing Saturday morning, July 9th, and continuing over the Sabbath, July 10th. Bro. H. L. Hastings has engaged to come, and we hope it will be so that Bro. H. F. Carpenter, or Bro. Grant, and other good ministering brethren will be present. It is expected that during the services of Sunday there will be an ordination. This is a new field, and a new church of between forty and fifty members, and they most cheerfully invite the brethren and sisters in this section who would like to share in their hospitalities, and be satisfied with plain, wholesome food, and such accommodations as we can provide for them, together with the plain Bible truths which they may hear, to come. Preachers, and others who love hobbies, fables, and strife about words to no profit, more than they love the near coming and kingdom of Jesus Christ and the salvation of sinners, we shall find no fault if they stay away.

The object of this meeting is to honor and glorify God, instead of ourselves; to comfort, exhort, and encourage one another in well doing. Those coming Saturday on the cars will come to Framingham, where they will take the Milford Branch R. R. for this place, stopping at Holliston, instead of East Holliston, five miles south of Framingham.

In behalf of the church, H. K. FLAGG.

Two Days' Meeting.

A two days' meeting will be held in South Livermore, Me., in Silas Timberlake's orchard, commencing Sunday, July 3d, and hold over the 4th. Brn. Libby, Jordan and Stratton are expected to speak to the people. We hope to meet in the name of the Lord, that good may be done. Come, brethren and sisters, let us speak for God.

CHAS. STRATTON.

Notice.

Basket meetings will be held at the following places:—

Earlville............Sunday, July 3d
Hedge Grove............Sunday, July 10th
Coffin's Grove............Sunday, July 17th
Burr Oak Grove, two miles north of Cascade, Sunday, July 24th.

These meetings are designed for two sermons in the grove, to commence at 10 1-2 o'clock, A. M. Each person is requested to bring a basket of provision, and provide himself with a seat. Let the rich dress in plain garments, so the poor will come and hear the gospel preached. Will the friends at the above places designate the spot, post up notices, and circulate the word all around? A collection will be taken up for home mission purposes, that the gospel may be preached in the highways and hedges. PETER S. W. DEYO.

Notice.

I intend, as the Lord may direct, to visit the scattered ones in the Canadian Provinces, and proclaim as best I can the truths of the coming kingdom. I am willing to go anywhere where good can be done, into back settlements, large places, or small, wherever there are a few, or none, who are waiting for the coming King. I shall travel as I can, on foot, when I can go no other way, and preach where there is an open door, or one to be opened. I am almost without means to do so, but I shall trust in the Lord; and if there are any waiting ones who wish to hear the message, the hour of his judgment is come," and will write to me, directing latters to BOX 231, MONTREAL, C. E. I will try to visit them in the name of the Lord.

L. C. MCKINSTRY.

Notice.

We are about to take a trip east as far as the State of Maine, to visit our own kindred after the flesh, and see as many of our old friends and brethren as possible. We will attend camp and general meetings if we know of them in time to make arrangements.

Will meet with the church in Jonesville, Michigan, on the evening of the 9th of July, and over the following Sabbath. Also at Norwalk, Ohio, July 15th and 16th, evenings, and over the following Sabbath. Any wishing to write to us may direct to Jonesville, Mich., up to July 11th.

D. R. & M. S. MANSFIELD.

Campmeeting.

A campmeeting will be held in Etna, Me., on the same ground where it was in 1863, to commence the first week in September. Arrangements will be made accordingly. More hereafter.

ISRAEL DAMMAN.

Notice.

There will be a meeting (D. V.) in the barn of Bro. Lauren Grinnell, in West Barre, Orleans Co., N. Y., about three-fourths of a mile east of the West Barre post-office, commencing Friday, July 1st, 1864, and continuing over the following Lord's day. Brethren waiting for the coming of Jesus, and all christians, are cordially invited to come and work for the salvation of men, and so be built up themselves. The Lord cometh.

Those coming by railroad will stop at Albion, on the Rochester and Niagara Falls Road, and provision will be made to convey them to the meeting, which is about eight miles from that place. Brethren who intend to come will do well to drop a line, stating how many will be with them, and what day they will come, directed to me at Brockport.

Teams will meet the cars at noon, at Albion, on Friday and Saturday, the 1st and 2nd inst., and the morning train from the east, Sunday. So any persons coming from the west will come on an early train, and wait in Albion about two hours. If brethren will write me as above, it will cost them only three or four cents, and may save some expense to the brethren who furnish teams. Come praying and expecting a blessing.

JOS. D. BROWN.

Tent Meeting.

A tent meeting will be held in North Adams, Mass., commencing June 30th, and holding over the 4th of July, on land owned by Bro. Morton, at the head of Eagle street, on the north side of the village. A general attendance is desired from the surrounding towns. Come, brethren, and work together for the salvation of our fellow men. A general invitation is extended to the preaching brethren. Board and horse keeping furnished on reasonable terms.

A. J. MCCULLOCK,
ISAAC BLANCHARD, } Committee.
EMERSON BLANCHARD,

Notice.

The R. I. and East Conn. Conference will hold its next session at River Point, commencing the first Wednesday in July, at 2 o'clock P. M., and hold over Lord's day.

A sermon may be expected for criticism from Eld. A. Durfee. Subject,—Did Christ exist previous to his birth of the Virgin Mary?

Essay by Bro. Alva Bellows:—Is there a personal devil?

Brethren and sisters are invited to attend. Come praying that God will bless our labors.

A. C. GREENE, Secretary.

Fourth of July Meeting.

A meeting will be held in Kingston, N. H., on the 3d and 4th of July, (in a grove, if pleasant, if not, in the chapel), commencing Sunday, July 3d, at 10 1-2 o'clock, A. M. Elds. Litch and Osler will be with us. We hope the little church in Kingston will be cheered by the presence of brethren from abroad who are looking for the blessed hope. F. GALE.

Meetings in East Newport.

Brethren at East Newport will hold a conference every four weeks, at the White school-house, to commence the first Saturday in July.

In behalf of the Brn., JEREMIAH CARR.

Notice.

The Lord willing, I shall commence a series of meetings in Centreville school-house, Brattleboro, Vt., on Sunday, July 10th, and hold over the 17th. Let there be a general rally in the name of the Great King. S. S. BREWER.

A Liberal Offer.

Being satisfied that time is short, and that what is done must be done quickly; and feeling anxious to do what we can to arouse a sleeping world and church, we make the following liberal offer:—

Any one who will send three or more new subscribers to the Crisis for six months or one year, with advance pay for the same, shall receive one third the value of the money sent, in any of our books and tracts they may select. For instance, if they send three dollars, they receive one dollar's worth of books or tracts; for six dollars, we send them two dollars' worth; for twelve dollars, four dollars' worth, etc.

Let every reader take hold of the work in earnest, and help scatter tracts, books and papers like autumnal leaves.

WAITING FOR JESUS.

"Even the youths shall faint and be weary, and the young men shall utterly fall: but they that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength; they shall mount up with wings as eagles; they shall run and not be weary; they shall walk and not faint."—Isa. 40: 30, 31.

With desire I still wait for the coming of Jesus,
For I know that he loves me and soon will appear;
For long have I waited and borne the reproaches
Of those who deny that his coming is near.

The signs are increasing that token his advent,
The fig-tree has budded and summer is near;
We will wait then with patience till we mount up as eagles,
Renewed in strength when the Lord shall appear.

Must utterly fail the proud flag to sustain,
And the cup of God's fury in war's desolation
Must humble all kingdoms ere Jesus can reign.

When young men have fallen, with patriot's devotion,
To the shrine of a bubble on time's ending shore,
Then renewed with strength in earth's dying commotion,
We will rise and meet Jesus, to part nevermore.

Celesta, Pa. P. E. Armstrong.

NON-ESSENTIALS.

During the past twenty-five years of my life, I was taught to believe that a great many doctrines of the Bible were non-essential, especially many taught by other sects not peculiar to my own, and that many doctrines of the Bible might be believed or disbelieved, obeyed or disobeyed, without affecting my salvation. But my views on this subject have been changed by studying the Scriptures, which I commencad about two years ago. I threw off the specs worn upon my father's nose, that made me think it read just as my father goes. Nor would I use the specs of Calvin, Campbell, Coke or Scott, that made me think the Bible means exactly what they thought. I have put on a common sense pair of specs to read what I conceive to be a common sense book, and after carefully studying for two years, I have not yet found any doctrine that I would be willing to bear the responsibility of placing on the catalogue of non-essentials.

It is possible there are many doctrines upon which good men may differ, but that is no proof to my mind that the doctrine about which they are so zealously contending is a non-essential. It might be quite otherwise, and those very good men from the force of different education may stand firmly to their opposing views and, like Paul at one time, think they are doing God's service.

I have been grieved times not a few at the manner in which this term is so frequently used by many christian professors. They have run it into a kind of granite fort, into which they haste to defend themselves against the force of truth. Bring before them the most stirring truths of the Bible,—if they do not harmonize with their creed, they will deliberately tell you that these truths are non-essentials. No matter what amount of evidence you may bring from the Scriptures, or with what eloquence you may bring the subject before them, or what may be the fearful consequences of not receiving those truths; if they are not in keeping with their preconceived notions, they will open upon you the same battery,—they are non-essentials, and there they are encircled by their sectarian walls, closing up every bar against the stirring truths of Christ's speedy coming and of the judgment, feasting on their high notions of the world's conversion, and a good time coming, and the best generalship in the world cannot draw them out of their entrenchments. They know too well the weakness of their creed to stand an open field, against the batteries of divine truth. They dare not risk such a battle; and you cannot besiege them, for their name is "legion," nor can you cut off their supplies, for their resources of the whole world and the glory of them are laid at their feet. Well may Paul say, "For the time will come when they will not endure sound doctrine; but after their own lusts shall they heap to themselves teachers having itching ears. They shall turn away their ears from the truth, and shall be turned unto fables."

But allow me to ask the non-essentialists what doctrine of the Bible is essential? Is it essential to believe that the dead know more than all the living, when the Bible positively declares that the "dead know not any thing"? Eccl. 9: 5. "In that very day his thoughts perish." Ps. 146: 14. "His sons come to honor and he knoweth it not, and they are brought low and he perceiveth it not of them." Job 14: 21. Or is it essential to believe that the dead are not dead, when this very doctrine is contrary to all reason and Scripture, and becomes the corner-stone for some of the most damnable heresies that ever found their way into this sin-cursed earth,—such as modern Spiritualism, Sweedenborgianism, with all their fearful consequences, which are becoming so popular in the world?

Again, is it essential to believe in the resurrection of the dead? Paul thought it was, for he says, If there be no resurrection, "them also which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished." But you may think Paul not quite orthodox enough for your standard. But is the resurrection doctrine according to your belief essential, if the righteous get their reward at death? What advantage can they derive from the resurrection? If the christians of these last days of new inventions and new discoveries have found a shorter cut to the kingdom of glory than Paul ever knew, I cannot see why the doctrine of the resurrection cannot be placed in the catalogue of non-essentials.

Is it essential to believe in the eternal torments of the wicked, when the Bible declares positively in more than two hundred places that they shall die, perish, be cut off, be burned up root and branch; consume away, come to nought, and be as though they had not been? Or is it essential to believe that the wicked are immortal, and with all their countless millions from Adam's time until time is ended to be in one place to form an everlasting kingdom with Satan at their head, when the Bible plainly teaches that Christ shall reign without a rival? "Then cometh the end when he shall have delivered up the kingdom to God, even the Father, when he shall have put down all rule, and all authority and power; for he must reign till he hath put all enemies under his feet; for the last enemy that shall be destroyed is death." 1 Cor. 14: 24-26.

Again, is it essential to believe in the world's conversion and a good time coming, when the Bible declares that "Evil men and seducers shall wax worse and worse, deceiving, and being deceived?" 2 Tim. 2: 63. "Now the Spirit speaketh expressly, that in the latter times some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits and doctrines of devils, speaking lies in hypocrisy, having their conscience seared with a hot iron." "This know also, that in the last days perilous times shall come; for men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, without natural affection, truce-breakers, false-accusers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of those that are good, traitors, heady, high-minded, lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God, having the form of godliness, but denying the power thereof; from such turn away."

Is it really essential to believe that the world is in its infancy, and that Christ will never come personally or at least for a thousand years yet, in order to make men good citizens, to live holy and useful? or will the belief that Christ is soon coming to judge the world and to reward his saints, unfit men for christian duty, a long life and a happy death, supposing Christ does not come before his death? If not, why be so opposed to the doctrine of Christ's speedy coming, especially when the whole Bible is against you? In short, how can any doctrine that leads men to watch and pray, study the Scriptures, and to be looking forward to their final reward, become a doctrine of ridicule and derision on the part of a large majority of christian professors? Does not the secret of all this opposition to Christ's speedy coming to judgment rest on the fact that they do not want Christ to come, and in too many instances are not prepared to hear Gabriel's trumpet sound? They are not quite ready to close up their money-making business. They would a thousand times rather be let alone for a long time yet, so that they can pursue their lawful or unlawful avocations to buy, sell and get gain.

They cannot bear the thought of stopping now and losing all their hard earned dollars, farms and fine houses in the burning of the world and all the works therein. They would a thousand times rather enjoy their property, dressing in fine clothes and fare sumptuously every day for a long life, even amid dangers and trials, and then leave it for their children to quarrel over and squander among lawyers after they are gone home to glory.

O! poor backslidden professor, remember from whence thou art fallen, and do thy first works. Ye did run well, who did hinder you? O stop! poor sinner,

"Stop and think, before you farther go!"

Remember the fearful threatenings of the gospel. "Go to now, ye rich men, weep and howl for your miseries that shall come upon you. Your riches are corrupted, and your garments moth-eaten. Your gold and silver is cankered, and the rust of them shall be a witness against you and shall eat your flesh as with fire. Ye have heaped up treasures together for the last days."

Wayne, Mich. Allen M. Smith.

FANATICISM.

The above word is often used as a term of reproach of men and parties, by those who oppose their ideas, principles and action, yet lack the arguments requisite to show that their opposition is well founded. For ourself, sundry ideas have taken lodgment in our mind, essentially differing from the general sentiments of mankind. In viewing the past, I am under the necessity of viewing fanaticism with more leniency than many do. I think mankind have received too many favors from fanatics and fanaticism to allow of a wholesale condemnation of them and it. They say one may be right, we may be wrong; but still we think so, and so think until it is proved to be wrong thinking; then, and not till then, shall we own our error as freely as we now state what we believe to be truth.

What I mean to say is this, in the history of the past, men have arisen, called fanatics, who were subsequently found to be advocators of truth, and the fanaticism of one year would become the conservatism of future years. Wild dreamers who annoyed their friends and the community with their visionary notions, have subsequently been proved to be only discovererers of truths, moral or physical, in advance of the age in which they lived. For these reasons we respect what some ridicule.

About eighteen hundred years ago there arose a class of men who believed in a strange doctrine and disturbed the whole world by the determined advocacy of their principles. They claimed that a certain Jew who had been slain had arisen from the dead and revealed certain doctrines of the utmost consequence to mankind in this world, and by believing in which alone could happiness be secured in the world to come, all which seemed to the Greeks foolishness, and of course appeared to most men as the mere absurdity of insanity. By judging of the manner in which new doctrines are received now, we can imagine with what scorn the wise men of those days must have looked upon the new faith then. Yet the believers therein were so controled by their fanaticism that they counted their lives even as nothing, and cheerfully submitted to torture and death as a testimonial of their sincerity.

A few years ago a sailor conceived the idea that the world was round, and spent many years in pestering his friends and different European courts, with his crack-brained notion, trying to induce them to risk their reputations by giving him ships with which he could discover an unknown land on the other side of the earth. The wise were consulted, the most learned of the times—to them the idea was new. It was true that Seneca had written four lines indistinctly, foretelling the discovery of a new world, this was all they had to guide them, and so they reported that the scheme was absurd, that if a ship should happen to sail down the other side of the world, not all the winds of heaven would be able to blow it back again; yet this fanatic finally succeeded in convincing one woman of the reality of his dream, and the wise conservatives were confounded by the discovery of America. Had newspapers been printed in Europe then, as they are here now, what a glorious butt of ridicule would poor Columbus have been for them.

Still notwithstanding all these examples of the past, we hear the same expressions against fanatics who believe different from them. At present the charge is against those who believe in the sleep of the departed, the non-immortality of the soul, and the destruction of all the finally impenitent, also the speedy coming of the Lord from heaven, etc., etc. These ideas are outside of the catechism, and to most of this generation something new. Most all the nominal churches of the present day advocate that when a person dies he goes directly to either heaven or hell, that we all possess an immortal soul, and that to believe in or, even to dare mention the end of the world would be blasphemy, for all these things are mysteries and belong unto God. Even the minister cannot comprehend them, and why should we think of the thing? Therefore they settle down and conclude they will not trouble their heads about every such new-fangled notion; as for these fanatics they are mistaken and will come round right when they come to their senses. As for us we will be obedient and do as our minister tells us, let these foolish notions go, and mind our own business by loving the world, and keep up the fashions, and make money.

But, dear friends, there is something more to be done between this and the judgment day, besides loving the world, keeping up with the fashions, and making money. The great message of the midnight cry has been given, and the world have heard the proclamation through the length and breadth of the land,—Behold the Bridegroom cometh, go ye out to meet him! And the solemn appeal to all nations—Fear God, and give glory to him; for the hour of his judgment has come!

The signs have been given spoken of in Matt. 24th, Luke 21st, and the next in order will be the sign of the Son of man in heaven, and all the tribes of the earth shall mourn and they shall see the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory. We are told by our Savior when we see the signs fulfilling to lift up our heads and rejoice, knowing the kingdom of God is nigh at hand.

We read in the Book of Revelations that there are seven periods during the gospel dispensation, marked or divided off by symbols of seven churches, seven vials, seven trumpets, seven seals, etc. Under the heads of the symbols of trumpets it is admitted six of them have been fulfilled or have sounded. The last three trumpets were to be wo trumpets. When the sixth trumpet sounded the second wo is past, and behold the third wo cometh quickly. We say it is claimed, and we believe, six of the trumpets have already sounded, and we have now only to expect the sounding of the seventh trumpet and the work accomplished under this seventh trumpet. What is it? Hear ye!

"And the seventh angel sounded, and there were great voices in heaven saying, The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ; and he shall reign forever and ever. Amen." The four-and-twenty elders worship God by falling upon their faces, saying, "We give thee thanks, O Lord God Almighty, which art, and wast, and art to come, because thou hast taken to thee thy great power and hast reigned. And the nations were angry and thy wrath is come, and the time of the dead that they should be judged, and that thou shouldst give reward unto thy servants the prophets, and to the saints, and them that fear thy name, small and great, and shouldst destroy them which destroy the earth." Then follow his judgments.

There is, therefore, no time for slumbering, no time for delay, no time to mock at these solemn and eternal truths. The last time has come. The Judge standeth at the door. The last judgments of God are about to be poured out. Blessed are they who are watching for the Lord. Although our name may be cast out as evil, we may be called fanatical in our views, the Lord knoweth our cause, as well as the heart and the motive.

EARLY RISING; OR, MARY AT THE SAVIOR'S TOMB.

"Wake while yet the sparkling dew-drops
Gem each floweret's tiny bell—
While the joyous woodland warblers
Loud their grateful chorus swell—
Kneel with calm and thankful spirit,
Kneel and breathe thy morning prayer."

The morning air, how sweet, delicious, charming! No season is so precious, so sacred, so well calculated for reading, composing, meditating, prayer, and praise. Hail, lovely morning, precursor of a brighter day.

"Sweet is the breath of morn, her rising sweet,
With charm of earliest birds; pleasant the sun
When first on this delightful land he spreads
His orient beams on herb, tree, fruit, and flower,
Glistening with dew."

Friends, are you aware how much you lose by dozing away the precious season of early dawn? The morning air adds brightness to the blood, freshness to life, and vigor to the whole frame. "The freshness of the lip is one of the surest signs of health." Would you be well, enjoy health, life, vigor of soul and body? have your heart dance joyfully like the April breeze, and your blood flowing like an April brook? Up with the lark! inhale the pure sweets of early dawn. Breakfast on the morning air fresh with the odor of budding flowers, and all the fragrance of the maiden spring. Up! wake up ere the glorious king of day streak the east.

"Up! rise up and see
The dew-spangled herb and tree.
Ye who would couple labor and health,
Must begin at an early hour."

It is remarkable what numerous examples we have of early rising in the Scriptures. Let any one take a Concordance and look out the passages where it is mentioned, and he will be surprised at their number. Are not such examples binding on christians? on all? Abraham arose up early in the morning to offer sacrifice; "early will I seek Thee," said the Psalmist. "Shall not christians early rise to pay their vows unto God?" "Very early in the morning" the holy women came to the sepulchre to embalm the Savior; and shall not his disciples seek their risen Lord early in the day? Christian! when are you most apt to neglect prayer, or perform it hastily or unprofitably? Is it not when you omit early rising? When are you most prone to neglect reading the Bible, or peruse its sacred pages negligently? Is it not when you act the sluggard, and waste precious hours in repose? At what season do you peruse God's word with delight, and call upon his name with fervor? Is it not when you early rise to pay your sacrifice? Nature, then, as well as Scripture indicates the value of the morning for religious meditation, reading, and prayer.

"Nature herself ever shows her best
Of gems to the gaze of the lark,
When the spangles of light on earth's green breast
Put out the stars of the dark.
If we love the purest pearl of the dew,
And the rich breath of the flower,
If our spirits would greet the fresh and the sweet,
Go forth in the early hour."

To rise early we must retire early, lie down with a pure conscience.

"The angel of the Lord encampeth round about them that fear him, and delivereth them."—Psa. 34: 7.

Finally, retire in faith, sleep on faith, rise up on faith, go about doing good all the time on faith.

It is said of John Wesley, the holy reformer, that he never lost a good night's rest, after consecrating himself entirely to God's service. His habits were regular. He had a stated time for retiring and rising. To these regulations he adhered with persevering, conscientious scrupulosity. He was strictly "temperate in all things." Almost as soon as his head touched the pillow, he was lost in a calm, sweet refreshing slumber, till God opened his eyes before the dawn; when he immediately arose to praise him, and fight the good fight of faith. Thus he did till God said to him, "Come up higher."

"I will both lay me down in peace, and sleep; for thou Lord, only makest me dwell in safety." Psa. 4: 8.

All the most eminently distinguished for elevated piety and usefulness have been early risers. The Lord Jesus, our great exemplar, not only spent whole nights in prayer, but, also, "in the morning rising up a great while before day, he went out, and departed into a solitary place, and there prayed." See Mark 1: 25; and no doubt this was his frequent custom. Mark, too, those who first visited the tomb of our blessed Lord. Who were they? what the hour of this visitation? before the dawn, "while it was yet dark." Their souls were kindled, lighted up in a flame most holy.

Behold the Marys at the sepulchre of Jesus as it began to dawn, towards the first day of the week." . . . "And the angel answered and said unto the women, Fear not ye; for I know that ye seek Jesus, who was crucified. He is not here: for he is risen as he said. Come see the place where the Lord lay." Matt. 28: 5, 6.

"Mary to the Savior's tomb
Hasted at the early dawn;
Spice she brought and sweet perfume,
But the Lord she loved had gone.
Trembling, while a crystal flood
Issued from her weeping eyes.
For awhile she lingering stood,
Filled with sorrow and surprise."

THE SCRIPTURES.

In the volume of divine grace Jehovah utters all the kindness of his heart. What rich cordials to the miserable soul are the invitations to participate in divine mercy! How animating are the prospects of another world presented to the desponding mind! This volume is the magazine of all spiritual blessings, a map of the good land towards which believers are traveling. It is the tree of life, on which fruits grow to nourish the soul; and its leaves are for the healing of the nations.

This is the charter of your heavenly inheritance. Here is brought before you all the fulness of God. The blessings it contains are adapted to every stage of the christian's life. Here are riches to meet his poverty; strength to bear him up in all his trials, and under all his weakness; ability to discharge every duty, and maintain the conflict with every energy; the bread and water of life are here to sustain the hungry and thirsty soul; and here are included all the hopes and joys of eternity.

Those christians who have been the most eminent for piety, and whose hopes have been fullest of immortality, have loved and valued most the word of God. And many eminent christians have, when leaving the world, lamented their folly in not having studied the Scriptures more, and human writings less.

When Salmasius, who was one of the most consummate scholars of his time, came to the close of his life, he said, "Oh, I have lost a world of time! time, the most precious thing in the world! whereof, had I but one year more, it should be spent in David's Psalms and Paul's epistles!"

When that eminent christian, James Hervey, who died in triumph, apprehended himself to be near the close of life, he wrote the following to a friend: "I have been too fond of reading every thing valuable and elegant that has been penned in our language, and been peculiarly charmed with the historians, orators, and poets of antiquity; but were I to renew my studies, I would take my leave of those accomplished trifles; I would resign the delights of modern wits, amusements, and eloquence, and devote my attention to the Scriptures of Truth."

That field of promise, how it flings abroad
Its odors o'er the christian's thorny road;
The soul, reposing on assured relief,
Feels herself happy amidst all her grief;
Forgets her labor as she toils along,
Weeps tears of joy, and bursts into a song.

"THIS GENERATION."

"This generation shall not pass away till all be fulfilled."—Luke 21: 32.

What generation is here spoken of? The generation that then was, the Jewish, the Gentile, or the generation that see all the signs? There are many opinions as to which of the above the Savior could have meant. Some claim that it was the generation that he was then addressing, and that it had its fulfillment at the destruction of Jerusalem. This is nonsense, from the fact that the signs of the sun and moon and stars were to appear immediately after the tribulation, and just before the Lord's coming. Hence he could not have come at that time; for those that claim that he came at the destruction of Jerusalem, also claim that that was the tribulation.

Suppose we call it the Jewish generation. How much will that help the matter? The Jewish generation did pass away, and I think had already passed away at that time. But turn to Mark 8: 11, 12, and we shall there see what generation he is speaking of in Luke 21st, "And the Pharisees came to him, and began to question him, seeking of him a sign from heaven, tempting him. And he saith unto them, Verily I say unto you, there shall no sign (from heaven) be given to this generation."

Now turn again to Luke 21: 25,—"And there shall be signs in the sun and in the moon, and in the stars, (all from heaven), and upon the earth distress of nations with perplexity. And he spake to them a parable: behold the fig-tree and all the trees, when they now shoot forth, ye see and know of your own selves that summer is nigh at hand, so likewise ye, when ye see these things come to pass, know ye that the kingdom of God is nigh at hand. Verily I say unto you, this generation (that can look back on all these signs from heaven,) shall not pass away till all be fulfilled."

O, church of God, lift up your head, and look up, for your redemption draweth nigh.

Yours in hope of eternal life,

TRIBULATION.

"In the world ye shall have tribulation; but be of good cheer."—Christ.

The children of God need not fear tribulation, for it is one of the things promised, and this promise is as truly dictated by love as any of the others.

Why should I complain
Of want or distress,
Temptation, or pain?
He told me no less!
The heirs of salvation,
I know from his word,
Through much tribulation
Must follow the Lord."

Some of the reasons for this divine arrangement we cannot see; but it is enough for us that He can see them all. "Even so, Father, for so it seemeth good in thy sight," is the best reason we know of. Every time we repeat the Lord's prayer we say, "Thy will be done in earth as it is in heaven." But many who join in this petition, "Thy will be done," are not able at once to rejoice when it is done, if it happens to cross their little plans, or takes from them something they had called their own; but surely such souls are not in full sympathy with God. "Rejoice evermore, in every thing give thanks," they have not yet learned to obey.

Child of God, are you passing through deep waters? Take courage. They shall not overflow thee. A strong arm is about you, that will bear you safely through. Perhaps you are suffering the manifold inconvenience and discomforts of poverty, and are compelled to lead a life of hard toil. Perhaps you have feeble health, so that every thing you do is a weariness, and the wheels of time drag heavily.

Perhaps yours is a keener sorrow. You have been called to give up a lovely child or a dear companion, or some other precious one, whose departure seems to have taken all the brightness out of this world! You are deeply afflicted. Well, if the tears will come, let them come. Friends may offer consolation, many cheering thoughts may be presented to your mind, but the apostle is the wisest counsellor; he says, "Be filled with the Spirit." "Now the fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance." What a string of remedies we have here! In the world we have tribulation, but be of good cheer.—Selected by Hannah G. Whitman.

MY EXPERIENCE.

"Not as I will, but as thou wilt."—Jesus.

My heart cries, Father! spare me this; nevertheless, not as I will, but as thou wilt. Amen.

"He comes and lays my heart, all heated,
On the hard anvil, minded so
Into his own fair shape to beat it
With his great hammer, blow on blow;
And yet I whisper, As God will;
And at his hardest blows hold still.

He takes my softened heart and beats it,
The sparks fly off at every blow;
He turns it o'er and o'er, and heats it,
And lets it cool, and makes it glow;
And yet I whisper, As God will;
And in his mighty hand, hold still."

"The fining pot is for silver, and the furnace for gold, but the Lord trieth the hearts."

"My flesh and my heart faileth: but God is the strength of my heart, and my portion forever."

"I have put my trust in the Lord God, that I may declare all thy works."

"But God forbid that I should glory, save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ, by whom the world is crucified unto me, and I unto the world."

If this be the needful cross to carry on this work of crucifixion, by the grace of God I will glory in it. All I seek is meetness for the kingdom. Amen.

"If they hear not Moses and the prophets, neither will they be persuaded though one rose from the dead."—Jesus.

These words came to me with power, solving painful mysteries in my past experience. They lifted the vail which had held my eyes and caused me many anxieties. They showed me the "needs be" for these experiences; and made the past as clear, in every point, as I could desire.

"Glory be to God in the highest; and on earth peace, good will toward men." This solves the mystery why I was led of the Lord, as I solemnly believe, to rise from my bed, and after much prayer and reading of the Scriptures, to call my second son in the dead hour of the night, ask him to harness me the horse, and drive me several miles to a strange house where my husband had been during the night thus far with a very sick patient, and beg the privilege to pray with him, laying my hands on him in the name of the Lord, believing in my heart, if he would believe, he would be raised up. This solves the mystery why I was led after entire consecration to God in soul, body, and spirit, with fastings and prayers night and day, to go to the dying bed of a strange friend, with others, and ask the privilege to lay hands upon her in the name of the Lord, feeling in my heart if we could only believe she would be made whole.

These words solved the mystery to me why I bowed beside the lovely infant—lovely in death, and was made to feel that Jesus was just as able to raise it from the dead now, as he was to raise Lazarus; and why I was made to go out from it with this burden upon me to confess this my faith to each member of my family, as I met them in the morning, knowing, as I did, their entire want of sympathy with me on this point; and why I was made to make the same confession to every one who came to the house that day; and as flesh and heart failed me in one instance, why I had to attire myself and walk a mile to see this friend and make this confession to her—and why I was given to believe without a doubt that a friend's ears had been opened at a particular time, with whom we had prayed and laid on hands, insomuch that I wrote to him confessing this my faith that he then could hear.

Why all this? What the mystery? It is this. "If any man be a doer of his will he shall know of the doctrine." There is a doctrine among God's faithful children that the power to do miracles never was taken from the church, but faith only is lacking. This was my view. But God has made me to know of this doctrine by giving me the faith, yet withholding the things believed for, and yet sustaining me by his mighty power through it all, until years and months of patient waiting had passed; then, at the right moment, when patience had had its perfect work, he was pleased to solve the whole mystery to me, in these words, "If they hear not Moses and the prophets, neither will they be persuaded though one rose from the dead."

What if the sick had been raised up? What if the dead had been brought to life? What if the lame man had walked? (another instance) and the deaf had heard? Who would have believed it from God? Who would have been persuaded? Not one. They would have attributed it to any other source than to God. If men have no confidence in the word of a fellow man, neither will they have confidence in any thing that he does; so, if men treat God's word, which he has magnified above all his name, with contempt, they will treat with equal contempt every other manifestation of his power and love.

Lest some misapprehend me here and be discouraged in the offer of "the prayer of faith," I will make a distinction. Miracles I look upon as the direct work of the Holy Ghost, as the Acts of the Apostles abundantly testify. But the effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man that avails much is a very different thing, and is encouraged by precept and example throughout the whole Bible. I cannot sufficiently encourage this prayer. Nor do I limit the Almighty. The deaf may hear, the blind see, the lame walk, and the sick be raised up in answer to this prayer. According to thy faith be it unto thee, are the gracious words now, as then.

When this matter was made plain to me I was deeply impressed to write it out that, peradventure, it might help some other poor suffering child like myself. If I have in any wise made it plain, I give glory to God, and pray that he may bless it to whomsoever may need it, and forgive all that may be wrong. I wrote it to please him alone, and may he accept the feeble effort in Jesus' name. Amen. Pray for me. Your unworthy sister.

IN THE MIND.

An old man was shaving himself one day before the fire, but suddenly exclaimed in a great rage to the maid servant: "I can't shave without a glass! why is it not here?" "Oh!" said the girl, "I have not placed it there for many weeks, as you seemed to get along quite as well without it." The crusty old bachelor (of course he was an old bachelor, or he would not have been so crotchety and crusty) had, for the first time, observed that there was no glass there, and his inability to shave without one, was "in the mind" only, it was imaginary.

A Dutch farmer, who measured a yard through, was one day working in the harvest field with his little son, and was bitten by a snake. He was horror-struck. When he recovered himself a little, he snatched up his outer clothing, and made tracks for home, at the same time busying himself in putting on his vest; but it wouldn't go on. He looked at his arm, and it seemed to be double its natural size; but tugging at it with greater desperation, he finally got both arms in. But his blood fairly froze in his veins, when he discovered it wouldn't meet by about a foot. By this time he had reached his house, and throwing himself on the bed, exclaimed in an agony of terror; "O mine frow! I'm snake bite! I'm killed! O mine Cot!" But his little bit of a wife, standing a-kimbo in the middle of the floor, burst out into a fit of laughter so uncontrollable, that she was likely to suffocate, and thus beat her husband in dying. The poor man, in his alarm, had endeavored to put on his little boy's vest, and was not swollen at all, except "in the mind."

Many a mother feels fretted and jaded and worn out with the cares of housekeeping, and is almost sick. But at the moment a welcome visitor comes in, full of life and cordiality and cheeriness, in less than five minutes that mother is a different woman; the sky has cleared; the face is lighted up with smiles; and she feels as well as she ever did in her life. Her discouragement, her almost sickness was not "in the mind," it was a reality, but the excitement of conversation drove out the wearying blood, which was oppressing the heart, and made it fairly tingle to the finger-points. Mem. Ladies! when you go a visiting, carry smiles and gladness and a joyous nature and a kind heart with you, and you will do more good than a dozen doctors. Most persons have a variety of uncomfortable feelings at times, but they disappear on some exciting occurrence, not because they are merely "in the mind," only imaginary, but because the excited heart wakes up to a new propulsive power, and drives forward the stagnating blood from points where its sluggishness was producing oppression, or actual pain. Mem. 2d. For all, when you are grumpy, bounce up, go ahead, and do something.—Health Tract.

THE WHITE WATER-LILY.

At the bottom of a mild, dark, muddy lake, there lay a very small root. The mud covered it, the fish swam over it, the frogs hid under it, and once a great moose actually trod on it.

"Oh dear!" said the little root to itself, "how dark and lonesome it is down here! Hardly a ray of light comes to me. They tell me that it is light and beautiful up above me, and there is a lovely sky there; but the heavy waters lie on me, and press me down. Nobody ever thinks of me, or ever knows that I live. I am a poor useless thing. I can't communicate with any one—can't do good to any one! I might as well not be!"

The snow covered the earth and filled the forest, and the ice covered the lake, and there lay the little root, coiled up in its loneliness. But when the spring had returned, and the snows were gone, and the ice had melted, and the birds had come, and the forests had put on its mantle of green, the little root felt that the water was warmer, and she peeped up with one eye, and then she nestled and felt a strong desire to see the light. So she shot up a long, smooth, beautiful stem, till it reached the top of the lake. But when she attempted to draw it in again, she found it would not come. But instead of that, a little bud grew on the end of the stem. She called, but the bud gave no answer; it only swelled and grew larger and larger, and the rains fell on it, and the sun and the moon seemed to smile on it and cheer it, till at last it burst open, full of joy, and found itself the white, sweet, pure water-lily! Its leaves were of the purest white, while in its centre was a golden spot, covered with down. It lay upon the top of the water, and basked in the sun, a most beautiful object. The root fed it, and felt that it was really herself, though in a new form. The humming-bird paused over it, and thrust in its little bill to suck its sweetness. The air all around was made sweet by its fragrance. Still it felt that it was of no use in the world, and wished it could do something to make others happy.

At length the splashing of oars was heard, and the little lily turned round to see what it meant. Just then she heard the voice of a little boy in the boat, saying,

"Oh, father, what a beautiful lily! Do let me get it!"

Then the boat turned slowly towards it and the little boy put out his hand and seized it. The long stem broke off near the root, and the child held it in his hand. It seemed the fairest, sweetest thing he ever saw.

"Now what will you do with it?" asked the father.

"I'll look at it, and smell of it."

"Is there nobody else that would like to see it and smell of it?"

"I don't know, sir. Oh, yes, now I think! Would not Jane Irving love to have it?"

"I think she would."

That afternoon poor Jane Irving, who lived in the cottage just under the maple trees, lay on her sick bed alone. She was a poor, motherless child. She knew she had the consumption and must die. She was thinking about the dark, cold grave, and wondering how Christ could ever open it and make her come out! A tear stood in each eye, just as the little boy came to her bedside with the water-lily.

"See, here, Jane, I got that away out in the lake and brought it for you. I thought you would like it."

"Thank you, thank you! It is indeed very beautiful and very sweet. What a long stem! Where did it grow?"

"It grew out of the mud in the bottom of the lake, and this long stem, as long as a man, shows how far down it grew. It was all alone—not another one to be seen. I am glad you like it, but I must go," and away ran the little boy.

Jane held the pure white flower in her hand, and the good spirit seemed to whisper in her heart, "Jane, Jane, don't you see what God can do? Don't you see that out of dark foul mud, he can bring out a thing more beautiful than the garments of a queen, and as pure as an angel's wing; and can't he also from the dark grave, raise up your body pure, and beautiful and glorious? Can you doubt it?" And then a voice seemed to say, "I am the Resurrection and the Life," and the heart of the poor child was filled with faith, and the angel of Hope wiped away her tears, and the little lily preached of peace and mercy. When it withered, she thanked God that no thing need be useless.

THE WOODEN END OF THE PLANK.

BY THE REV. JOHN TODD.

One of our distinguished generals was once a poor boy, among the lofty mountains of New England. He was a common workman in a factory. He has since held some of the highest offices in the gift of the people, and has won imperishable honors in the army.

He tells us that one morning, as the factory was lighted up before light in the early dawn, and just as objects could be seen out of the door, he was looking out of the window, and saw an object moving along slowly on the ice that covered the river. While watching it, suddenly the ice broke and the dark object went down. In an instant he thought it must be a man. So calling a companion, he ran down the stairs and out toward the object.

He had the forethought to snatch up a plank, which he carried on his shoulder. When they had reached the place, they found it was a colored man, who had broken through the ice and was struggling for his life.

They thrust out the plank. The poor fellow seized it with both hands.

"Now hold on Tim, and we'll pull you out."

So they pulled and got him almost out, when off he slipped and went down again!

On his coming up they pushed the end of the plank to him again, and cried,

"Now, Tim, hold on with all your might."

"Indeed I will, sir."

Again they pulled, and up he came, almost out, when off he slipped, add down he went. They felt that the third time must be the turning point. It was now life or death. Poor-Tim looked as if he thought so too. For the third time the plank was pushed out, when the negro cried out:

"For God's sake, gentlemen, give me the wooden end of the plank!"

They saw instantly that they had been giving him the end covered all over with ice, and no wonder he could not cling to it! They now gave him what he called the "wooden end," and drew him out in safety!

When we see parents who have nothing but a hard way toward their children, who are always finding fault, but never commending them even when they do well; who never seem to see when the child tries to do well, and when he longs for words of kindness, we have great pity for such children. We wish these parents would remember that children cannot have the judgment, the forethought, and the sobriety of many years. They are children. Don't give them the icy end of the plank! They love your approbation. They rejoice to have you give them deserved commendation. O, give them the wooden end of the plank!—S. S. Times.

Politeness.—"Will you have this seat, sir? I prefer to stand," said a fine little boy, sitting in a pew, when the church was crowded, to an old gentleman standing in the aisle.

"Thank you, my little man," said the gentleman, smiling very gratefully upon the little fellow, "and you shall sit upon my knee, if you please."

When the service closed, the gentleman inquired of him his name, and asked him, "Why did you give up your good seat?"

"Mother teaches me," said he, "never to sit when an older person is standing near me."

BEYOND THE RIVER.

There's a home beyond the river,
  Where the saints with Christ will reign;
There's a shore beyond the surges,
  Which the pure in heart will gain.

There's a land beyond the river,
  Which will never know decay;
There's a calm beyond the billows,
  Where all tears are wiped away.

There's a crown beyond the river,
  Which the faithful ones will wear;
There is Christ arrayed in glory,
  Which his followers soon will share.

There we'll meet beyond the river,
  Those we loved so long ago;
There we'll join the new earth raptures,
  Which in fadeless beauty glow.

Now we look beyond the river,
  Sighing for the day to come,
When the King shall bid us enter
  That long looked for glorious home.

MAN AS HE WAS, IS, AND IS TO BE.

BY JOHN P. BELT.

NUMBER THREE.

THE ATONEMENT.

The term atonement is defined in the Scriptures, to mean reconciliation. But for whom was it a satisfaction for sin? and to whom does the word "reconcile" pertain? If it was for the actual sins of all mankind, then the universal salvation of all the race must be true. It has already been shown that there is a sense in which all are to be made alive, but that does not prove that all will live forever. To be made alive is one thing; but to live eternally is much more, and quite a different state. Lazarus was raised to life again after being in the grave four days, yet I know of no writer of any reputation who does not concede the fact that he returned to dust again. But as the apostle Paul has so fully shown to whom the term "reconcile" pertains, I will give his own words and leave the subject there. "All things are of God, who hath reconciled us to himself by Jesus Christ, and hath given to us the ministry of reconciliation; to wit, that God was in Christ reconciling the world unto himself, not imputing their trespasses unto them." 2 Cor. 5: 18, 19. Because the human race had received the "justification of life," that free gift did not make them righteous. It only put them in position whereby they might attain to the righteousness that is in Christ, which is only obtained by faith; for faith and the imputed righteousness of Christ are one and inseparable. Justification by faith is God's free grace, wherein he forgives our sins and accepts us freely for the righteousnes of Christ which is imputed to us. It is wholly for what he has done, and not for any merit in us that our sins are forgiven. "We are justified freely by his grace through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus." Rom. 3: 24.

We are very much surprised that any person in the face of what the Scriptures teach, should assume, as some modern writers have done, that the term justify is only used in the sense of pardon; and that pardon and remission are used convertibly with justification. If that position is correct, when a man commits the crime of murder, and he is sentenced to State Prison for life; but after having served a portion of the term, he is pardoned by executive clemency and released from durance, he is justified for his crime. That is, the pardon justifies the offence. But is it true that these terms are used interchangeably? Or do they convey the same idea? To prove that each term equally expresses the action of the deity, and that only with reference to repenting sinners, they appeal to the Lexicons, and give us the opinions and reasoning of men who are learned in the meaning of original words. But are these satisfactory and conclusive authorities? We all know how common it is for lexicographers to expound one word, by rehearsing several similar words; and when we look for the meaning of these similar words, we find the same words again repeated, with the addition, it may be, of the one first explained. So that all similar words appear to be synonymous, when in fact, we have no synonyms. Now I suppose that the men who translated King James' Bible were as learned as men are in the present day, and were fully competent for that work. At least their translation is, to my mind, much better authority, and more reliable, than any of the modern renderings that I have seen; inasmuch as there is a harmonious connection which pervades the various subjects throughout the Bible. Certainly they were more competent than many are who now-a-days are prolific in quoting from various Lexicons; and when a book, written in the original language, is put into their hand, they are unable to tell one character or word from another. And yet some of these very persons presume to sit in judgment upon the writings of men who were inspired, and try to wrest the plainest and most positive words from their obvious meaning. If God has taken care of his word in all past time, he has also had a care to its translation. Hence it is that almost every attempt at tampering with God's own written word has fallen into insignificance, and proved abortive.

But the sacred writers have not used these terms interchangably; but the meaning of each word is limited to the sense which is required by the connection in which they stand. Therefore the term justification of life, should never be substituted for nor confounded with justification by faith. For to do so is an entire perversion of the Scripture sense, and is in conflict with the general tenor of what the apostle so earnestly sets forth in his Epistles to the Romans and Galatians. It was from confounding these terms, and defining both to mean pardon and remission of sins, and then proceeding on the assumed theory that the human race were under condemnation of eternal death for the sins of Adam, which gave rise to the repulsive idea of "infant damnation" about the year A. D. 200. But such writers as contend for that abominable doctrine lose sight of the fact that "where no law is, there is no transgression." Rom. 4: 15. They are also heedless of the fact that the sentence of death threatened was a return to the dust from which Adam had been taken, which condemnation is still in force on both innocent and guilty persons, and will cleave to them so long as the race are in this state of mortality.

The human race having all descended from the parent stock by the ordinary laws of generation, their first condition in this life is that of helpless and unoffending infancy. Then on what principle of justice can an innocent child be made liable to the penalty of eternal death before it knows good and evil? for "sin is not imputed where there is no law." Rom. 5: 13. The doctrine of infant damnation, when presented in its true character, is but to represent that God deals with mankind with less justice than is exercised in human affairs by earthly tribunals. The argument they use is based on this text, "He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life, and he that believeth not the Son shall not see life; but the wrath of God abideth on him." John 3: 36. Hence their theory is, infants are incapable of believing on him, therefore they are under condemnation, and if they have not been baptized they will be eternally lost if they die in their infancy.

Now if such writers had only consulted the connection in which the above text is found, they would have seen that it has no reference whatever to a state of infancy, nor of condemnation consequent upon Adam's sin; but had reference to all who resist the offers of mercy, and thereby reject the Son, who gives eternal life to all that believe in him, and he will raise them up at the last day. Consequently that text can have no reference to children in a state of innocence and are unconscious of good or evil.

Previous to the reformation, infant sprinkling was almost universal. And all who contended for infant baptism, also maintained baptismal regeneration. From this theory, the doctrine that unbaptized children could not be saved had its origin. This doctrine is still maintained by the Roman Catholic church, the High Church Episcopalians; and is still retained in the "Doctrinal Tracts" of the Methodist Episcopal church, which were published by order of the general conference A. D. 1850. It is, however, proper to state that they all believe in a resurrection both of the just and the unjust.

The doctrine that the children of unbelievers that die in infancy, together with all the wicked dead, are not to be made alive again, is peculiar to the nineteenth century. But that theory is but the logical termination of the idea entertained by the other class of religionists. And here I will say, that in the texts, "The wicked shall not see life; He that believeth not the Son shall not see life," and the stereotyped text, "No life out of Christ," when compared with the connection in which such expressions are found, invariably show that they refer to eternal life. Therefore one has no authority to infer from those texts, that there will not be a resurrection of the wicked dead. If any doctrine is unequivocally stated in the Bible, it is that all will be made alive. Hence Christ has said, "All that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth; they that have done good unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil, to the resurrection of damnation." So far as infants are concerned, I will interpose the argument that all whom Christ blesses are exempted from the curse of the second death. Then as Christ has said, "Suffer little children and forbid them not to come unto me, for of such is the kingdom of heaven, and he laid his hands on them;" it follows that they are exempted from the second death. And in my view they are the class that were not defiled, "being the first fruits unto God and to the Lamb. And in their mouth was found no guile; for they are without fault before the throne of God." Rev. 14: 4, 5. That it is those who have died in infancy that compose the guileless retinue, is clearly shown by what follows when the servants of God have been sealed. "After this I beheld, and lo, a great multitude, which no man could number, of all nations and kindreds and people and tongues, stood before the Lamb, clothed with white;" of whom it was said, "These are they which came out of great tribulation, and have washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb." Rev. 7: 9, 14. The first class were not defiled, and their robes were not washed, for they were without fault, and had not seen tribulation, which characteristics cannot be applied to any of the human race, excepting it be to infants. But the great multitude had not been faultless, for they had seen tribulation, and were defiled before their robes had been washed and made white in the blood of the Lamb. If it was not so, there would not have been any necessity for being washed and cleansed. If any thing is already white and clean, why should it be washed? Therefore the innumerable company are those who had been "justified by faith," to whom the righteousness of Christ was imputed. And the faultless number were infants, being the first fruits, or "the church of the first-born."

It was shown to Daniel in vision that Christ would "Make reconciliation for iniquity and bring in everlasting righteousnes." Dan. 9: 24. Then as that righteousness is obtained by faith, and not by any merit of our own, it follows that eternal life is also a "free gift," and "not of debt." Hence Paul declares "Now to him that worketh is the reward not reckoned of grace but of debt. But to him that worketh not, but believeth on him that justifieth the ungodly, his faith is counted for righteousness." Rom. 4: 4, 5. Hence good works are the fruits which follow justifying faith, and righteousness is implanted by the Spirit of God, in the hearts of all to whom it is imputed. It is all of grace from the beginning to the end; for "where sin abounded grace did much more abound." All persons who trust in their own righteousness are deluded and deceive themselves. Each of the chosen and forgiven ones, can at best but say with him who thought himself chief of sinners, "The grace of our Lord was exceeding abundant with faith and love which was in Christ Jesus." 1 Tim. 1: 14. This has been the experience of the people of God since the days of Enos, when men "began to call on the name of the Lord." They foresaw that men could only be justified through the atoning blood of Christ. Hence it was said of Abel, "he also brought of the firstlings of his flock, and the fat thereof, and the Lord had respect unto Abel and to his offering." Gen. 4: 4.

After the destruction by the flood, Noah's action indicates the same faith. "And Noah builded an altar unto the Lord . . . . and offered burnt offerings on the altar." Gen. 8: 20. Then in the case of Abraham, when he offered his only son Isaac, which was a true type of the offering of the Son of God, it was said to him, "Because thou hast done this thing, and hast not withheld thy son, thine only son . . . in thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed." Gen. 22: 16, 18. In this act was foreshadowed "The Lamb of God, who taketh away the sins of the world." The promised seed of Abraham "is Christ." And from that point of time the direct line is to be traced, from which he would descend. So it was in the case of Isaac and Jacob, to whom the promise was renewed; they also offered sacrifices for sins. But these offerings, together with the whole Mosaic economy of sacrificial oblations, were only indicative of and preparatory to the coming of Christ, and the dispensation of the gospel.

Therefore, the old covenant which was made on the Mount in the wilderness, and which was confirmed by the offerings under the Mosaic economy, may be considered to present three distinctive views. The first relates to external ceremonies; and they are, by the apostle, called "carnal things." The intention by these ceremonies was to separate the whole body of that people from all the other nations, in order to make them the depository of God's word and promises; and to keep the twelve tribes with their families distinct the one from the other, in all their generations, that the prophecies relating to the Messiah might be distinctly fulfilled.

The promise was that Messiah should be of Abraham's seed; therefore his line of descent according to the flesh would be more definitely marked; and the prophecies relating to him be distinctly fulfilled, which foretold that he was to be of the seed of Abraham, and of the tribe of Judah, and of the family of David. But these ceremonies and laws required only an external obedience, the reward of which was the land of Canaan, with protection, prosperity, and a long life in the enjoyment of the blessings of that land. According to the words of Joshua they did receive all these; for he said, "Not one thing hath failed of all the good things which the Lord your God spoke concerning you; all are come to pass unto you, and not one thing hath failed thereof."—Josh. 23: 14.

The second view is typical. They gave a new modification of a Redeemer; the object of faith in true believers. And the laws and ceremonies were so instituted and ordered as to become typical of Christ and the benefits and blessings of the gospel of his kingdom. All these institutions and ceremonious were peculiar to Moses, purely temporary and external; being only designed as preparatory to the coming of the Messiah, when they were to be abolished. "The law was given by Moses, but grace and truth came by Jesus Christ."—John 1: 17.

The third view regards the moral precepts introduced in that economy. These were intended to raise the minds of the people to something higher than the external economy of Moses, to show them the spiritual nature of sin, its power, dominion and guilt, that they might not only desire their great Deliverer, but be the better prepared to receive him. These precepts were not to be done away with the old economy. For as circumcision was not of Moses, but of the fathers, so the promise of eternal life by Jesus Christ was not given by Moses, but it was found by him already existing. It is not said that the promises were added to the law; but that "the law was added because of transgression, till the seed should come to whom the promise was made."—Gal. 3: 19. The law could not give life; nor did it annul the promise of eternal life. And though the promise still existed under that economy, the law "was our schoolmaster to bring us unto Christ." Yet the Mosaic economy exhibited the Messiah, and the nature and blessings of his kingdom, through a vail, which, though obscure and distant, it nevertheless presented the future design of God.

THE ATHEIST SILENCED.

Being in Manchester some time since, when a certain infidel lecturer was announced to lecture on atheism, we went, out of our curiosity, to hear him. After indulging in a large amount of scurrility and blasphemy for about an hour and a half, he concluded by saying that the safe rule of faith was to believe nothing that was not capable of mathematical demonstration; and that as the existence of God could not be demonstrated, it ought not to be believed.

When he had sat down, a gentleman whom we instantly recognized as Burlington B. Wales, Esq., whose essays and lectures on language (recently delivered at the Collegiate Institution) have won for him the reputation of a distinguished linguist, rose to reply to the remarks which had been made by the lecturer.

On being invited to take a position on the platform, he said that he had no intention of wading through the continent of mud which the lecturer had been so long constructing; he should only fasten upon his two closing remarks, namely, that nothing should be believed that was not susceptible of mathematical demonstration; and that the existence of God not being susceptible of mathematical demonstration, ought not to be believed. Now, in relation to the first position, it was a fundamental axiom in mathematics that every circle must have a centre; but he need hardly tell the lecturer, that while it was absolutely necessary to admit this centre, its existence had never been demonstrated.

"Let this table," said Mr. Wales, laying his hand upon a circular table which was upon the platform, "be considered a yard in diameter; now where is the centre? It is not in either of the semi-diameters, for they are equal; and if it be in one it must be in the other; so you prove too much, for you to show that there must be two centres in one circle, which is an absurdity, and destroys the very thing you are laboring to establish. It cannot be between them for they are in contact. You are thus driven to this conclusion, that this mathematical centre is a point devoid of parts, namely, a spaceless point—something that does not occupy space. Now, as all entities occupy space, if this centre does not, then it is not an entity; ergo, it is a non-entity, that is—nothing! So much for the lecturer's first proposition, that nothing ought to be believed that is not susceptible of mathematical demonstration.

This conducts us to the second proposition, that the existence of a God is incapable of mathematical proof. Let us test this assertion. And here I hope the lecturer will signify his admission or rejection of the premises laid down as I proceed.

"First, then, attraction either resides in matter, or it does not reside in matter."

It was admitted to reside in matter.

"Secondly, it is equally diffused through matter, or it is not equally diffused through matter."

Admitted that it was equally diffused.

"Thirdly, repulsion resides in matter, or does not reside in matter."

Admitted to reside in matter.

"Fourthly, it is equally diffused through matter, or it is not equally diffused."

Admitted that it was equally diffused.

"Now mark the result," continued Mr. W. "Here are two permanently antagonistic forces, equally resident in matter, equally diffused through matter, equal in extent, and equal in power. These forces are said to be the motive power which moves all bodies; but it is one of the most self-evident propositions of Euclid, that where equal is to equal, the result will be equal; in other words, that where two forces of equal strength are in antagonism, the result will be the establishment of an equilibrium; not motion, but quiescence, or rest. Thus, if you take a pair of scales and place a pound weight in each, you establish an equilibrium which will remain forever undisturbed, unless interfered with by some external agent. If on the other hand it is contended that attraction is stronger than repulsion; then, once stronger it will forever remain so, and drawing all bodies into one agglomerated mass, again the result would be, not motion, but rest. If, on the contrary, it be said that repulsion is the strongest, then every particle of matter dilating and expanding to its utmost tension, would fly off into space, which being filled with a concourse of disconnected atoms, again the result would be not motion, but rest.

"But nothing is at rest; suns, systems, planets, stars, are all in rapid motion. What, then, is the power which has destroyed the equilibrium of these two antagonistic forces, and which has given to the universe that motion which they are ever striving to prevent?

"We find no evidence of its existence in matter; yet it is evidently superior to matter, since it controls the motion of matter—neutralizes the tendency of those laws and forces which reside in mattar. Now this power, which, without residing in matter, is evidently superior to it, constantly acting upon it, overcoming its inertia, and compelling it into motion, we call God. God! the inevitable word which terminates all our studies, the grand climax to all our knowledge, shining like a mysterious star upon the borders of both worlds, revealing to us the moral liberty of this, and the moral justice of that."

Mr. Wale's argument, certainly one of the most lucid, forcible and original, for the existence of God which it ever fell to our lot to hear, seemed to make a great impression upon the audience, more especially as his opponent declined to reply in "consequence of the lateness of the hour," though it was not quite ten o'clock!

On leaving, Mr. Wales was warmly congratulated by the christian portion of the audience, (and especially by Dr. Middleton, who chanced to be present, and with whom he subsequently rode home to supper,) upon the skill and success of his argument, and for the good feeling with which it was conducted; for Mr. Wales is sometimes apt to silence an opponent by a withering sarcasm instead of a fact or argument. We rejoice that this was not the case in the present occasion.—The Presbyter.

A PRAYER.

I ask not wealth, but power to take
  And use the things I have aright;
Not years, but wisdom that shall make
  My life a profit and delight.

I ask not that for me the plan
  Of good and ill be set aside,
But that the common lot of man
  Be nobly borne and glorified.

I know I may not always keep
  My steps in places green and sweet,
Nor find the pathway of the deep
  A path of safety for my feet.

But pray that, when the tempest's breath
  Shall fiercely sweep my way about,
I make not shipwreck of my faith
  In the unbottomed sea of doubt;

And that, though it be mine to know
  How hard the stoniest pillow seems,
Good angels still may come and go
  On the bright ladder of my dreams.

I do not ask for love below—
  That friends shall never be estranged;
But for the power of loving, so
  My heart may keep its youth unchanged.

Youth, joy, wealth—Fate, I give thee these;
  Leave faith and hope till life is past;
And leave my heart's best impulses
  Fresh and unfailing to the last.

For this I count, of all sweet things,
  The sweetest out of heaven above;
And loving others surely brings
  The fullest recompense of love!

WILL THERE BE BEASTS IN THE NEW EARTH?

"What is man, that thou art mindful of him, and the son of man that thou visitest him? For thou hast made him a little lower than the angels, and hast crowned him with glory and honor. Thou madest him to have dominion over the work of thy hands: thou hast put all things under his feet. All sheep and oxen, yea, and the beasts of the field; the fowls of the air, and the fish of the sea, and whatsoever passeth through the path of the sea."—Ps. 8: 4-9.

Let us see Paul's comment on this:—"For unto the angels hath he not put in subjection the world to come, whereof we speak. But one in a certain place testified, saying, What is man, that thou art mindful of him? or the son of man, that thou visitest him? Thou madest him a little lower than the angels; thou crownedst him with glory and honor, and didst set him over the work of thy hands. Thou hast put all things in subjection under his feet. For in that he put all in subjection under him, he left nothing that is not put under him. But now we see not yet all things put under him."—Heb. 2: 5-9.

Paul says that the Psalmist is speaking of the world to come. I read only of three worlds. 1. The world that then was (2 Pet. 3: 6). 2. "But the heavens and the earth which are now . . reserved unto fire."—Ver. 7. 3. "Nevertheless we, according to his promise, look for new heavens and a new earth."—Ver. 13. This third earth is that to which Paul alludes as seeing in vision (2 Cor. 13: 2-4), paradise.

That Peter must refer to Isa. 65: 17, when he says, "We according to his promise look for new heavens and a new earth," is evident, for that in Isa. is the only place where the promise is found of a new earth. And Isaiah tells us that there will be beasts there. If, with regard to beasts, the language is symbolic, then the promise of a new earth must be symbolic also, and we may take the ground of Dr. Edwards, that the new earth of Isaiah only meant that the Sabbath was to be changed from the seventh day to the first. [See Dr. Justin Edwards in "Sabbath Memorial" published by the Amer. Tract Society].

If any object that there is to be no sea in the new earth, to which the Psalmist alludes (Ps. 8), I would reply that they do not read Rev. 21: 1 as they should. "And I saw a new heaven and a new earth: for the first heaven and the first earth were passed away." Well, John, what became of the old sea? That passed away also. If I am so happy as to enter the new earth, I think my intercourse with the beautiful beasts, and birds, and insects, which my Lord will pronounce all very good, will greatly add to my happiness.

We know that well-trained domestic animals here, under the curse, by their kindness and affection add greatly to the happiness of a refined mind. How much more in their immortal state, in their beautiful perfection! "No lion shall be there." Where? On the highway to the New Jerusalem. It does not say there shall be none in the new earth. (Compare Zech. 14: 10, Rev. 21: 2.)

Adam was made king over all the creatures that God had made (Gen. 1: 26). In the new earth, the saints are to be kings (Rev. 5: 10), not over human beings, I think, but over the beasts as Adam was.

I praise the Lord that I have faith in his word. JOHN.

"BREAK UP YOUR FALLOW GROUND."

"Thus saith the Lord to the men of Judah and Jerusalem, Break up your fallow ground, and sow not among thorns. Circumcise yourselves to the Lord . . . lest my fury come forth like fire, and burn that none can quench it, because of the evil of your doings."—JER. 4: 3, 4.

As all scripture is given by inspiration, and is "profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness, that the man of God may be thoroughly furnished unto all good works," it seems to me to be just as necessary that we Gentiles heed the admonition as those to whom it was especially addressed. We are exhorted ourselves to break up the fallow ground of our hearts. Says John the Baptist, "Repent ye, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand." "Bring forth therefore fruit meet for repentance." Says the prophet Hosea, "Break up your fallow ground; for it is time to seek the Lord, till he come and rain righteousness upon you."

How disheartening to the servant of God to come among us and preach to stony ground hearers, to those whose hearts the gospel plough has not even entered, breaking up the soil, making it fit to receive the good seed, whom the word preached cannot profit, not being mixed with faith. Who is to blame because the work of the Lord is not revived and good accomplished? the faithful servant of God? or the stony ground hearers, whose hearts are so full of thorns and thistles and every thing calculated to choke the word that it cannot take root? Let us who hear the word search out the cause.

Says one, "I wish we could have a smart man come among us. I believe good might be accomplished." Let us remember, even Christ himself when on earth could not do many mighty works among them on account of their unbelief; neither can his followers. The servant is not expected to be above his master. If Christ could not compel them to believe, neither can his servants. God works through very small means. "But God hath chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the wise; and God hath chosen the weak things of the world to confound the things that are mighty; and base things of the world, and things which are despised, hath God chosen, yea, and things which are not, to bring to nought things that are; that no flesh should glory in his presence," says Paul.

If we want Israel to triumph we must hold up Moses' hands. Moses connot do every-thing alone, we must remember. If we want our minister to preach in demonstration of the Spirit and power, we must give him our prayers in earnest,—go direct from our closets, then it will be easier preaching to us, and greater good will result from the word spoken. Let us try it. I will endeavor to do so, for one. How many more will join in prayer that the work of the Lord may be revived among us?

Our brethren are ready to come to the conclusion that they may as well quit the field at once; no good results from their labors. "If the Lord wanted me to work in his vineyard he would bless my labors," says one. Cheer up, brother. I read in the word of God, "But if the watchman seeth the sword come, and blow not the trumpet, and the people be not warned, if the sword come and take any person from among them, he is taken away in his iniquity, but his blood will I require at the watchman's hands. Nevertheless, if thou warn the wicked of his way to turn from it, if he do not turn from his way he shall die in his iniquity, but thou hast delivered thy soul."

I believe we are right down in the last inch of time, and what we do must be done quickly, and soon we shall have our reward. Let us not faint when so near our journey's end. Soon the Master will say, "Well done," if we have done well. If not, "Depart from me, ye cursed." Let us be among those who are all ready and waiting to hear the Master say, "Come, ye blessed." OUR EMANCIPATOR.

All glory to woman's Emancipator! She lost her acknowledged equality in the first Adam, but she gained it in the second Adam—the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

Woman! art thou aware of what is really done for thee? Dost thou feel thy shackles loosed in Jesus Christ? Art thou using this thy liberty, purchased at so great a price, even with the blood of this thy Emancipator? Or art thou listless still, content to sit in thy bonds, and even raising thine own voice against her that would be free?

Dost thou know that in the "beginning" thou hadst equal dominion with man? As it is written, "God created man in his own image . . . male and female . . . and they shall be one flesh." Where are her bonds here? One flesh with man, and having dominion with him over all created things in earth, and air, and sea. This is woman's primeval state at the hand of her God. Amen. He also pronounced it "very good"—well-pleasing to himself. Is it not well-pleasing to thee? Does it not meet thy highest aspirations? Does any thing short of this fill the longings of thy soul? Not a word here of "rule" on the part of man. Not a word here of "subjection" on the part of woman.

But a change has come over the spirit of her dreams. She wakes to find herself a prisoner—a suffering captive. She looks here and there, but no relief is found. Centuries pass over her devoted head, but they bring no release to her. Her dominion lost—her equality unacknowledged—her sighs and tears only to her reproach, until she despairs of release, and doubts of her own ability to be anything but an abject! Is this a wonder? Is it strange? Six thousand years of oppression would bow Gabriel had he been "deceived" and brought under the power of sin as was woman! And can frail woman stand up under it? I wonder she lives, and still is woman! Indeed she is not woman as she came from the hand of her God. She is so lost to her royal birth that she even joins her oppressors to rivet her own chains!

Whose voice so loud as woman's against herself? Let one of her number, at her Father's call, go to carry good things to her brethren and see how they do, and how quick will she hear an elder sister praying, "Why camest thou down hither? With whom hast thou left those little matters that thou art only fit to do? I know thy pride, and the naughtiness of thy heart; to see and be seen hast thou come." If, after all this, she persevere and go out to meet Goliath, she is left, like little David, to go alone, while all Israel stand back and look on to see how she comes out; and if, in the name of the Lord, she gain a victory, all are glad, but little David is forgotten, or is "eyed from that day forth" as one who aspires to that which belongs to another.

But shall she give back on this account? Nay, verily. Let her, David like, answer, Is there not a cause? Let her, as he did, plead her own ability for the emergency. Let her tell of her rescue of the lamb. Let her show her zeal to take away the reproach from Israel. This was David's great concern. Not that he should have great riches, and the king's daughter, and his father's house be made free in Israel; but, Who is this uncircumcised Philistine, that he should defy the armies of the living God? Thus fired with zeal for God's honor, let her step forward in his name, with sling and stone in hand (the Spirit and word of God), and she will prevail. Goliath will fall before her; with his own sword will she cut off his head, and will hold it up in the sight of vanquished Israel, but for her, as some of God's handmaidens have already done among us.

All glory to woman when her shackles fall! when Christ, her great Emancipator, sets her free! Then she is "free indeed." Go on, my sisters; in God's name I bid you go on, "nothing terrified from your adversaries, which is to them an evident token of perdition, but to you of salvation, and that of God. For unto you it is given, in the behalf of Christ, not only to believe on him, but also to suffer for his sake." Your Sister, in the suffering for His sake, E. S. WILLARD.

For the World's Crisis.

CHANGE, CHANGE, CHANGE.

Many and great are the changes of this life. Truly we know nothing of the future history of our course here.

Last winter, after the Lord restored my health, I felt so well and able to do the work assigned me, that I traveled, preached and worked for several months, overmuch; overtaxed my strength, and took several colds. Finally I came down with diphtheria, was very sick two weeks, revived slowly; am not so well since. The house I occupied was sold, and I began to think, after much effort, that I should never find another in town. Next came a call to change business. All at once I was sold out of store and medicine business, all clear, and all without once planning or even expecting it. But I had promised to work in the Lord's vineyard, if he would give me health.

I found a house next, almost without looking. Moved. Took a journey abroad. While on the way a telegram summoned me to my home to care for, pray with, and watch over my dear sick son,—the oldest,—and finally to bury him, rejoicing for the mercy and grace which God bestowed upon him in his last hours, but to mourn his absence from the family circle, from every place I go, or look.

O God! truly "it is not in man to direct his steps." What is the next change? I wait to see. The Lord knows. I will watch. If I love the Lord, he will lead me, and I will not be afraid of the dangers of the path. There are no dangers in that path. "All things work together for good to them who love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose."

I think I see some of the work of the Lord in all the way I am led. I do not know what he designs for me, but I know "he doeth all things well." Then I will trust him, and not be afraid. I hope soon to see the King in all his loveliness and beauty coming in his glory, to raise his sleeping ones and bestow immortality on them, and let them enter "into life eternal."

Let us then be ready, my brethren and sisters, and watch for his coming. Then we shall hail our coming King with joy and gladness. I. C. WELLCOME.

OUR MISSION.

How important, dear friends, in these last days that all Christ's disciples should seriously ponder the question, "What is my mission? Jesus "came down from heaven, not to do his own will, but the will of him that sent him." Are we endeavoring to follow his example, or is our one talent hid in a napkin? The Bible is our chart. Let us consult it. Read Matt. 5: 9, 16, 44; 6: 3, also the twelfth chapter of Romans, which should be inscribed on every christian heart, and taught to your children for daily practice. We all need its exhortations in these days of disunion and contention. "Be not wise in your own conceits," but be "kindly affectioned one to another, in honor preferring one another."

Our Savior had a mission here,
  So have you and I;
He came to do his Father's will,
  To suffer and to die.

Bought with a price—his precious blood—
  Our own no more are we;
Then, christian, work for Jesus' sake,
  Whose love has ransomed thee.

Distasteful though my mission prove,
  My Father, choose for me;
Let "Him who pleased not himself,"
  My pattern ever be.

"She hath done what she could"—how blest
  This plaudit of our Lord!
We fain would share the labor too,
  To gain a like reward.

"Let thy light shine"—"feed, thou, my lambs"—
  Our Master's voice obey,
Then shall a crown of life be ours
  At that long-wished-for day.

"HOW ARE THE MIGHTY FALLEN!"

To all who are looking for redemption through Christ:—If good old Daniel cried out, "Lord, righteousness belongeth unto thee, but unto us confusion of faces, as at this day," when he saw how the children of Israel had revolted from God by departing from the precepts and judgments of the Lord, insomuch that they gave their sons and daughters in marriage to other nations, which was strictly forbidden (for proof of this see Deut. 7: 2–4); then let us keep in mind we are the antitype. They went after other gods, and for this cause he was obliged to reduce the number in Gideon's time. See Judges 7: 5. Likewise the Lord said to Moses and Aaron (Num. 16: 21)—"Separate yourselves from among this unholy congregation, that I may consume them in a moment." Often the Lord had to separate the precious from the vile. He said Ephraim had mixed himself with the people, and was like a lake not turned, and for this reason was shorn of his strength and knew it not.

When I look over their condition, consider we are the antitype, and allow my mind to run back to the apostles' days and compare them with the present state of the church, we might well say, How are the mighty fallen! I am obliged to cry out in the bitterness of my soul with Daniel, "O Lord, righteousness belongeth unto thee; but unto us confusion of faces, as at this day"; and with Jeremiah, "O that I had a place in the wilderness!"

How are the mighty fallen! What is the cause? The children have mixed themselves with the people, the believer with the unbeliever, and having fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, do not reprove them. "What concord hath Christ with Belial? or what part hath he that believeth with an infidel? Paul speaks to us thus: "Wherefore come out from among them and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing, and I will receive you, and I will be a Father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty." Remember, we are built upon the apostles and prophets, and Christ, the chief corner stone.

How are the mighty fallen! O! the treacherous dealers! Lord, have mercy, and raise us from this degraded position, lest He come and find us wanting. Are we listening to the backbiter, and not reproving him? It belongs to the works of darkness. Are we indulging in backbiting, and they do not reprove us? Where are the plain dealers and livers? May the Lord search them out, that there may be a people like a city, a people known and read of all men, whose God is the Lord.

These things have been in my mind like fire shut up in my bones. I have long wanted to speak, that I might be refreshed; and what I am in letter, that will I be face to face. Yours in hope of soon seeing Jesus,

MY WESTERN TOUR.

On Saturday, June 24th, at Swanton Falls, Vt., I parted with my dear companion and little daughter, my best earthly friends, with a heart made sad with the thought we may never meet again, until "mortality is swallowed up of life," to visit valued friends of Jesus and mine, in the far west,—"the regions beyond,"—"as much as lieth in me to preach the gospel," and make their hearts glad with the "blessed hope." Passed to Champlain, an old field of labor, where I met with old and well tried friends. Visited several families, and on the Sabbath, in Averill's new hall, which is hereafter to be occupied by the Adventists, as a place of worship, I preached to very attentive audiences, and quite respectable as to numbers. I heard several good testimonies for Jesus and the resurrection, which cheered my heart.

At this, my first appointment, the brethren "helped me after a godly sort," "as their manner is," for they deserve praise in this, that they "remember those that labor among them," and "communicate to their necessities." If others, for whose good I shall labor on this tour, will do as well, by using good economy, for which Bro. Grant quotes me as a good example, by God's blessing, I shall be able to perform my intended journey (which is a long one and costly, in these times of war and high prices,) with but little more than the sacrifice of my time. I seek God's glory, and my trust is in him. I go to bear "precious seed, weeping," to "preach Jesus and the resurrection," and proclaim life through him. Pray for me. More hereafter, if God permit. The World's Crisis
AND SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER.
Boston, Tuesday, July 5, 1864.

BILLS! BILLS!!

We send bills this week to those who owe the office for books and tracts. A settlement is desired by the middle of August. We have waited on you some time, brethren, and to many of you bills have been sent before. Is it not now time they were paid? Remember the apostolic injunction,—"Owe no man anything, but to love one another." They who owe us love, may remain in our debt as long as they please. They who owe us money, will oblige us by sending the amount of their indebtedness.

THE WILBRAHAM CAMPMEETING is appointed to commence Monday, Aug. 22nd, and continue one week. Preaching on the ground Aug. 21st. Particulars hereafter.

THE TREMONT CAMPMEETING was both pleasant and profitable. More anon.

HOME AGAIN.

After an absence of three weeks, we are again privileged to be at home and enjoy our family blessings. During our absence in Canada we have enjoyed the smiles of the God of peace, and seen a goodly number start in the service of the Lord. Our visit has been both pleasant and profitable, physically and spiritually. We found many true friends of Jesus, who are willing to suffer with him, and bear all the reproach a wicked world can heap upon them.

Our meetings in Danville were quite interesting. Several were quickened, and new ones started in the service of the Lord. We have never had a barren season with this church. As usual, we found a happy home and a hearty welcome at Bro. J. Porter's, the pastor of the church.

Lord's day, June 26th, was one of much interest and profit. The blessing of the Lord was upon us, causing saints to rejoice and sinners to tremble. A large audience assembled and listened attentively. One was baptized, and others have found peace in believing. At the close of our pleasant communion, four requested prayers. There is much seriousness in the minds of many. The people see that the signs of the times indicate that we are near the end of the present dispensation. They begin to tremble at the prospect before them. We hope some more will yet start in the service of the Lord. It is evident that the longer people delay their preparation, the harder it will be to commence a christian life. The tide of wickedness is rising rapidly, and thousands are being swept away to perdition. The perils are continually increasing, and those who wish to be saved should fly to the Savior at once.

WHY NOT PUBLISHED?

No doubt many, who send good articles for the Crisis, wonder why they do not appear earlier; and why, in some cases, they do not appear at all. The reason is simply this: the paper is not large enough to contain them. We have many excellent articles on hand, just as good as any that are published, which we should be as glad to insert as the writers and readers would be to see them; which are left out for the above reason. We do not find cause for rejecting but few articles. Most of those rejected either have no name attached, or contain something of a personal character in violation of the published regulations of the paper.

We say what we have on this point, in order that those who have not seen their articles in the paper may not be discouraged, and stop writing, through fear that what they write is not acceptable; but to continue to forward their letters and other contributions for our family paper. It will be a benefit to the writer by way of mental improvement, even if they should not find a place in the columns of the Crisis.

We wish to thank our contributors for their faithfulness. Let us all do as much as we can to stir up our fellow beings to prepare for the coming of the Son of man. Keep writing, talking and praying. Our work is nearly done. Let each be in a condition to hear it said at last, "WELL DONE."

A REFORM NEEDED.

For several years, the dress of women has been growing more and more extravagant, inconvenient and unhealthy. This, in connection with other things, has so impaired the physical constitutions of American women, that a healthy one is rare to be found. Some, it is true, have been aroused to look at things as they are, and a few have been reformed, and received great benefit; but they have to endure many frowning looks from former friends, as has ever been the case with all reformers.

The church has now gone so far in extravagance of dress, as well as its inconvenience, that the people of the world have started a reform, which bids fair to do more to restrain some church members than all that the Lord has ever said. They will heed the voice of the world, while they disregard the word of the Lord.

An exchange says, "We are evidently nearing a new era in the history of woman." On the 2nd of May, a meeting was held in Washington, D. C., called "The Grand League and Covenant of the Ladies." The following is their pledge:—"For three years, or during the war, we pledge ourselves to purchase no foreign article of dress." A similar meeting was held in New York, May 16th. If the world's people can do it for "three years, or during the war;" ought not christians to do as much during the continuance of their war, which is not "for three years," but during life? Where is the spirit of sacrifice, and self-denial, that once characterized the church of Christ? Are there none left who have courage to dress as the Bible directs? See 1 Tim. 2: 8–10; 1 Pet. 3: 1–6. "I will therefore that . . . women adorn themselves in modest apparel, with shamefacedness and sobriety; not with broidered hair, or gold, or pearls, or costly array, but (which becometh women professing godliness) with good works." Instead of "shamefacedness," the present style of bonnets gives the very opposite appearance, boldfacedness, proudfacedness. As for "modesty," we rarely see any indications of its existence in the modern style of woman's dress. In the language of another we would say, "The present dress of woman is so inappropriate and embarassing to all free womanly activities, that it should be discarded." "Now is the time when the nation is crushing slavery, for the American women to emancipate themselves from the slavery of foreign fashion in dress altogether; to throw off the slavish subservience to the Empress of the false-hearted Napoleon. This is a step which both patriotism and good sense demand." "What a noble act it would be for the women of this country."

May we not hope to see the "women professing godliness" show sufficient courage to break loose from their bondage to the extravagant, immodest, inconvenient, and unhealthy fashions, which originate with the harlots of Paris? Is it not high time to awake to this subject? Is not a reform needed? We know that the good sense of our readers will answer with an emphatic affirmative. Who will set the noble example, and face a frowning throng? Is it not time to separate from the world, if we expect to be ready to meet the Lord? Shall we try to please him? or his enemies? The choice must be made soon. Let it be the wise one.

WHAT OUR NEIGHBORS SAY.

It is often the case that we may learn the truth from our neighbors, relative to the result of our actions, better than from those who are most intimately connected with us. If friendly, they weigh our deeds with less partiality, and more justice, than our intimate associates. So in relation to the terrible war now in progress; our friendly neighbors may speak more truthfully on the subject than those who are fully committed to any party interests. These thoughts were suggested after reading the following from the Montreal Telegraph, of June 11th, 1864. The editor says:

"Fortune does not smile on our Federal neighbors. The grand campaign of 1864 so far has brought them nothing but defeat and humiliation. Sherman after being decoyed into Central Georgia, and ruthlessly pounded on the road, weakened by the loss of 45,000 men, has been driven to entrench himself between Ackworth and Marietta, with his communications destroyed, and the enemy swarming on his rear and flanks. The Confederates in Kentucky are doing as they please; they have captured all the State ordnance, broken up the railways, and taken Lexington and Frankfort. The Mississippi is once more blockaded by batteries which the Federal gunboats have in vain attempted to silence; the Confederates have captured three transports, and crippled three gunboats and some other transpoats. Louisiana is again overrun; Arkansas and Mississippi are rescued from Federal control; Tennessee is all but lost.

In Virginia Grant is making another flank movement, after losing half his army in vain attempts to crush the Confederates.

The time for active operations in the extreme South is passed; the sickly season on the Virginia Peninsula is at hand; the spring campaign is over, and yet the Federals have gained no success, but, on the contrary, while they have uselessly wasted their immense resources, they have stimulated the exertions of the Confederates, given them hope and courage for new efforts, and rendered more assured the conviction that the crowning success of their labors and sacrifices is not far off."

MORE BLESSINGS.

We often have occasion to think of the saying of Jesus,—

"Blessed are ye when men shall revile you, and persecute you, and shall say all manner of evil against you falsely for my sake."—MATT. 5: 11.

Many rich blessings have been received in the way above specified. The following, from the Montreal correspondent of the Canadian Gleaner, brought the foregoing Scripture fresh to our mind:—

"BAPTISM IN THE RIVER.—A vagrant from the States, named Elder Grant, who comes to found a new sect here—very unorthodox—tried the sensation dodge yesterday by getting up a baptism in the river. It took. About two thousand people went to see the sight, and, no doubt, the hat was sent round, and new converts to the genuine doctrine obtained. It is surprising how people are gulled by a clerical montebank who proclaims himself impiously, to be the discoverer of a new religion, by which he expects to spend a lazy life. The 'new light' of the world would do more good in breaking stones, which is an honest and healthy vocation. However, it is a free country, and Elder Grant will for a few months make hay while the sun shines."

GOLD.

The high price of gold indicates a want of confidence in the success of the Union army. When the prospect is bright in favor of the north, then gold declines; and when the south prevails gold advances in value. During the terrible conflict between the contending parties, the price of gold has been a war barometer, indicating to the people what rich men think of the probabilities of success. From this stand-point, the prospect looks dark for the immediate future. Recently, (June 30th) gold advanced to 250, and has fallen but little. Great speculations are going on in gold and silver, and every artifice is employed to secure the riches of this world. Covetousness knows no bounds. It is becoming the all-controlling principle in business transactions. The pure principles of christianity are seldom exhibited in these last days of peril, because but few are controlled by them. We can look for nothing but an increase of dishonesty, covetousness and corruption.

☞ The letter from J. T. Dixon in the last Crisis should have been dated May 16th instead of June 16th.

INQUIRIES.

Will Bro. Grant please give an exposition in the Crisis of the following texts of Scripture, and greatly oblige a lover and seeker after truth. Isa. 66: 24; Mark 9: 44; Phil. 1: 23; Heb. 12: 23; 2 Cor. 4: 16; 2 Cor. 5: 6; 2 Cor. 12: 2; 1 Pet. 3: 19.

CLARK D. HIBBARD.

Hereford, C. E.

Isa. 66: 24 reads as follows:—"And they shall go forth, and look upon the carcasses of the men that have transgressed against me; for their worm shall not die, neither shall their fire be quenched; and they shall be an abhorring unto all flesh."

It is certain, if the fire is not quenched, and the worm does not die, that "the carcasses" must be all consumed, either by the fire or worms. We see no chance for any other conclusion.

For exposition of Phil. 1: 23, see Crisis of May 24th.

Heb. 12: 23, with context, reads:—"But ye are come unto Mount Zion, and unto the city of the living God, the heavenly Jerusalem, and to an innumerable company of angels; to the general assembly and church of the first-born which are written in heaven, and to God the Judge of all, and to the spirits of just men made perfect, and to Jesus the mediator of the new covenant, and to the blood of sprinkling, that speaketh better things than that of Abel."

When commenting on this passage, Dr. Adam Clarke says:—

"The description in these verses does not refer to a heavenly state. . . . In heaven there is no need of a mediator, or sprinkling of blood, but these are mentioned in the state which the apostle describes." He goes on to say:—"We cannot understand these terms without the assistance of Jewish phraseology. The Jews divided mankind into three classes:—1. The just perfect. 2. The wicked perfect. 3. Those between both. The just perfect are those who have conquered all brutal appetites and passions. . . . The wicked perfect are those who never repent. . . . The intermediate are those who are influenced partly by the evil principle, and partly by the good. . . . The spirits of the just men made perfect, or the righteous perfect, are the full grown christians."

We come next to 2 Cor. 4: 16. This passage reads:—"For which cause we faint not; but though our outward man perish, yet the inward man is renewed day by day." The word "man" after "inward" is not found in the original. It is put in our version of the Bible by the translators. But suppose it was in the original, would it then prove that there is a man in every man, thus making two men to every body? We might as well argue that the scripture which speaks of the "old man" and the "new man," means two more men. Thus we could make out four men as well as two. Now which is the man, who is accountable, and must be rewarded or punished? Whichever one we may select, it is the one that sins; and the one that sins is the one to be judged. But the one to be judged is yet to come out of the sea, and out of hades—the grave. But all the men in the sea and in hades, or the grave, are dead. See Rev. 20: 13,—"And the sea gave up the dead which were in it; and death and hades ("the grave"—margin) delivered up the dead which were in them; and they were judged every MAN, according to their works." Which man was judged? The "outward," "inward," "old," or "new"? Why, the one that came out of the sea, and the grave. Then it follows that real man does not go to his reward, or punishment, till after Jesus comes and raises the dead.

We now come to the inquiry concerning the passage under consideration, and inquire what is meant by the "outward man," and "the inward"? We think we understand this by actual experience. When we get tired physically, by continued labors, we as often feel renewed mentally and spiritually; but do not see how immortality could be renewed daily.

For an exposition of 2 Cor. 5: 6, see Crisis of May 24th.

For our views of 2 Cor. 12: 2, see last number of the Crisis.

For an explanation of 1 Pet. 3: 19, see Crisis of May 31st.

EXAMINATION OF ISAIAH 65: 20.

BRO. GRANT:—Will you please explain Isa. 65: 20? J. F. H.

Expositions of this passage have been given through the Crisis, but we speak again for the benefit of new readers. The Bishop's Bible, which formed the basis of our present version, reads:—"The dead child, when an hundred years are past, is still a child; and the sinner being an hundred years old is still accursed." The idea contained in the Bishop's version appears to be that no change takes place between death and the resurrection. "When an hundred years are past," the child has not grown to be a man, but remains the same as when it died.

But other renderings put the passage in a different light. Let us now notice three of the preceding verses, including the one under consideration:—

"For behold, I create new heavens and a new earth: and the former shall not be remembered, nor come into mind. But be ye glad and rejoice for ever in that which I create: for, behold, I create Jerusalem a rejoicing, and her people a joy. And I will rejoice in Jerusalem, and joy in my people: and the voice of weeping shall be no more heard in her, nor the voice of crying. There shall be no more thence an infant of days, nor an old man that hath not filled his days: for the child shall die an hundred years old; but the sinner being an hundred years old shall be accursed."

It will be noticed that the "new-earth" state precedes the events of the 20th verse. The order of events here corresponds with the Revelation given to John upon the Isle of Patmos, as recorded in chap. 21: 1–4. In both Isaiah and John, we have first, the "new earth;" and then we are informed that every one there is rejoicing, and that "the voice of weeping shall be no more heard in her, nor the voice of crying." Then if there is to be no more crying, it is reasonable to suppose there will be no more dying; for there is nothing that causes weeping like the death of our friends.

In the next verse, the 20th, it is said, "There shall be no more thence [from that time] an infant of days, nor an old man that hath not filled his days." And after it is said "there shall be no more thence an infant of days," it is said "the child shall die an hundred years old." The question arises, how can there be a "child" to die, if there are not first some infants? As we understand this scripture, the reason why there is "no more thence an infant of days," after we get into the new earth, is because the one that dies a child, or infant, in this world, comes forth in the resurrection, with the ability of one a hundred years old. If infants arise from the dead as such, then they will need mothers to take care of them, which we think cannot be the case. As there is to be no weeping, crying or death in the "new earth;" it follows that the death referred to is in this life.

In relation to the "sinner," though he may live to be an "hundred years old," he "shall be accursed." He can have no part or lot in the coming kingdom.

The following exposition of Isa. 65: 20, is from Dr. N. Homes, A. D., 1653, hence written over two hundred years since. It was furnished by Bro. D. T. Taylor, and may aid in understanding the passage:

In answering the inquiry, "What that glorious state on earth shall be at the restitution of all things," Homes says that as to its qualities it will be "Negatively; sinless, sorrowless, deathless, superiorless, temptationless and timeless; and positively; it will be the Restoration of the creation, perfection of all qualities, confidence of all comforts, and preface to eternity." And it is while proving the deathlessness of the millennial age that he gives us the following:—"To deal faithfully with you, there is only one considerable place that I know of relating to the time I speak of that hath something of an intimation of mortality to be in those times, and that is Isa. 65: 20. It clearly relates to the time we speak of, verse 17, 'Behold I create new heavens and new earth,' etc.' which Peter refers to this time, 2 Pet. 3: 13, in relation to the promise in Isa. 65. Now the 20th verse, our translators have rendered thus, 'There shall be no more thence an infant of days, nor an old man that hath not filled his days: for the child shall die an hundred years old; but the sinner being an hundred years old shall be accursed.' Now as far as I can see into languages and the context, these words, 'for the child shall die,' etc., may be more fitly translated 'that the child should die,' etc., 'for the word Kee, in the Hebrew, is exceeding often used,—yea, and so rendered by translators—to signify that as we have here rendered it. As for turning shall into should, it is not worth the mentioning before a grammarian, who knows that the word so rendered will infer that the verb speaks subjectively. Now read the words so easily altered in the English, and without the least violence to the Hebrew, and the meaning will be quite contrary to any intimation of the mortality of the saints in this glorious time of the thousand years. For according as we have translated, the sense will run clearly thus—'There shall be no more thence (or from that time, viz. the beginning of the thousand years of the new creation,) an infant of days, or an old man that hath not filled his days, that the child, (or young man) should die at an hundred years,' etc. So that here is no mention of the mortality of the saints, but of their immortality. . . . The Arabic renders Isa. 65: 20, thus—'Neither shall there be any more a young man imperfect in age, nor an old man that shall not fulfill his time. For the young man shall fill up an hundred years, but the sinner that after an hundred years dies, shall be accursed.' Observe, this translation casts out mortality from the saints and applies it to sinners, simply by not regarding the common pointing of the Hebrew by which points ofttimes we suffer much. Second, the seventy Greek translators render it to the same effect,* 'Neither shall there be any more one that is not ripe (i. e. in age) nor an old man that hath not fulfilled his time, for the young man shall be an hundred years old, but the sinner that dies an hundred years old shall be accursed.' . . .

'It is said in verse 22, 'they shall not build and another inhabit,' which is the case while mortality reigns. Mark the reason; 'for as the days of a tree are the days of my people' (Sept. 'tree of life,' T.)

* Thompson's Sept. renders it,—"Nor shall there any more be an untimely birth, nor an old man who shall not complete his term; for he who is a hundred years old shall be young, and the sinner who dieth at an hundred years shall be accursed."

Brenton's Sept.—"Neither shall there be any more a child that dies untimely, or an old man who shall not complete his time, for the youth shall be a hundred years old, and the sinner who dies at a hundred years shall also be accursed." D. T.

THE WAR.

The wheels of war appear to be deeper in the mud than ever. Just at the point where success is expected, appears a greater obstacle. For three years we have heard very nearly the same story over and over again. About every week we hear that a movement is on foot that will end the war and "crush the rebellion"; but like a fire in the forest in a windy day, it is continually breaking out in new places and with renewed energy. Instead of there being a prospect of its immediate close, it looks more threatening for still more terrible conflicts. We think no nation ever went down faster than ours is going. It lies bleeding at every pore, with no prospect of receiving a healing balm. O that Jesus would come and end the awful scene, and set up his kingdom of peace!

THE AMERICAN ARTISAN.

We have just received a new visitor to our sanctum—the first number of the "AMERICAN ARTISAN," a weekly journal published at No. 212 Broadway, New York, by BROWN COOMB & Co., and devoted to the interests of artisans, manufacturers, inventors, patentees, &c. It is quite a handsome looking sheet of eight pages, excellent in its typography, and artistically illustrated with original engravings and descriptions of new machinery, etc., both American and foreign. For the World's Crisis.

ASLEEP IN JESUS!

DEAR BRO. GRANT:—My son, John G. L. Himes, sleeps sweetly in Jesus. He died last Wednesday, calmly and heroically, and looked death in the face with a smile of defiance. God was with him. He was a full believer in the mortality of man, and so met the enemy in this view, expecting to be conquered for a time, but to gain the victory when Jesus comes. Oh, how sweet the christian's faith and hope!

We are all sustained, greatly sustained, in this hour. We thank God we had so noble a son for the kingdom, and expect to see him when Jesus comes. He was thirty years of age, and in the strength of his manhood and usefulness. I depended much on him to help me in my work in this western field; but in this it has pleased God to disappoint me; yet I feel a sweet reconciliation to this arrangement of divine providence. God doeth all things well. Blessed by his holy name!

Truly yours, JOSHUA V. HIMES.

For the World's Crisis.

TO THE FRIENDS OF THE ITALIAN MISSION.

DEAR BRETHREN AND SISTERS:—Thinking that you may be interested to hear of our journey hither, and safe arrival in this great city, I take the earliest opportunity to write you that through the kind providence of our heavenly Father we reached London on Monday, June 6th, after a voyage of twenty-three days on the mighty deep. The weather was for the most part unpleasant, and more than half the time we had head winds that retarded our progress. My wife suffered much from sea-sickness the entire voyage, the rest of us only a few days, the first of the passage. However, after we reached the coast of England we had beautiful weather, and ended our passage very pleasantly.

Our passengers were of many nations, and we formed some very agreeable acquaintances during the passage, and did what we could to spread the truth. There was an intelligent Frenchman on board, with whom I had considerable conversation, and who seemed much interested as I talked with him upon the fulfillment of prophecy and other religious subjects. He confessed that he had never read the New Testament, but said he would buy a Bible and read it. There were on board four clergymen from the U. S.,—two from Mass., F. A. Reed, Cong., and Eld. Howe, Baptist; S. M. Dickson, of Georgetown, D. C., and I. N. Effingen, of Va., of the M. E. church. We had good meetings every Sunday after the first, on which day nearly all on board were sick. In the afternoon on the last one, we had a very interesting service for the children, in which we had singing in four different languages, much to the gratification of the congregation.

Here in London we were received with much christian kindness by Bro. R. Robertson, who entertained us with true English nobility, and assisted us in finding cheap, quiet and agreeable lodgings, which we felt much the need of after our fatiguing journey. We shall be compelled to remain here until we receive means from brethren in the U. S. to enable us to proceed to Italy; and while here I shall do all in my power, with the help of God, to spread the everlasting gospel as I have opportunity, and will send you a report, providence permitting, before we leave London.

My dear brethren and sisters, pray much for this important mission, that many may be brought through this humble instrumentality to the knowledge of the truth and a preparation for the kingdom of God. Will the "Voice of the West," and other evangelical Advent papers that are interested in the Italian Mission please publish this letter soon as possible? as for the sake of economy I can send to the U. S. but two copies. With much love, I am your Bro. and servant in Christ, M. B. CZECHOWSKI.

P. S.—Editors who will be so kind as to publish this letter and send me a copy to the care of Mr. John N. Ianowski—18 Rue des Fosse's St. Jaques, Paris, France, will oblige me very much. M. B. C.

For the World's Crisis.

TO THE SISTERS.

How ought we to live in these last days of peril and trial? Ought we to be following the fashions of this ungodly world, or should we be more like the followers of our blessed Jesus, if we laid aside the vain and trifling fashions of the day? How often do we see those who say they love the Lord and have given all for Christ, by their works deny it. Says Jesus, "If you love the world, the love of the Father is not in you." But some of you may say, My heart is not set upon them. Well, just test yourself. Leave them off.

If we are to be lights to the world, how can we follow its foolish fashions? Do not plead, My taste is different from others; in the day of judgment that will be no excuse. The Lord wants us to be honest-hearted. I for one am determined to be for Christ, if I have to go all alone. Well, some will say, if I get them myself, whose business is it? It is the Lord's business, and he will hold you guilty in the day of reckoning. Just think how many have not the comforts of this life, and that the money you spend for the things that belong to the world would do them so much good.

O! I tell you, my dear sisters, these are not trifling things. If we are the Lord's, all that we have is his, and we have no right to spend it for needless things. I have long felt a sense of duty to write upon this subject, but for fear of wounding the feelings of some I have waited. As one that loves you all, I write. It will be a very sad thing to come up to the judgment deceived. We cannot serve the world and Christ. We shall love one and hate the other. Is it possible that we can hate the Savior? These are the words of Jesus. Now, dear sisters, let us adorn ourselves with a meek and quiet spirit, which in the sight of God is of great price. I had rather have an ornament that is highly esteemed in the sight of God, than all the gew-gaws that this ungodly world affords. Let us make a clean sweep of everything that is unlike Christ.

Now let me say one word to the preachers' wives. Set an example that others can follow. Do not let us have on any ornament that belongs to the world, in any form; for if we have on any thing that does not belong to us, are we honest? Let us not be stumbling blocks in the way of any. Let us be true children of God, and not spend our time in trying to decorate these mortal bodies. I have often heard it remarked, "If she is condemned for wearing them, let her leave them off." But is that right? Is the way more strait for one than for another? I think not. Then let us live above the world in all these things, and my daily prayer is, Lord, make me just right before thee, and help me to set an example worthy of imitation.

It is a great thing to be all ready for the marriage supper of the Lamb, and the garments will all be alike. One will not be decked more than another. They will all be like Jesus. Can we be there if we have any spot or wrinkle, or any such thing?

Yours in the bonds of christian love,

North Dana. MARY E. STREETER.

Correspondence.

From Bro. E. A. Smith.

BRO. GRANT:—I must write you this time myself. Last fall a friend of mine wrote for the World's Crisis to be sent to me, stating that I was poor and deaf, and if she had added that I was spiritually blind she would have told you the whole truth. The paper came, and I cannot tell you how highly I prize it. I am an old woman, and have read every thing that I could get that had any thing to do with Bible teachings, hoping to find a key to unlock the mysteries of the Bible; and the more I read the greater I was puzzled or confused for none set the Scriptures in the light of truth. The World's Crisis is the key to unlock these Bible truths, and light to show the weary pilgrim the true path that leads to life. If I cannot hear the voice of man, I can hear the voice of truth, which the Crisis teaches, and I feel greatly blessed. I think I can see the Bible clothed in beauty that I never saw before, and I thank God that the Crisis ever fell into my hands.

I wish to send for books and tracts. It is the only way I can get any information. I am willing to make temporal sacrifices for spiritual food. Nothing does me so much good as to get something to read about the last days and the coming of our blessed Lord. I do not know how to wait for him to come. I want him to come now. I want to go home. How I long to see some of the true faith. But I think I shall not have to wait long, for I verily believe that the Lord will come soon and cut short his work in righteousness, or no flesh will be saved.

I feel it my duty to say that I think you are right on the Sabbath. I have had great trials with the Sabbatarians. Moses Hull once baptized me into that order. On investigating the order, I found they could not bear it, and I thought if they could not bear to be examined by a feeble woman, they could not stand the searching eye of God, and I left them, determined I would follow Christ alone.

Yours in hope of eternal life,

Kalamanzoo, Mich. E. A. SMITH.

From Sr. E. Marsh.

BRO. GRANT:—I want to testify for Jesus and his truth. I want to confess him before the world, that he may not be ashamed of me at his appearing and kingdom. To live the life of a christian, and believe the blessed word of God right, and live up to its requirements, is indeed a great thing. I fear there are but few that realize the inestimable value of pure and undefiled religion. The most of the religion of these days is spurious, tarnished with the world.

The way marked out for the christian to travel is narrow. Christ is the way, the truth and the life. If we walk in Christ we are in the narrow way. We must be willing to suffer reproach for our Master and his cause, and bear uncomplainingly all our trials and sorrows while sojourning here in this vale of tears.

We are often called to drink deeply of sorrow's bitter cup, and sometimes feel like repining at our lot. If we love the Lord, we soon find there is balm in Gilead and a physician there. Yes, blessed be God, our hope extends beyond the cold, dark grave. Our hope is in one that professes godlike power. All power is given him in heaven and on earth. He has the keys of death and the grave. Soon he is coming to unlock the grave and let the captives go free. Then, thanks to God, we that are his will sing the victor's song.

Let us strive so to run as to win the prize at the end of the race, and be found at his appearing and kingdom with our garments pure and unspotted from this sin-polluted world. EMILY L. MARSH.

From Bro. D. M. Kinter.

BRO. GRANT:—I wish to call the attention of the brethren scattered abroad, to the fact that there is a "little flock" in North East Missouri, who have come safe through the fiery trials of the last three years, and are still anxiously looking for the kingdom, and praying for the speedy return of "the Lord from heaven."

The writer has been sorely tried since writing to you in January last, having been arrested on false accusations by an enemy, and incarcerated in a military prison in St. Louis for three weeks, and then sent to Cape Girardeau, Mo., and there tried before a military commission; and after two months' confinement in all, and a cost of about two hundred dollars, was honorably acquitted and set at liberty. "May the Lord reward him according to his deeds." But truly "we are not tempted above that we can bear," and "whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth;" and often and often would my mind seek relief in reflecting on the false accusations of my Savior whose presence with me I was conscious of during my whole imprisonment, which brought to my mind the language of the poet,

"And prisons would palaces prove,
If Jesus would dwell with me there."

We have much to try us here, and need the prayers of the few faithful scattered abroad. Brethren, pray for us. We have much opposition to contend against and no assistance in teaching, but have been preaching and, by the grace of God, shall continue to preach the word against all opposition, though "the heathen rage and the people imagine a vain thing." Our reward is evidently nigh at hand, and if we but continue faithful a few years more at most, we shall reap our reward in the everlasting kingdom of our dear Redeemer.

Oh, brethren, be faithful! Come out from the world and be ye separate therefrom. Touch not the unclean thing. Our citizenship is in heaven, from whence we look for the Savior. Let those of the world defend the governments of this world. Our kingdom is not of this world, neither has the time yet come for the saints to possess the kingdom; therefore let us wait patiently till the "kingdoms of this world become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ," and then, and not till then, may we expect peace.

Brethren, write often, and letus thank God that we have such a paper as the Crisis for a medium through which to correspond with one another. Let us pray for its prosperity. It comes to me as a weekly messenger of joy laden with good things, and I do not know how I could do without it. Hoping to meet you and all the finally faithful in the kingdom of God's dear Son,

I am yours in the hope of eternal life,
D. M. KINTER.

From Wm. S. Miller.

BRO. GRANT:—While I read the testimony of our beloved prophets I am led more fully to believe the end of all things to be at hand, as the blessed God has revealed through them to us to be the truth; the world is shaking, and soon He that shall come will soon come and take to himself his great power and reign over the nations. They are using the iron now, and soon the rod of iron will use them up. God is a merciful God, and slow to anger, but rich in mercy to all such as love, obey and serve him. He is just and righteous. O! praise his holy name. I do believe most surely that we have the truth. But we ought not to hold it in unrighteousness, for such as serve him must serve him in Spirit and in truth. Jesus has said not one jot or tittle shall fail. It must come to pass.

We need not expect any better days till Christ comes; for wicked men shall wax worse and worse. The wicked shall not understand; but the wise shall understand. So said the beloved prophet Daniel. This is our day. While the testimony of those men of God are speaking out, we ought to take the more earnest heed lest we let those things slip that we have heard, for if those things that were spoken by angels were steadfast, how much more when the Son of God speaks to us from heaven. The blessed Jesus has told us all things, and it is our duty to believe and obey. O my God! are these the beginnings of the sorrows that the Gentile world is to feel just prior to the second coming and kingdom of our Lord? I believe it fully. The hotter the battle the sooner deliverance will come.

I have only to say in closing, comfort one another with words of comfort. The Lord is at hand. WM. S. MILLER.

From Elizabeth M. Clark.

BRO. GRANT:—I am glad that I am identified with those that are awake to the signs of the times in which we live, and are "looking for that blessed hope and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ," for "unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time, without sin unto salvation." The death, resurrection, ascension and return of our Savior, with the resurrection from the dead, was the burden of the apostles' preaching, and although they were persecuted for proclaiming these truths, yet they rejoiced that they were counted worthy to suffer for Christ's sake.

Why is it that the nominal churches, at the present day, are silent, with regard to these important truths? Do they not in rejecting the second coming of Christ, very much resemble the Jewish church with regard to his first advent?

"Watchman! tell us of the night,
What its signs of promise are?"

I was thinking of writing something about our meeting. The late conference in this place has left a healthy and vigorous influence on the minds of the people. We had important practical instruction, adapted for these times of peril, with earnest exhortations well calculated to arouse us to activity in the service of the Lord. Truly it was meat in due season. Affairs looked very unpromising here before this meeting. Prayer-meetings were neglected; now they are crowded with attentive listeners. The children have been blessed, and are taking hold of the work in earnest; backsliders have been reclaimed, and are now rejoicing in the blessed hope. Sinners have been converted; more are seeking salvation. We expect a general turning to the Lord in this place. May the work continue. ELIZABETH M. CLARK.

DEAR FRIENDS:—I am very much interested in your paper. I did not know what kind of papers they were till a lady gave one to Mother, and I thought I would like to read it. Before I got through, I saw what an awful condition my soul was in. I am a backslider. A year ago I attended the meetings of Peleg C. Rodman. Before the meetings closed, I found peace in the Savior. It lasted about three weeks. Those three weeks were the happiest of my life. I ask an interest in your prayers. Yours in hope of a reconciliation with God. LIZZIE S. BICKNELL.

St. Hilaire, C. E., June 29, via. Montreal.—A fearful accident occurred on the Grand Trunk Railroad this morning. An emigrant train, consisting of eleven cars with 354 German emigrants, went over the Beloil Bridge early this morning. Thirty-four bodies had been recovered and between thirty and forty taken out badly injured.

☞ The largest flour mill in the State of New York was burned on Tuesday at Minetto, Oswego county. The loss on buildings is reported to be $200,000, besides the destruction of 15,000 bushels of wheat, 1800 barrels of flour, 1800 tons of feed and 20,000 empty barrels.

Obituaries.

CHARLES H. WELLCOME.

Died in Yarmouth, Me., June 13th, 1864, of diphtheria, Charles H., son of I. C. and M. D. Wellcome, aged twelve years and six months.

In recording the death of our dear and affectionate son, we wish to note a few items of interest of no ordinary character, of much encouragement to us in our afflictions. Charlie was of an amiable disposition, very affectionate and liberal, a great reader, had read more volumes of books and papers than any one I ever knew of his age. Was always glad to see the brethren and sisters, loved the Sunday School dearly, always hailed the weekly visits of the Crisis and the Herald, as well as the papers for children, which he took, with great delight. Yet he was not a christian, not without his faults. We had always freely conversed with him, and instructed him on christianity, its hope and blessings, on death and the resurrection, and prayed for his salvation. June 9th he was taken suddenly with diphtheria in its worst form. I was absent. His mother talked and prayed with him, he immediately gave himself to the Lord, confessed his sins, obtained mercy, and rested in peace. When I returned next day, he told me he had found mercy, and meant to live a christian if he got well, but thought he should die. He would often kneel by his bed and pray, ask me and others to pray, conversed freely and much on the Savior, his coming, the resurrection and kingdom. With the best medical attendants he believed he should die, said he had rather die than live and be wicked; believed the Lord knew it was better that he should die now. Jesus was precious, he loved him. Said, "I have been very wicked, but the Lord has forgiven me. Will you forgive me?" The day he died he called for his books and toys, gave directions one by one to give them to certain persons of his associates, with a message to each to prepare to meet him in the kingdom. Sent a message to the Sunday School. He attended the Methodist school, as we have none. Gave his money to the missionary cause, part to the Methodist, part to the Advent. Dictated a letter for the "Young Pilgrim," concerning his conversion and death, then seemed to rest as though his work was done. Soon he said, "Father, will you tell me, when you know I am dying?" I promised. As the doctor came to administer to him, he said, "It will do no good. I shall die, but do as you think best." He exhorted those that came in to see him, to be christians and meet him in the kingdom. His patience and calmness seemed perfect, only excepting his earnest desire to die that day. When I saw he was dying, I told him. It was cheering news. He asked if we would be in danger of his disease, if he kissed us. We mutually exchanged kisses, as he repeated mildly and affectionately, "Good-bye, mother; good-bye, father," and with a smile, waved his hand to others standing by, "good-bye all;" asked us each to kiss his little brother Frank for him, lay back, folded his arms, sung a verse in a low whisper, as his voice was gone, said, "I am happy; Jesus is precious, hallelujah, hallelujah!" and thus fell asleep in Jesus. In our grief and sadness we are greatly comforted in the Lord with the assurance that Charlie sleeps in Jesus, and will come forth in the resurrection of the just. Funeral services were conducted by Bro. York, who spoke words of instruction to the people, and of special comfort to us.

I. C. WELLCOME.

ELIZABETH R. REDFERN.

Died in Montreal, C. E., June 2nd, 1864, Sr. Elizabeth R. Redfern, aged twenty-nine years and ten months.

Sr. Redfern was among the number who braved the frowns of the world and charges of "infidelity," when Bro. Grant visited Montreal last winter. She saw the truth, and, with her husband, embraced it, and died in the blessed hope of sleeping in Jesus, and having a part in the first resurrection. Her sufferings were severe, but so devoted was she to God, that when others without hope would have groaned she prayed; and, when her pains allowed, she would sing a favorite hymn. A short time before she died, she sung—and asked her husband to read 1 Cor. 15. While he was reading, he observed that she was inclined to sleep, and told her that he had better stop. "No," she said, "read on." They were her last words.

"I saw," he says, "that she was in a beautiful sleep, and would not disturb her, hoping she would recover; but I soon heard the death rattle in her throat, and all was over." She is the first of the little church here who has yielded to the tyrant death. The occasion of her funeral was improved by the writer, in considering Job's hope of the resurrection. She leaves a husband and an infant child. She is "Asleep in Jesus, blessed sleep,

From which none ever wake to weep."

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Liverpool, June 16th, Queenstown 16th.

The pirate Alabama arrived at Cherbourg June 11th. She was admitted to free pratique, and landed forty prisoners, the crews of two Federal vessels, names not mentioned. The Alabama was to be permitted to make extensive repairs at Cherbourg.

The prospects of peace are as remote as ever. The Germans continue to hold out.

The French government has issued an imperial decree, according to which rice in grain and rice in straw may be admitted into France until further orders free of duty, coming from any country and under any flag.

The Paris correspondent of the Cork Reporter says:

"The almost exclusive subject of conversation at the Bourse to-day was an accident said to have happened to the Emperor yesterday at Fontainbleau. It is said that while rowing on the lake in the pleasure grounds he fell into the water, and that he received an accidental wound on the head from a boat which pushed forward to pick him up. Owing to the absurd laws against 'false news,' none of the evening papers dared to make the slightest allusion to this, which is really the leading topic of the day. It is to be presumed that the Emperor cannot have been seriously injured, because it is announced that he is coming to Paris for a ministerial council to-morrow.

DOMESTIC.

Cairo, Ill., June 26th. Memphis papers say that on the morning of the 22d inst., a detachment of Magruder's men, six hundred strong, attacked two companies of the 17th Iowa, stationed near the mouth of White river. After a severe fight the rebels were repulsed with a loss of twenty-four killed and wounded. Our loss was one killed and five wounded. Our forces fought desperately, repelling several charges and drove the rebels from the field.

It is believed the enemy's lines have been somewhat contracted since Friday, and the opinion prevails that a force has been sent to meet and drive back Hunter.

Almost nightly attacks are made on some part of the picket line in front of the 9th corps, but finding our men on the alert and ready for them, the rebels quickly retire.

New York, June 28th. The Herald's Fortress Monroe correspondent, writing on the 24th, says news from Gen. Palmer's expedition into North Carolina to destroy the Wilmington and North Carolina Railroad, represents it as meeting with unlooked-for success. The command destroyed the road and an immense quantity of government stores, captured a large number of prisoners, and inflicted much more damage. The country is stripped of white male inhabitants.

Louisville, Ky., June 29th. The Medical Director of Gen. Sherman's army telegraphs that our entire loss will not exceed fifteen hundred. Col. Watkins was not captured at Lafayette, and Col. Faulkner, reported captured there, has arrived at Chattanooga.

New York, June 30th. The Herald's New Orleans correspondent, writing June 21st, says the archives of Louisiana have been found buried near Baton Rouge and a portion have arrived here. In addition important documents, giving the names of prominent men doing business with the rebels, were found.

Large amounts of gold are arriving at New Orleans. It is suspected that much of it is smuggled through to the rebels. $5,000 in gold has been seized en route for rebeldom.

A rebel order from Richmond prohibits the burning of cotton. It is to be seized to procure clothing for soldiers and munitions of war. The planters are to be allowed fifteen cents per pound.

Our troops at Morganza had embarked in transports for some important expedition.

New York, June 30th. The Tribune's Washington dispatch says a wounded soldier from the Wilderness rebel hospital in Locust Grove, reports that the rebels are moving all the wounded that can walk to Richmond. About thirty, who were unable to walk, were left with the Union surgeon. He states that upward of eighty out of 238 of our wounded died for want of attention and nourishment. A farm house in the neighborhood was filled with our wounded and were kindly treated. The dead of both armies remain unburied.

New York, June 30th. The Herald's Paris (France) correspondent, writing June 14th, says there has been a general exodus of Southerners from that metropolis for England, to help in a great movement which they hope will aid materially in bringing about a recognition of their bogus government.

The rebel iron-clads would soon sail from Bordeaux under Dutch colors, and probably be handed over to the rebels in the East India waters.

Washington, June 30th. Pres. Lincoln, at 11 1-2 o'clock this morning, sent to the Senate the nomination of David Tod, of Ohio, to be Secretary of the Treasury in place of Mr. Chase, resigned.

The World's Washington dispatch says rebel deserters continue to come into Gen. Butler's lines. They report that the rebel officers and men are demoralized. Lee had sent two brigades of cavalry and an infantry force to operate against Gen. Hunter.

There are about six thousand of our wounded at City Point; most of them will be sent to New York.

The endurance of the rebel troops is giving way. Forced marches to defend different points menaced by our cavalry has broken down and used up a large number of men. Diseases of various kinds prevail among them to a fearful extent. It is estimated that Lee has between forty thousand and fifty thousand sick on his hands, whom he finds it is impossible to remove beyond the scene of conflict, besides a population of 200,000 dependent upon him for food.

The Herald's City Point dispatch of the 27th says Gen. Sheridan's loss in the recent fight is less than 250.

The Washington Star says that since Gen. Grant crossed the Rapidan he has captured over thirty stand of rebel colors and about seventeen thousand prisoners, not including those captured within the last four or five days, while his own loss in prisoners is less than one-third that number.

The Herald's Washington dispatch says the report that our cavalry had destroyed all the railroads leading out of Richmond is confirmed. Gen. Butler's guns are reported to cover the Richmond and Petersburg Road so that Lee cannot use it.

Washington, June 30. News brought from the army by an intelligent gentleman connected with the Christian Commission is highly encouraging. He states that the defeat of the enemy or his retreat from Petersburg may be confidently looked for at an early day, and that when the country see the results of the movements now taking place, they will applaud the military genius and executive ability of Gen. Grant more than ever.

An army correspondent writing from before Petersburg, says that a large number of the South Carolina prisoners brought in one day last week, are boys from fourteen to sixteen years of age.

New York, July 2. The Tribune's headquarters dispatch of the 29th ult. says Capt. Whittaker, of Gen. Wilson's staff, and forty men, left Wilson's column of Ream's Station, to inform Gen. Meade of their situation. They succeeded in fighting their way through the rebel ranks, losing twenty-five men.

Up to the time of reaching the Danville Railroad Wilson met with no opposition. He at once set to work destroying the roads, running in four directions, and the bridges for forty miles. Thirty miles of the Petersburg and Lynchburg road was also destroyed.

July 3. The Herald's special Washington dispatch says the President will call for half a million of men immediately after the adjournment of Congress.

Baltimore, July 3. At daybreak intelligence reached headquarters at Martinsburg to the effect that the rebels were approaching in three separate columns, one by way of the turnpike towards Shepherdstown, the second towards Martinsburg, not far from the line of the railroad, and the third west of it. Gen. Sigel at once prepared to check this movement of the enemy. The troops were drawn up, and at 5 o'clock fighting commenced in the neighborhood of Bunker Hill and continued four or five hours, during which his cavalry fell slowly back to the infantry support. Ascertaining that the force of the enemy was largely superior to his own, Sigel determined to evacuate Martinsburg, which was done in good order.

The trains and property on the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad were safely removed from the neighborhood.

A force of the enemy also came by way of North Mountain with a view of flanking our forces, but in this they were disappoinred.

A dispatch received at 5 o'clock this evening states that fighting has been going on all day near Leetown, about ten miles from Harper's Ferry and three miles to the left of the railroad, between a force of the enemy that was moving in the direction of the Shepardston pike and the command which Sigel had left there to occupy the place. Both forces engaged were small, and it is officially reported that our troops there had repelled successfully all attacks.

Sigel holds Maryland Heights and Harper's Ferry. There is great excitement at Hagerstown and Harper's Ferry. It is thought the strength of the enemy is greatly exaggerated.

GARABALDI'S RELIGION. The London Advertiser says:—

"In the Pastoral of Cardinal Wiseman, read in all the Roman Catholic churches in the metropolis on Sunday last, Garabaldi is spoken of as an Infidel. We speak from private information of the most undoubted kind—from the testimony, at a time—when we say that he is a christian in the higher and holier acceptation of the term. He is a firm believer in the great truths of evangelical religion, and speaks with especial emphasis when he refers to his firm faith in the atonement and intercession of Christ, and to his sole reliance for salvation on the merits and meditation of him who died on the cross. He has written a number of beautiful hymns, full alike of deep devotional feeling and sound theology. It was only a fortnight before he left Caprera, on his visit to this country, that he made one of his most intimate lady friends read, on five successive mornings, those chapters of the gospel of St. John which record the arrest, the trial and the crucifixion of Jesus; and while this lady was reading the affecting narrative, he frequently made remarks which not only showed how deeply he was moved by it, but which proved his christianity to be equally enlightened and devotional. It may be well to add that in saying this we speak from the testimony of the lady who read the chapters in question to Garibaldi, as given to us from her own lips. We can further state, on equally undoubted authority, that Garibaldi is remarkable for his reverence of the Sabbath day, and that, as one proof of this, he refused, when in London, to accompany some of the highest in the land, though urgently solicited to do so, on a visit to the Zoological Gardens on a Sunday—solely because he would have regarded such a visit as a violation of the sanctity of the Sabbath."

THE CROPS IN NEW YORK.—We are glad to hear that one State at least is not afflicted with the severe drouth which is prevailing so generally throughout the North. The Syracuse (N. Y.) Courier of the 23d says:

"From nearly every county and township of the State we hear the most encouraging reports of the crop prospects. The grass is unusually heavy and oats very fine; and if nothing occurs to mar the present promise, the harvest of hay and oats will be very abundant. A greatly increased area has been planted in corn, and the conditions have thus far been favorable to a large yield of that staple. The other staple grains are also doing well. Of fruit there is the prospect of the greatest abundance, with the exception of cherries, which have suffered considerably from the wet weather. Strawberries have also been damaged in some sections of the State by the wet, but as a general thing an immense area has been devoted to their culture, and the crop is enormous. The peach crop will be far above the average, and the minor fruits, berries of all kinds, will also be most abundant. Many of our farmers are growing large amounts of flax and tobacco, and if no unfavorable circumstances interfere there will be a large crop of both."

☞ The drouth is so severe in some portions of Northern Minnesota that in many places there is no prospect that any crops will be raised, and the farmers have gone to digging ginseng to provide means of support. The central and Southern portions of the State have not suffered.

A PAINFULLY INTERESTING COUPLE.—At the Union Volunteer Refreshment Saloons are two soldiers maimed in a terrible manner. One of them, named Peris, lost both legs by a shot from a rebel battery at Charleston, and his brother, we believe, fell dead by his side. The other man, named Smith, lost both his arms by a shell from Gettysburg. They are life-guests at the hospital in question. They will end their days together. No man and wife were ever more close companions. The legless man feeds, dresses and attends the man without arms. The latter goes every Sunday to church. The man without legs cannot do so. His companion wishes to purchase for him a velocipede, that they may go to church together. They have not the money. Neither has home or relatives able to do any thing for them. The poor fellows are cheerful, even merry, in their terrible misfortune. They never, at any time, have been known to repine at their calamity.—Baltimore American.

EARTHQUAKE AT SEA.—Capt. Sparrow, of ship Cowper, at this port from France, states that on the 5th of June, at 5.30 A. M., Lat. 30 N., Lon. 39.35 W., was suddenly startled by a heavy rumbling sound, and a shock under the bows of the ship, as if she had struck something, and was passing over it with a grating sound under her keel. In about three minutes after an explosion was heard like the booming of heavy cannon. It was nearly calm at the time, and hazy on the horizon, the sound coming from the direction of the Azores, the island of Flores being 540 miles distant.—Again at 7.45, while at breakfast, experienced another loud report, rattling the blocks and spars aloft, and producing a trembling sensation in the hull of the ship.

BATTLE AT LOST MOUNTAIN.—On the 16th inst. Gen. Hooker attacked the rebel position on Lost Mountain and after a severe struggle carried three lines of intrenchments, capturing 1000 prisoners and twelve cannons, together with 2000 small arms. None of our men were captured, but the loss in killed and wounded was 1200. Although unable to drive the rebels from the mountain, which is an exceedingly strong position and a great obstacle to a flank movement by Gen. Sherman, the ground gained was held. At the same time Gen. Schofield attacked and forced the enemy from Pine Mountain, which he held for several hours, but was obliged finally to relinquish in consequence of being exposed to a galling fire from other rebel positions. He took 300 prisoners and two guns.

A REMARKABLE MARRIAGE.—Miss Mandana Tileston, daughter of the late Cornelius Tileston of Williamsburg, Mass., was married a few weeks since, at Oxford, O., to Rev. Calvin Fairbank, after an engagement of thirteen years. Preparations for their wedding were being made twelve and a half years ago, when Mr. Fairbank was imprisoned in Kentucky for assisting slaves to escape, and he has just been released. During all this time Miss Tileston did not relax her efforts to secure his release.

☞ Orders have been received at the Navy Yard, Portsmouth, to build three large steamers. Work on two of them has already commenced.

☞ The officers sent by the French government to examine into and report upon the condition and management of the Federal armies are enjoying the hospitality of Gen. Meade.

☞ William Pitt Fessenden of Maine, has been confirmed as Secretary of Treasury.

☞ The Pittsburg Sanitary Fair has netted $300,000.

Conference.

The Lord willing, there will be a conference in the Town Hall, Holliston, Mass., commencing Saturday morning, July 9th, and continuing over the Sabbath, July 10th. Bro. H. L. Hastings has engaged to come, and we hope it will be so that Bro. H. F. Carpenter, or Bro. Grant, and other good ministering brethren will be present. It is expected that during the services of Sunday there will be an ordination. This is a new field, and a new church of between forty and fifty members, and they most cheerfully invite the brethren and sisters in this section who would like to share in their hospitalities, and be satisfied with plain, wholesome food, and such accommodations as we can provide for them, together with the plain Bible truths which they may hear, to come. Preachers, and others who love hobbies, fables, and strife about words to no profit, more than they love the near coming and kingdom of Jesus Christ and the salvation of sinners, we shall find no fault if they stay away.

The object of this meeting is to honor and glorify God, instead of ourselves; to comfort, exhort, and encourage one another in well doing. Those coming Saturday on the cars will come to Framingham, where they will take the Milford Branch R. R. for this place, stopping at Holliston, instead of East Holliston, five miles south of Framingham.

In behalf of the church, H. K. FLAGG.

Notice.

I intend, as the Lord may direct, to visit the scattered ones in the Canadian Provinces, and proclaim as best I can the truths of the coming kingdom. I am willing to go anywhere where good can be done, into back settlements, large places, or small, wherever there are a few, or none, who are waiting for the coming King. I shall travel as I can, on foot, when I can go no other way, and preach where there is an open door, or one to be opened. I am almost without means to do so, but I shall trust in the Lord; and if there are any waiting ones who wish to hear the message, the hour of his judgment is come," and will write to me, directing latters to BOX 231, MONTREAL, C. E. I will try to visit them in the name of the Lord.

L. C. MCKINSTRY.

Wisconsin Annual Conference.

The "Advent Christian Conference" will hold its yearly session in connection with the Wisconsin Campmeeting, at Okee, Columbia Co., Wis., twenty miles north west from Madison, by the way of Sodi, beginning September 11th, 1864.

Let every church send delegates, and every minister be in attendance if possible; otherwise be sure to report by letter. Churches and ministers who have not yet united, should be sure to do so this year, that we may move in order and harmony, and consequently with greater strength for good. Delegates should bring letters of appointment from churches, and ministers with whom we are not acquainted should bring letters of commendation.

Letters may be sent to me at Baraboo, Sauk Co., Wis. W. SHELDON, Secretary of Conf.

A collection will be taken up for home mission purposes, that the gospel may be preached in the highways and hedges. PETER S. W. DEYO.

Alton Campmeeting.

A campmeeting will be held at Alton, N. H., to commence Aug. 29th, and hold over the following Sunday. Also a meeting on the ground Sunday, the 28th. Particulars hereafter.

HERE IS MY HEART.

"My son, give me thine heart."—PROV. 23: 26.

Here is my heart! my God, I give it thee;
I heard thee call and say,
"Not to the world, my child, but unto me,"—
I heard, and will obey.
Here is love's offering to my King,
Which in glad sacrifice I bring.
Here is my heart!

My God will not despise;
Vainly and long I sought to make it pure,
To meet thy searching eyes:
Corrupted first in Adam's fall,
The stains of sin pollute it all.
My guilty heart!

Here is my heart! my heart so hard before,
Now by thy grace made meet;
Yet bruised and wearied, it can only pour
Its anguish at thy feet;
It groans beneath the weight of sin,
It sighs salvation's joy to win.
My mourning heart!

Here is my heart! in Christ its longings end,
Near to his cross it draws;
It says, "Thou art my portion, O my Friend!
Thy blood my ransom was."
And in the Savior it has found
What blessedness and peace abound.
My trusting heart!

Here is my heart! oh! Holy Spirit, come,
Its nature to renew,
And consecrate it wholly as thy home,
A temple fair and true.
Teach it to love and serve thee more,
To fear thee, trust thee, and adore.
My cleansed heart!

Here is my heart! it trembles to draw near
The glory of thy throne;
Give it the shining robe thy servants wear,
Of righteousness thine own:
Its pride and folly chase away,
And all its vanity, I pray.
My humbled heart!

Here is my heart! teach it, O Lord, to cling
In gladness unto thee;
And in the day of sorrow still to sing,
"Welcome, my God's decree."
Believing, all its journey through,
That thou art wise, and just, and true.
My waiting heart!

Here is my heart! O Friend of friends, be near,
To make each tempter fly;
And when my latest foe I wait with fear,
Give me the victory!
Gladly on thy love reposing,
Let me say when life is closing,
"Here is my heart!"

For the World's Crisis.

FRIENDS!

Being convinced that there is no remedy for diseased mankind—since Christ came to save the world, which is not yet complete—except the life-producing power of God, as was manifested through his servants from the beginning up to this time, and that no growth takes place where this power does not exist, or departs,—I felt somewhat pleased that there are some in this dark land who are looking up and forward to a time of life and strength. Being further convinced that the happiness and salvation of each one, and all as a whole, draws to completion only in the measure as the general darkness and death is overcome, I find, upon these grounds, myself called upon to make known to those who are interested in the welfare of the world, the discoveries (if I may express myself so) that I have made in this work.

In this lamentable condition of the nation there has been, as yet, none able to show the way of success. The people were in deep sleep and death. Their leaders were blind; therefore all fell into the mire; blind,—why? The word of God, as found on printed pages, was enough among them, no, but blind because it was not alive within them. The life of God was not there. Theories are not life; neither can they give it. They are good, as far as they go, where life once exists.

I wish to be far from creating any emotions or feelings that would hinder the Spirit in its struggle upward into the realms of true liberty. . . . It is the universal welfare or woe that I wish to deal with; the former of which can be had on certain conditions and would restore the world to what it should be; and the latter has come unawares upon the land and approaches every one, so that every one's life is endangered, yes, is at stake, which is the dearest thing we have. What is to be done?

The engagement in a labor spiritual, mental and physical, towards universal welfare and prosperity, towards God's kingdom upon earth, characterized the lights and saviors of the ages, of which Jesus is and remains the first, the greatest and supreme. The prophets before him prepared him the way, he was in their way; the apostles had likewise the same spirit. They concerned themselves sincerely with the conditions of lasting peace and sound prosperity, and, in doing so, found favor in the sight of God and man, even down to these days; for this age is living on the earnings of those men. But this will not do any longer; it is the ruin of the land, and has brought it upon us. We must labor to spiritually, mentally and physically at that business that God wants done, and at which the prophets, Christ and the apostles made up their earnings, their capital, which truly remains yet and keeps increasing with them; but to modern christianity it has become inaccessible; the Bible is a sealed book, as I have said above.

From this inactive state every one must be aroused that wants to live and increase, or poverty, misery and death will surely overtake us. As far and wide as the world is, a business must be carried on, for misery is existing in like measure; plans to overtake it must be laid, and then we shall involuntarily unite with the prophets, Christ and the apostles. Upon this platform only successful labor can take place; upon this platform it is possible for friends from far and near to unite their efforts and to build one another up.

The same work therefore of the lights and reformers of the past, must also in this age be taken up and carried forward, and while doing so, life, light and strength will be required. Then again, and only with those that do so, the fruits of the spirit of God will be brought forth as natural products. Then, and only with such the promises of God will and can be completed. His Spirit will come with power. Then the leaders will have light within. Heroes will grow up; as written in Zechariah concerning the princes of Judah. The sick will be healed in the right manner. Darkness and death will yield, and evil spirits will be tormented at the presence of such men.

And in the presence of these realities we are yet inactive and powerless! although looking forward and making known the speedy approach of God's kingdom. This will not do; this is not sufficient. The more important part of the work has not yet been taken up; the proper work of man, the preparation of the way for that event is to the greatest extent yet untouched. Neither will or can it be an honor to any one, if he is merely on the lookout for what others are going to do.

Christ cannot use such as kings and priests, judges, rulers and elders in his kingdom; they will not receive any honor nor praise, but only pay according to their labor, and for their negligence will be made accountable, and then they will be put into their proper sphere. His coming will only be delayed by neglecting to prepare him the way. For where are the institutions of learning in which young men are instructed in the manners and ways of God's kingdom, in the laws and regulations thereof? For such young men there would be hope, that they would get an office in his kingdom. But here in this land the young men are going on yet quietly in the same way they did go. They have yet the great republic for their ideal, and are preparing to obtain an office, a position, in this structure, which God is energetically removing and all that is therein, if it is not speedily rebuilt after the pattern of God's kingdom.

I ask again, where are the institutions in which young men and women are raised up as prophets, as was the case in the time of Samuel, Elijah, Elisha, Christ, Paul; in which they would grow up heroes, with whom the Lord could dwell; vessels of the spirit of the Lord, who could impart to the sick life and strength as they approach them? so that the advice of the apostle James could be made use of—"If there is any one sick among you, let him call for the elders of the church," etc.

It is true, uneasiness is being created in this time of visitation, and that leads a good share to the observation of the prophetic word. That is good so far as it goes. It is the beginning of a better time; but it does not begin to be sufficient. The substance of what the prophetic word leads to, and which alone gives credit, is yet a great way ahead. But an earnest pursuance must take place. For only in this light, which comes gradually, while seeking after the kingdom of God, one is enabled to see where we are,—that as a nation, a people, a government, we are at an end, except the people, one and all, take the matter immediately in hand and transform and regenerate the bulk after the pattern of the kingdom of God. We see that now is meeting us the greatest trial ever existing,—Spiritualism, which arises like a flood, consumes like a famine and penetrates like poison. It is the consummation of all wrong tendencies since the beginning, combined, organized and systematized, and backed up and lead on by an almost innumerable host of erring, yes, malicious spirits. What can stand against this hurricane? Nothing but men filled with the living power of God, as I have said above.

In this light the Scriptures are plain and are becoming more so; where it is not, there is darkness and groping and stumbling and falling, as it is at the present time, in spite of the abundance of knowledge and discussion.

VOLUNTEERS FOR THE GRAND ARMY.

(FROM A SCOTCH TRACT.)

"Behold, now is the acceptable time; behold, now is the day of salvation."—2 COR. 6: 2.

WANTED IMMEDIATELY.—For the service of Jehovah, the King of kings, and Lord of lords, who will himself reward every man according to his work,—glory, honor and peace to every man that doeth good, . . . wrath and anguish to every man that doeth evil. People of all descriptions are wanted, and every one may depend on being promoted according to their abilities, gifts and graces; the young, the old, the lame, the blind, the rich, the poor, the learned and ignorant, whose hearts beat high at the sound of the gospel trumpet, and are willing to leave father and mother, or wife, or children, or lands, for Christ's sake, and to enter themselves into Jehovah's service, and heartily engage in the war against the great adversary of God and man, will meet with suitable encouragement, good wages, and all may apply who are willing to learn the heavenly exercise, and submit to the rules of the royal enemy. (But such as refuse instruction, and do not choose the fear of the Lord, but are stubborn and disobedient, will neither be acknowledged as soldiers nor servants, and are rewarded as such.)

For particulars, inquire at the Sacred Oracles, or of any of the humble, faithful, old, experienced veterans and servants of God. They are to be met with at the rendezvous, the sign of which is heart-searching, self-abasing and Christ-exalting preaching. All letters sincerely indicated and addressed to the throne of grace, in the name of Immanuel, the chief Captain, will be duly answered. A character from their late master will not be required. And for their further encouragement, each volunteer shall receive the royal bounty, being one hundred times more than they forsake, and as soon as they join the grand army, if approved of by the regulating officer, they shall receive new clothes, arms, accoutrements, or such implements as are most suitable for their station—whether officers, soldiers, engineers, pioneers, mariners, sailors, hewers of wood or drawers of water.

But as the pay of their army is great, and all nations honorable, so every transgression shall receive a just recompense of reward, and deserters punished with the utmost severity. Therefore every volunteer before he engageth himself to serve in this glorious and victorious army, is desired to read the following:

ARTICLES OF WAR.

Art. 1. They must abjure their old master, the devil, the grand enemy and his adherents, with all pomps and vanities of this wicked world; all the sinful lusts of the flesh, so that they will not be led by them, nor hold any treasonable correspondence with them.

Art. 2. They must be stripped of their filthy garments, which they have by nature, be washed in the fountain opened for sin, and wear the badge and livery of Jesus Christ, the Captain of their salvation, which is the most beautiful and rich uniform ever devised.

Art. 3. Being redeemed from their vain conversation they must hear and read and watch and pray, and do the will of their Lord, being in due subjection to their Captain, living peaceably among themselves, and doing good unto all men, especially unto the household of faith, following holiness, without which they will not be permitted to see the Lord.

Art. 4. They must put on the armor of God, and every day exercise faith, patience, meekness, gentleness, temperance and brotherly kindness, and besides all this they must put on charity, which will make them more like Christ, their chief Captain, and by which they will be able to put to flight all the armies of aliens, and quench all the fiery darts of the devil.

Art. 5. In order that they may be prepared against every circumstance and things which possibly may befall them during the war, they must learn resignation, and be willing to suffer persecution for righteousness' sake. This will sometimes appear the hardest part of their duty, as their Captain will not allow them to revenge themselves; but should they be called worthy, they shall have reason to rejoice, for great is their reward in heaven.

Art. 6. But the fearful and unbelieving, drunkards, adulterers and Sabbath-breakers, and swearers and all liars, who will not take counsel, or amend upon reproof, will, after a reasonable trial, be discarded, put out of the army, and cast into outer darkness, where there is weeping and wailing and gnashing of teeth. For if when their Captain calls, they will not answer,—if when he lift up his standard, they will not regard, if when he commands, they will not obey, they treasure up to themselves wrath against the day of wrath. Tremendous day! when Heaven's court martial sits to judge with equity the human race; who then shall stand acquitted before a just and holy God? "Be not deceived, God is not mocked, for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap."

Mark well the following exhortation:—See then that ye walk circumspectly, not as fools, but as wise, redeeming the time; and be not drunk with wine, wherein is excess, but be filled with the Spirit. Let no corrupt communication proceed out of your mouth, neither filthiness, nor foolish talking, nor jesting, but rather giving of thanks. Above all things, my brethren, swear not at all, for because of these things, the wrath of God cometh upon the children of disobedience. For they who do such things shall not inherit the kingdom of God; but the righteous shall shine as the stars in the firmament! For thus saith the Prince of the armies of God. "To him that overcometh will I give to sit down with me on my throne, even as I have overcome and am sat down with my Father on his throne." "And they shall walk with me in white, for they are worthy."

Now, therefore, is the accepted time to obtain honor, riches and immortal glory, and whosoever will, let him come and take of the water of life freely!—Com. by John Taylor.

For the World's Crisis.

THE TWO-HORNED BEAST.

"And I beheld another beast coming up out of the earth (ascending out of the land); and he had two horns like a lamb."

In the first verse of this chapter he "saw a beast ascending out of the sea." Observe, one is in complete contradistinction to the other. In fact, this is the only beast that arises out of the land in symbolic prophecy. May we understand unmistakably what this beast symbolized? I think we may now understand it.

God must be uniform in presenting symbols to the minds of his prophets; or he must explain every one; otherwise we could not understand him. We learn, in Dan. 7: 2, 3, God's mind upon this subject. "Daniel spake and said, I saw in my vision by night, and behold the four winds of the heaven strove upon the great sea, and four great beasts came up from the sea, diverse one from the other." 17th verse,—"These great beasts, which are four, are four kings that shall arise out of the earth." We understand these to be the four great universal monarchies of earth; not cotemporaneous, but successive, one coming up upon the downfall of the other (its predecessor), which the sequel shows has been produced by civil commotions among men. I understand these to be the same as found in the second chapter of Daniel, which extended as far as the beasts and fowls went (over the known inhabitable world at that day). Observe, the fourth was to be divided, but it is the kingdom still; and we can have no other kingdom upon that soil until the kingdom of God shall be established.

Now John's Revelations must be in complete harmony with Daniel, for Daniel's instruction extended to the kingdom of God. See Rev. 13: 1,—"And I stood upon the sand of the sea, and saw a beast rise up out of the sea." Of course, then, this beast (the leopard beast) comes up by the same means as those of Dan. 7 (by civil or political commotions among men). The naked leopard beast can be nothing more or less than the eleventh horn of Dan. 7, and the seven heads and ten horns civil power coupled with him, which are unknown in Daniel. To my mind this is one of the reasons why this symbol was presented to John, and another to fix the chronology of the two-horned beast and his work. Why say that the leopard beast is the same as the eleventh horn? Because his characteristic time and work are the same. See Dan. 7: 21,—"I beheld, and the same horn (the eleventh) made war with the saints and prevailed against them." Compare Rev. 13: 7,—"And it was given unto him to make war with the saints and to overcome them." The time is the same, as we may see by Dan. 7: 25. Comp. with Rev. 12: 14 and 6, where we find that a time, times and half a time are 1260 years; just equal to the time in Rev. 13: 5,—"And power was given unto him (the leopard beast) to make war forty-two months (1260 days—years)."

Now it will not do to make the Greek Empire answer to the leopard beast. The Greek Empire cannot be anything more or less than one of the legs of the iron kingdom before the ten were formed. See Dan. 2: 33,—"His legs of iron, his feet part of iron and part of clay." Neither can the leopard beast take his stand in prophecy, until the iron or fourth kingdom has been divided up into just ten kingdoms. Dan. 7: 8,—"I considered the horn, and behold, there came up among them another little horn, before whom there were three of the first horns plucked up by the roots." This we have proved to be the same as the naked beast. And I observe right here that I consider it out of the power of man to show any place in the world's history where these symbols take this stand in prophecy (and their time commence) only between 519 and 538.

Now to our text, 11th verse,—"And I beheld another beast (which presupposes a previous one), and he had two horns." Mark, these horns are not crowned, neither are they said to be kings; but I understand them to be a distinguishing mark by which this beast is to be known from all other beasts. 12th,—"And he (the two-horned beast) exerciseth all the power of the first (first in point of time) beast before (in the sight or presence of) him, and causeth the earth and them that dwell therein to worship (to do reverence, or homage, by prostration) the first beast, whose deadly wound was healed."

Now, observe, there is a very important landmark connected with this text (to wit): he ascends out of the earth as if by magic, and not by civil commotion among men; and at the time he comes into prophetic note has two horns just started up. And further, he does his work in the presence of the previous beast and at the time when his deadly wound is healed. The beasts are now cotemporaneous, but they have not been heretofore. Now I say we are obliged to travel off of Roman soil for this beast, for the whole habitable East is occupied by Daniel's ten-horned beast. GUY W. RATHBUN.

NO HOPE IN CHRIST.

No hope in Christ; how shall we stand
Before him in that day,
When shall be gathered at his bar
Nations in dread array?

No hope in Christ; how could we bear
To meet his angry frown,
And hear the dreadful word "depart"—
When we to judgment come?

No hope beyond this vale of tears—
Ah! gloomy thought indeed.
Oh! give us Christ, dispel our fears,
And us to heaven lead.

O sinner! come, while there is hope;
Why will ye stay behind?
Come now to Christ, there still is room,
He's bidden all mankind.

The committee reported the following Circular Address, which was adopted:—

CIRCULAR ADDRESS.

The Advent Christian Conference of Illinois, to all of like precious faith, grace, mercy, and peace be multiplied to you, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Dearly Beloved:—Since our last session in Ionia, we have seen much to encourage us in the awakening of many to look on our faith and hope as scriptural and apostolic; and some have been made to feel their need of a Savior, and have consecrated themselves to Christ as obedient children. Our brethren and sisters have not labored in vain in the Lord. It is but a short time since our conference was organized by a few persons under most discouraging circumstances. But the Lord has prospered us and continually added to our numbers and strength, both in the ministry and the membership.

For many years the Adventists of the west, scattered over a widely extended territory, have had little or no means of organization. But of late there seems to be a gathering spirit, and that spirit is organizing us into churches and conferences, leading to a union of strength, and purpose to spread the knowledge of the coming kingdom. This is of the Lord and is marvelous in our eyes. The great object of union and organization is, that we may labor to better advantage. And if there ever was a time that needed concentration of strength in the work of God, it is now; when the servants of God are sent out to "compel" men to come to his supper. We are in the midst of the great prairies of the west, with their vast fields of grain, and while the farmers on every hand call for help, it might well be said to us,—"Say not ye, there are yet four months, and then cometh the harvest? Behold, I say unto you, lift up your eyes and look on the fields; for they they are white already to harvest."

All can see plainly the great field and great need of labor, and what we need is faith to believe the words of the Savior, that "he that reapeth receiveth wages, and gathereth fruit into life eternal; that both he that soweth and he that reapeth may rejoice together." O, for living faith to quicken us! If there be therefore any consolation in Christ, any comfort of love, if any fellowship of the spirit, we ought, at this time, to feel as Paul did at Athens; when he saw the whole city given over to idolatry, he could not keep silence,—the word was like fire shut up in his bones.

Let us then awake to righteousness; and 1st, Let us have a work of personal consecration to God. Let us lay all that we have and are, without any reserve of a part of the price, upon the altar. We must attend to this matter, in order to succeed in any other department of God's work. To this end we must be much in prayer, and make our religion the uppermost thought of our minds. We should be careful to engage in no business which habitually interferes with either our public, or private religious duties. Prayer and watchfulness are the only means to holy living, and should be maintained at the expense, if need be, of everything else.

This attended to we shall obtain,—2d, Courage and grace to let our light shine in our daily intercourse with men. It is too much the case that talk on the subject of religion is confined to the conference meeting. Perhaps there is no duty more neglected by professed christians than that of personal conversation on religion, especially with unconverted persons and backsliders. There are many who profess to believe that the Lord is at hand, from whom we hear not a word on the subject save at the public meetings. This ought not so to be. Cultivate a habit of speaking of these things with those you meet day by day, and God will bless your efforts.

3d. We have need of patience. Often we labor many weary days, putting in the seed, and there being no apparent results, we are prone to be discouraged; to say, "it is of no use to sow here; men are so hardened that the truth will not affect them." There is need of patience here. Did you ever hear of a saint, or a church so holy that Satan gave up trying to destroy them? We certainly should be as indefatigable in trying to save souls, as he is in his efforts to destroy them. Be patient, brethren, unto the coming of the Lord. Then you will see that faithful labor has never been in vain.

4th. Co-operation,—in the church; in the prayer-meeting, Sabbath school, Bible class, and all fields of associated labor. What the closet is to the individual christian, the prayer meeting is to the church. There is no co-operative action that is more effectual in doing good than such meetings. There is a peculiar blessing received in attending them. A prayer meeting, however small, regularly kept up in any neighborhood, will have an influence on the surrounding community. We advise that this matter be attended to; and that wherever there are two or more followers of Christ (enough to claim the promise,) there be a publicly appointed prayer and conference meeting, regularly held. Its strength will lie not in the numbers who attend, but in the continuity of the effort. It is by the hammer and fire that the flinty rock is to be broken,—a slow but sure process.

There should be earnest co-operation on the part of the people with their ministers. Encourage them by your labor of love, as well as by words. Let them feel that they are not working alone, but are surrounded by earnest brethren and sisters whose hearts are warm with the love of Christ.

5th. Quarterly and other General Conference meetings. These solemn feasts should be well attended. In Israel, one of the first signs of backsliding, was a neglect of the great national gatherings. What wonderful displays of God's power and goodness have been made in such assemblies. Let the churches of the different sections unite and strengthen one another's hands by frequent interviews.

6th. We recommend the formation of Bible classes. Let the brethren get together for the study of the word, and compare scripture with scripture, and you will soon find that your path is growing brighter and brighter unto the perfect day. There is more light in God's word than we dream of. If we will only turn it upon our pathway, we shall find it indeed a lamp to our feet and a light to our path.

7th. Much has been said in the past, about the circulation of books, tracts and papers; yet there are few who seem to realize the importance of this part of our work. The importance of attending to this cannot be over estimated.

Of the making of many books there seems to be no end. Satan fully understands the power of the press, and loses no opportunity to poison the minds of men by the circulation of his style of reading matter. How many take a political or story paper, but cannot afford to take a religious paper? How many can buy novels, books of adventures, etc., but cannot afford religious books? How many do not give away a tract in a year? Is this seeking first the kingdom of God and his righteousness? Books and tracts must in a large measure take the place of preachers among us; for while the harvest is plenteous, the laborers are very few. There are multitudes who will read, if matter is put into their hands, who will not take pains to buy for themselves. We must engage in this work more heartily. The earth and its fulness are the Lord's, and we are but his stewards, we should be careful that none of his money be left to rust or canker. We earnestly exhort all not to be slothful in business, but to give earnest heed lest ye be overcharged with the cares of this world.

9th. The spirit in which to labor.—"All that will live godly in Christ Jesus, shall suffer persecution." This then is before us; hard words, revilings, misrepresentation, loss of reputation, and every form of opposition the enemy can invent. Who is sufficient for these things? How shall we meet them? Hear Paul: "The servant of the Lord must not strive, but be gentle unto all men, apt to teach, patient, in meekness instructing those that oppose themselves, if God peradventure will give them repentance to the acknowledging of the truth, and that they may recover themselves out of the snare of Satan, who are led captive by him at his will."

Let these words become thoroughly fixed in our minds, graven there as with an iron pen in the rock. Let not resentment or unkindness once get control of our hearts, but in meekness and fear, reprove and rebuke with all long-suffering. Remember the long-suffering of God to us-ward, and study to imitate the meekness and gentleness of Christ. If God who gives life and every good thing, suffers long and is kind, not willing that any should perish, but rather that all should have eternal life through his Son; how loving and patient we should be in our efforts to spread light and truth which may prepare a people for the coming of the Lord.

Brethren, it is high time for us to awake out of sleep, and be in earnest in preparing the way of the Lord.

It was the general remark of all present that this conference was the best they had ever attended. Entire unanimity prevailed throughout all the business proceedings and religious exercises. And it is confidently believed that a salutary influence for the cause will go forth among the people, and that God will bless the efforts therein made to the salvation of souls. E. ROYCE, Sec.

RECIPES, ITEMS, ETC.

To prevent Flies from teasing Horses.—Take two or three small handsful of walnut leaves, upon which pour two or three quarts of soft cold water; let it infuse one night, and pour the whole next morning into a kettle, and let it boil for a quarter of an hour. When cold it will be fit for use. No more is required than to wet a sponge, and before the horse goes out of the stable, let those parts which are most irritated be smeared over with the liquor, viz., the flank, etc. Not only the lady or gentleman who rides out for pleasure will derive a benefit from the leaves thus prepared, but the coachman, the wagoner, and all others who use horses during the hot months.

Washing Woolens.—If you do not wish to have white woolens shrink when washed, make a good suds of hard soap, and wash the flannels in it. Do not rub woolens like cotton cloth, but simply squeeze them between the hands, or slightly pound them with a clothes pounder. The suds used should be strong, and the woolens should be rinsed in warm water. By rubbing flannels on a board and rinsing them in cold water, the soon become very thick.

To destroy Ants.—Procure a large sponge, wash it well, press it very dry; by so doing it will leave the small cells open—lay it on the shelf where they are most troublesome, sprinkle some fine white sugar on the sponge two or three times a day. Then drop it in a bucket of water, and you will slay them by the thousands, and soon rid the house of those troublesome insects.

To restore faded Photographs.—The prints should be unmounted by soaking in water for a time, and then immersed in a saturated solution of bichloride of mercury, in which they may be left for two or three minutes, and afterwards thoroughly washed. The change takes place while they are in the bichloride solution.

To preserve Iron from Rust.—Melt fresh mutton suet, smear over the iron with it while hot, then dust it well with unslacked lime, powdered and tied up in muslin. When not used, wrap the irons in baize, and keep them in a day place. Use no oil for them at any time, except salad oil.

Remedy against Moths.—An ounce of gum camphor and one of the powdered shell of red pepper are macerated in eight ounces of strong alcohol for several days, then strained. With this tincture the fur or clothes are sprinkled over, and rolled up in sheets.

To remove Mildew from Linen.—First of all take soap and rub it well into the linen, then scrape some chalk very fine, and rub that in also; lay the linen on the grass, and as it dries wet it again; twice or thrice doing will remove the mildew stains.

Over-reaching.—To prevent horses over-reaching in traveling, let the blacksmith make the heel corks of the fore shoes high and the toe corks low; and the toe corks of the hind shoes high and the heel corks low. An infallible remedy.

Coal Oil has been found, by accident, to be a most effective means of protecting fruit trees against the ravages of the curculio, by placing sawdust, saturated with the oil, at the foot of the tree.

To remove stains on Spoons caused by using them for boiled egg, take a little common salt moist between the thumb and finger, and briskly rub the stain, which will soon disappear.

Steel is hardened by being heated and then plunged into cold water. Brass is annealed (or softened) by the same process.

In annual and perennial plants, clip off with a pair of scissors the seed vessels as soon as the petals fall.

SCROFULA.

MR. EDITOR:—Under the head of "Scrofula," I notice an article in your paper of June 7th relating to the supposed cause and pathology of scrofula.

In the first place, allow me to say the liver has no more to do in the development of scrofula than any other organ of the human body. Nor is it claimed by any medical author, of any reputation. Neither is the fact of a diseased liver in swine taken as proof of the existence of scrofula in that animal.

Secondly. Syphillis and scrofula are as different as measles and small-pox. Neither one will produce the other; no matter how much "filtered through the blood of many generations."

Butchers are not generally quoted as authority by our authors on pathology, nor is their statement correct in this case. But whether it is or not, it makes no difference in regard to the disease under consideration.

You will very naturally ask, then, What is the pathology of scrofula? and what influence has swine's flesh in producing this disease? which I shall briefly answer.

The term scrofula (from scrofa, a breeding sow) is a Latin translation from the Greek koirodes. This name appears to have been originally applied to a glandular affection of swine, and subsequently to what the ancients regarded the same, or a similar disease of the human body; because it, like the other, was characterized by glandular swellings.

Scrofula may be defined to be a constitutional disease, usually manifested by swelling and inflammation of, and the deposit of tubucular matter in, the absorbent or lymphatic glands. Scrofula is the result of a peculiar vice of the constitution, in which the blood is deficient in globules, and loaded with imperfectly elaborated albuminous and fibrinous matters of such character that they can neither be vitalized nor oxydized; and therefore can neither be appropriated in the formation of tissues, nor eliminated by the secreting organs.

Says Prof. Oldshue:—"Scrofula is occasioned by a perverted or unhealthy development of the nutritive materials destined for the repair of the body and the restoration of the blood; and consists, according to Simon, in a peculiarity of blood-development under which the nascent blood tends to molecular death by superoxydation." Again, "In scrofulous affections," says Simon, "the blood is deficient in solid constituents, especially in fibrin and corpuscles. The primary causes being probably due to a deficient formation of chyle, and the influence of a moist, unhealthy atmosphere."

A scrofulous cachexy may have been inherited, but like all other diseases has an immediate or exciting cause. Scrofula may be, and is generally, generated in the person affected; and is no more frequently inherited than Dyspepsia, Hypochondria, or many other diseases, and is no more the character of syphillis than is Itch.

The causes of scrofula are numerous. Under this head may be named,

1st. A physiological incompatibility in the temperaments of the parents. (See Powell on "The Human Temperaments.")

2nd. Deficient, or excessive aliment, in quality or quantity.

3d. Exposure to moist, vitiated amosphere. In short, any thing which debilitates and overloads the system.

I come now to my last point in this brief article. What influence has swine's flesh in the development of scrofula? It has not only a great influence as an exciting cause, but it tends to produce that disease in a system previously healthy. Had I time or space to array statistics gathered by eminent pathologists, and collected by myself during my practice in upwards of six hundred cases of well-marked scrofula, I could answer this question much more satisfactorily than I shall do otherwise. The laws which govern the human organism govern that also of the lower animals. Their systems are subject to the same laws of health and of disease.

We know that one great cause of scrofula is confinement in a close, moist, vitiated atmosphere. Another cause is excessive aliment; and again another, a want of cleanliness of the skin, etc., etc. Now will you examine the condition of the hog, as he is fattened and fitted for food, and tell me, according to the laws governing all animal bodies, what effect such treatment would have upon the system—upon the blood? Consult any pathologist. The invariable conclusion is, scrofulous disease. Nor is this animal free from the mature development of this disease. Out of four hundred hogs fattened and killed in the western part of Ohio, three years ago, which I examined, two hundred and sixty-nine had tabes mesenterica, or a scrofulous swelling of the mesenteric glands of the intestines, the worst form of scrofulous disease. Eighty had actual ulceration of the liver; and the remainder more or less affected,—but few were healthy. And this accords with the observations of many others, who, having the ability to detect disease, have made examinations in this direction.

Now what must be the condition of the flesh, when the blood has become so diseased as to cause tabes mesenterica? What but a mass of fat saturated with scrofulous disease? And what effect does this have upon the human system? you ask. The effect of producing scrofulous diseases, and exciting them where there is already a predisposition.

I could add fact upon fact in proof of my position, but I deem this enough. I have necessarily been very brief in thus presenting you with a few principles relative to this disease, and in refuting what I consider, and what every person who is at all read upon this subject must consider, an erroneous opinion in regard to the nature of scrofula, and the propriety of using pork as an article of diet. For further information upon this subject, refer to any of the standard works on Pathology. IRA A. THAYER.

SUNSHINE.

Seclusion from the sunshine is one of the misfortunes of our civilized life. The same cause which makes potato vines white and sickly, when grown in dark cellars, operates to produce the pale, sickly girls that are reared in our parlors. Expose either to the direct rays of the sun, and they begin to show color, health and strength. One of the ablest lawyers in our country—a victim of long, and hard brain labor, came to me a year ago, suffering with partial paralysis. The right leg and hip were reduced in size, with constant pain in the loins. He was obliged, in coming up stairs, to raise the left foot first, on every stair, dragging the right one after it. Pale, feeble, miserable, he told me he had been failing several years, and closed with, "My work is done. At sixty I find myself worn out."

I directed him to lie down under a large window, and allow the sun to fall on every part of his body; at first, ten minutes a day, increasing the time until he could expose himself to the direct rays of the sun a full hour. His habits were not essentially altered in any other particular. In six months he came running up stairs like a vigorous man of forty, and declared with sparkling eyes, "I have twenty years work in me." I have assisted many dyspeptic, neuralgic, and hypochondriacal people into health by the sunshine. I have so many facts illustrating the wonderful power of the sun's direct rays in curing certain classes of invalids, that I have serious thought of publishing a work to be denominated the "SUN-CURE."—Dr. Dio Lewis.

HOOPS OR HEALTH.

The reader will find in the following a candid answer to an important question. It comes from good authority; and many can testify to its truthfulness from their own experience. We copy from the "Laws of Life," by J. C. Jackson, M. D.

"Question. Are hoopskirts, on the whole, beneficial to the health or not?

"Answer. The hoopskirt is the most injurious article of clothing which woman ever put on to the lower portion of her body. She suffers in health more from it, than from the old petticoat, or close, heavy skirt, which used to be the fashion, for the reason that by means of it, the lower portion of the body, and the lower limbs, are constantly bathed in a stratum, or body of air, which lowers the temperature of the surface of the body, and thus checks the circulation in the lower extremities. Habituated, as by this style of dress women are, to a deficient circulation in the lower portions of the body, abnormal conditions of those portions take place, chilliness becomes constant, the blood recedes from the surface of the limbs, is driven into the upper portions of the body, inducing congestion, and, as a consequence, diseases of the respiratory organs are much more frequent than they otherwise would be.

No woman having any care for her health, should ever wear hoopskirts under any circumstances except when sitting in a warm room, or reclining upon a couch or bed."

THOUGHT ESSENTIAL TO HEALTH.

If we would have our bodies healthy, our brains must be used, and used in orderly and vigorous ways, that the life-giving streams of force may flow down from them into the expectant organs, which can minister but as they are ministered unto. We admire the vigorous animal life of the Greeks, and with justice we recognize, and partly seek to imitate, the various gymnastic and other means which they employed to secure it.

Any one who tries it soon finds out how wearying, how disproportionately exhausting, is an overdose of "light literature," compared with an equal amount of time spent on real work. Of this we may be sure that the due exercise of brain—of thought—is one of the essential elements of human life. The perfect health of a man is not the same as that of an ox or a horse. The preponderating capacity of his nervous part demands a corresponding life.—Cornhill Magazine.

ANIMAL FOOD IS EXPENSIVE.—One acre of ground will produce three thousand pounds of corn; eighty per cent. or 2,400 pounds of this is nutriment. The corn fed to hogs will not make over one thousand ponnds of meat, and only forty per cent. or four hundred pounds of this is nutriment, and this is too liberal a calculation. This is a very great loss, and not at all encouraging to pork raising..

Corn meal will cost about two cents per pound, and wheat flour three and one half cents, while animal flesh costs from ten to twenty cents per pound. The first contains one hundred per cent. more nutriment, while the latter costs five times as much.—The Reformer.

BEARDS.—In looking over the General Conference we behold a great variety in the facial appearance of its members. There are many smooth faces, the owners of which, to keep down all appearances of beard, submit to a daily, and, we should judge, a painful tonsorial operation. Being intelligent men, they must be fully aware that such a custom is entirely unapostolical, injurious to health, rendering themselves liable to all kinds of catarrhal, bronchial, and pulmonary affections. Besides this, in the judgment of many, they greatly diminish their manly beauty by counteracting the efforts of nature to protect them against the above-named evils. A word to the wise is sufficient.—Zion's Herald.

BE LIKE LITTLE CHILDREN.

Through a world of sin and sorrow
Ye must walk all undefiled,
Keep your garments white and spotless,
And be like a little child.

Let not anxious cares assail thee,
Trust in Him whose arm is strong;
He will guide thee past the shadow,
Though the night seems dark and long.

Call, oh! call him Abba, Father,
All thy care upon him cast;
And though storms of wrath may gather,
He'll protect thee from the blast.

Think on Him as ever near thee,
Swift to hear and strong to save,
Guarding thee with love undying—
From the cradle to the grave.

Though his justice never slumbers,
His deep love will never fail;
While the thunders gird the mountain,
There is peace within the vale.

While there are no flowers blooming,
Never at his will repine,
Ye have his unfailing promise
That all things shall yet be thine.

MAN AS HE WAS, IS, AND IS TO BE.

BY JOHN P. BELT.

NUMBER FOUR.

THE ATONEMENT.

As the appointed time drew nearer when Messiah was to come, the prophets directed the minds of the people to look beyond the temporary, to blessings more general and permanent. Under the temporary economy God assumed the sovereign rule, and had the title of King of Israel, and he was jealous of his prorogatives and glory. The people were prone to idolatry, which was rebellion against their king; and the laws which were ordained against idol worship, tended to produce a "spirit of bondage to fear," for their subjugation, that the external purpose of that dispensation might be obtained. The punishments under this government were exceedingly severe. For so exacting was the law, that an error committed through inadvertency was sometimes punished with immediate death, which made the most pious among them afraid, as in the case of Uzzah and its effects on David. 2 Samuel 6: 7, 9. The body of the ceremonial law was minute, and it required the most servile obedience. Peter calls it a yoke, which neither they nor their fathers could bear. The yearly sacrifices brought their sins to remembrance, but the repetition shows they were not expiated. "But when the fulness of the time was come God sent forth his Son, made of a woman, made under the law, to redeem them that were under the law, that we might receive the adoption of sons." Gal. 4: 4, 5. The bondage of fear separated the people from a filial approach to God, and they addressed him in their daily prayers as a Sovereign, under the title of God, or Lord. Jesus Christ was the first who taught us to pray, "Our Father, who art in heaven."

It was given to Moses in charge, that he should not let the priests nor people break through the described limits in their approach to God, nor to invade a place which was deemed too holy for them to enter. This was never allowed under the ceremonial law. None but the high priest was permitted to enter, even the symbol of his presence in the holiest of all, and he was only admitted once in each year. It was to show that the prohibitions of the ceremonial law were done away that Christ announced to the people that, "From the days of John the Baptist until now the kingdom of heaven suffereth violence, and the violent take it by force." Matt. 11: 12. That is to say, the prohibitions and ceremonies were then to be no longer regarded, which kept the Jews at a certain distance in bondage and fear; and which had shut out the Gentiles from it. "For all the prophets and the law prophesied until John." The fence, or "wall of partition" which separated them, being then broken down, and the ceremonies taken out of the way, the invaders would, in violation of the Mosaic commands and prohibitions, seize upon the promises with eagerness and boldness, regardless of the external ceremonies and prohibitions. "Having therefore boldness (margin, liberty) to enter into the holiest by the blood of Jesus, by a new and living way, which he hath consecrated (now made) for us, through the vail, that is to say, his flesh." Heb. 10: 19, 20.

Therefore, the "bondage to fear and death" was peculiar to the Jews under the Mosaic economy, which was "imposed upon them until the time of reformation," when it was done away in Christ. Then to restore them again in the flesh, would be a curse, and not a blessing. If they were disobedient and idolatrous under Moses; and as a nation rejected Christ at his first coming; why may it not be expected that they would be as much disposed to disobey Christ if restored in the flesh at his second coming?

The only hope of an everlasting inheritance in the promised land, and of obtaining eternal life, centres in Christ, and they are peculiar to the immortal state beyond the resurrection of the dead. Therefore, when Abraham, Isaac and Jacob stand in their lot in the everlasting kingdom of God in the restored earth, "all Israel will be saved." And the apostle Paul defines Israel not to be "The children of the flesh, these are not the children of God, but the children of the promise are counted for the seed." Rom. 9: 8. Now if it can be shown that Ishmael and Esau, with their descendants, constitute a part of the children of God, because they are sons of Abraham and Isaac according to the flesh; then there would be some show of argument to sustain the theory that "all Israel" includes the descendants of the twelve sons of Jacob, because they were the children of Israel (Jacob) according to the flesh.

But inasmuch as Isaac and Jacob were themselves "children of promise;" and as Christ was to come in the flesh, through a specified line of descent from them, it follows that the inheritance is only to be given to the promised seed. Then as Christ, by virtue of his vicarious sufferings and death, purchased his church, "which he redeemed with his own blood;" and the people whom he did thus redeem are the constituted sons of God; they are "The ransomed of the Lord that shall return and come to Zion with songs and everlasting joy upon their heads." Isa. 35: 10. That people alone is the Israel of God, to whom the promises belong. The only return of Israel who were of the natural descent, that is to take place at the second coming of Christ, will be of that class of whom it was said, "These all, having obtained a good report through faith, received not the promise." Heb. 11: 39. Consequently their return is from the graves to the new Jerusalem, which will be located in the new earth restored to Eden's first bloom.

What will be the order of the resurrection? And with what body do they come forth from the graves?

Let it be settled fully, that the resurrection of the body is a doctrine of revelation; then so far as we confine our researches in that direction, and steadily adhere to the words of inspiration, confusion and error will be avoided. Unaided human wisdom cannot penetrate and comprehend the miraculous display of the divine power put forth for that express purpose. With respect to the resurrection, there are various views, even among those who profess faith in what the Bible has revealed on that doctrine.

But it is not my purpose to enter into a review, nor to discuss them as severally presented by different writers and theorists. I shall only notice some of them as occasion may require. My first argument to sustain the literal corporeal resurrection of the body, is that which has been already intimated in the case of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, to whom the promise of a physical inheritance of a certain land was made. "I will give unto thee, and unto thy seed after thee, the land wherein thou art a stranger, all the land of Canaan, for an everlasting possession." Gen. 17: 8.

Now it is evident that neither of them did possess that land during their natural life. Therefore, unless they are raised up again from their graves, so as to live forever, they cannot have an everlasting inheritance in it. And if they are not raised with a physical body, the promise must necessarily be a failure; inasmuch as they did not enter into its possession, nor did any of their seed enter into that land till some four hundred and thirty years after the promise had first been made to Abraham. But it is contended by some that there is a physical impossibility in the resurrection of the same body which died, inasmuch as the particles which compose the organism of the bodily structure are constantly changing, and become incorporated in other bodies. Then again it is urged, that when a body is mutilated by dissection; for instance, an arm is buried in Asia, a leg is deposited in the ground in Europe, and the trunk is consigned to the grave in America, how can the dismembered parts be brought together in the resurrection so as to constitute again the identical body which had been mutilated? A sufficient answer to these objections was given by Christ to the Sadducees, "Ye do greatly err, not knowing the Scriptures, nor the power of God." Since God has decreed a corporeal resurrection of the human body, it makes no sort of difference with his purpose what changes may take place in the particles of the body; nor does it interfere with his power, however mutilated the trunk may have been. He will do all that may be necessary to accomplish the resurrection.

When God made Adam, his body was formed from dust of the ground; and when the breath of life was breathed into his nostrils, he became a living being; but the elements of his body were not changed from the original formation, for it was still of the earth, "earthy."

Then is it not as possible for God to bring again from the dust, the bodies of all that have returned to the original element, as it was to form man in the beginning? It was his voice that called Adam into existence, and his voice will bring again from the dust all that are in their graves. They will come forth in body however scattered the members may have been throughout the globe. And as surely as the body of Christ which was laid in Joseph's tomb, was the same body which was raised up on the third day, so surely will the same bodies of all that have gone into the graves, be brought forth from the dusty beds at the resurrection. If God was impotent like man, we might reason on the ground of impossibilities, and interpose physical objections in all their puerile forms. But he is omnipotent in wisdom and power, and nothing is impossible with him. He will do all his purpose when the appointed time comes.

The only question in the mind of the believer should be, has the everlasting Father promised to raise the physical body? Let him be assured that God has promised to raise it up at the last day, and he will like Job say, "Though after my skin worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God, whom I shall see for myself, and mine eyes shall behold and not another, though my reins be consumed within me." Job 19: 26, 27.

In the creation Adam was made a physical being, with the intent that he should multiply and replenish the earth and subdue it and enjoy its blessings. And since the days of Abraham, in all the promises which God has made to his covenant people, he assures them of a physical inheritance on the earth for an everlasting possession. And unless they are corporeally raised up again, the promise cannot be fulfilled to them. But the resurrection of the body which died is objected to on the ground that "it is sown a natural body; it is raised a spiritual body." To sustain, from this text, the theory that the spiritual body is not the same body which died, they reason from the erroneous assumption, that the inheritance of the saints is an etherial state in some distant part of the universe, to which all the children of God will be gathered for their eternal home. And that the spirit which returns to God when it separates from the body is an immaterial and conscious substance. Therefore they assumed the very thing that they should prove from the sacred oracles. Had the spiritual doctrine of the inheritance of the earth by the meek; and that the spirit and body was formed to co-exist; and that both body and spirit when combined constitutes the living soul,—the object of, and the true nature of the resurrection would not have become so much obscured, nor its importance so much lost sight of.

Hence it is that they maintain from that text the idea that the spiritual body will not be composed of organic matter, such as composed the particles of the body which died, but be a spiritual substance evolved from the body either at death, or from its dusty bed when the last trumpet sounds. Or in other words, it will be a body free from material substance, and be composed of spirit. If the only sense in which the term spiritual is used conveyed that meaning, the conclusion would necessarily follow from that text, that it must be immaterial in its composition, and composed of spirit. But the position is evidently contrary to the import of the term.

THE WAY TO HAPPINESS.

Perfection is the meeting of two extremes. If you find yourself in one extreme, you may conclude that what you want in order to perfection is the other or opposite extreme. Keep what points of strength you have, but cultivate the opposite or balancing forces. The passions are mischievous and useless if ill-directed—good and useful if well-directed. Passion is force, power. If it runs to waste, it is an occasion of evil; but do not abandon it—count it valuable as power, and find out a way to make it work right.

Our whole life may become a worship, when in the spirit of faith and submission we adopt the principle which reigns in heaven, that all enjoyment comes by the providence and will of God. To illustrate the operation of this law upon the passions: Suppose a man's heart is strongly moved for a desirable object—then the truth of the above formula comes clearly before his mind. Now instead of seeking directly the thing desired, his interest will lead him to seek the favor of God. Thus his passion becomes double-geared; that is, fastened, not only on the specific good, but also fastened beyond it on God; and consequently the stronger his specific love, the more earnest will he be to please God. The simplistic power of passion would lead him to use immediate, direct force for the attainment of his object; but the plan of complex machinery, which faith introduces, leads him to turn his back on the object, and his face toward God, as the only way of obtaining it.

Do you ask, how is it possible for a person to gain any external good in this way? I answer, God holds in his hand the threads of all events—has at command providential arrangements—spiritual instincts, and a variety of means for making us know and do his will; and it is certain that all the real gratification of our nature must come at last through the direct will of God. Every passion, rightly managed, will lead us to God; enlightened self-love will guard this union, and will give us an abhorrence of every thing that obstructs our vision of him, or our loyalty to him. It will be found perfectly demonstrable that any influence or seduction of present pleasure, which goes to obstruct our relations to God, is suicidal, and really goes to defeat itself. So long as a person is pulled by direct force of attachment to any or all the objects of life, he can have no real comfort with them, for God has a power in the case, which he does not exert in our favor until we set our face toward him. It is so with regard to business. A man will cease to be pulled and hauled only when he turns his back on his business, and his face toward God; believing that to be the truest way to get control of his business, and make it pleasant and profitable. I feel constantly, and always have felt, that this is true financial wisdom and economy in the matter of property. I see that all our prosperity in money matters depends upon our maintaining good relations with God. However others may have success in another way, we cannot. With us it depends on our turning away from business just so far as we are liable to false, earthly attractions towards it.

This double-gearing of the passions is a thing that may be easily understood. In order to bring it about, let the truth sink in our hearts, let us gather up all our past experience, until the fact becomes a part of our existence—that the only way by which we can have any comfort of the passions is to let them spend their whole force in binding us to God. Then his first great law—"Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart," becomes perfectly simple and natural.

That force of the heart which takes God into partnership with all its desires, will work naturally, and in this way: whatever of value or beauty a person may see, conceive of, or aspire unto, he will say in his heart, this comes from God, the source of all beauty. However the value may seem to lie in the thing itself, still this appearance is but the reflection of God's goodness. The true way then to possess it is by seeking fellowship with the source. Thus the motive force once started is always present, renewing the process in the mind.

A boy is pursuing his studies and employments under his father. He sees some apples temptingly spread before him. Now if he is a good boy, he feels assured that he shall have all he wants at a proper time. So that all he has to do is to keep up good relations with his father, who will certainly give him whatever is appropriate and desirable. On the contrary if he neglects his business, and goes to helping himself, this plainly would be the very way to deprive himself of all. But let his mind be clearly settled on the point that all good gifts will be awarded to him as the fruit of obedience, and the more he wants them the more he will be stimulated to faithfulness. Here the boy ascends from particular desires into a general one; and that is the refinement of spirit that is going on among us all the time. Desire for particular things is the raw, uncooked material; and as it becomes refined, it is carried up and becomes the aliment of general desire. The boy desires the apples. That desire reacts and makes him faithful. So in any case, special desire must be merged in the general desire of faithful obedience. In this state desire has returned to God, and when it comes down again toward the object, it takes this shape: If my father does not give me this, he will give me something equally good. He knows what is best for me, and I will let him choose. He shall give me what he pleases, when he pleases. Thus the specific desire, merged in the general, becomes a binder between us and God, and has entered into harmony with all other interests. See how we get back to the original sin. Adam and Eve had a desire to help themselves. Their passions were not geared in the way I speak of. They desired in the direct, simplistic way, and were brought into collision with God. Instead of their desires leading them to God, they led them into a quarrel with him.

Speaking of desires, it is evident that they too are not independent individualities, nor yet simply extensions of ourselves. They are rather to be classed as all under the control of two great spirits, the I spirit and the We spirit.

Desire acted on by the I spirit is greedy—has an unnatural, feverish irritability about it. It has an obstinate will that won't be refused; there is no softness in it—no yielding, no accommodation, no dropping down into others' thoughts and interests, no harmony or communion with others' desires. This is a morbid state of the passions.

The we spirit is gentle and patient; and while at the same time it has a high relish for pleasure, and has as much sense of the value of things as the I spirit, and a great deal more, yet there is no sharp, severe will in it. It is healthful, happy in hope, contented in the prospect of enjoyment. It is not greedy of action or of possession, but is made happy by hope. It prefers to wait on the execution of other peoples' desires and wills.

This is the healthful operation of the spirit on the passions. The we spirit is made up of a partnership of God and I and others—God first always. The I spirit is a solitary firm. I want to get a war going between these two spirits—going in dead earnest. The I spirit is so eager for itself, that it defeats itself in the pursuit of enjoyment, while the we spirit by giving up to God gets an hundred fold. See by the former illustration the difference between the I and we spirit. The I spirit sets the boy direct to taking the apples. All the enjoyment in the case lies between the apples and I. If there is any reference to others' interests, it is evil reference. "I desire apples and I am going to take them, and father may go to the devil."

Thus the I spirit begets a feeling of hostility toward all others. In the other spirit, the boy who desires the apples desires to be faithful to his father, and this desire operates toward all around him. Thus his individual interest comes to be a public interest. His desire of the apples and enjoyment of them is a public benefit, because it is a stimulus to good behavior, not to his father only, but to every body.

Pursuing this up into spiritual philosophy, we see the position of mind and the exercise of heart which lays one open to the flow of other spirits. There is between all spirits in the same category, in the state of faithful reference to God, a genial flow of intercourse, a power of enjoyment, an increased attraction to union. Man's life in the I spirit, however large he may be in body, is pinched up and barren; he has a small life, not capable of much enjoyment. The more the soul opens to other life, the more strong, healthy, firm, and capable of immense enjoyment it becomes.

The we spirit is a community spirit. It holds not only all objective things as common property, but ourselves, our wills, our desires, our passions, all as property of God and the Primitive Church, and as many as have joined themselves to it.

Do you say that the community spirit takes the form of universal benevolence, and throws itself out to every body? I say the height of the community spirit absolutely forbids the mingling of life with the I spirit. If we have got the we spirit, and want it to prevail, we shall be jealous and exclusive toward the I spirit. Is a man in the I spirit? One in the we spirit instinctively withdraws from him. Universal benevolence is a positive going over to the enemy. It is giving up property that ought to go into the great We, to feed and assist its selfish opposite.

All evil-thinking proceeds from the I spirit. Let the mind come under the control of the we spirit, and it cannot think evil; it turns all evil into good just as fast as it touches it.—Home Talk.

LINES.

I long to rest on Canaan's shore,
To suffer mortal pain no more;
I long immortal joys to share
Beyond this vale of sin and care.

Blow, breezes, blow—ye billows, foam,
And bear me to my haven home;
Let time and all its cares be past,
And let me find my rest at last.

Sure there's a life that cannot die,
There is a land where none shall sigh;
O Jesus, keep me by the hand,
And bring me to that blessed land.

I bid this sinful world farewell,
And haste with Jesus Christ to dwell;
Blow, breezes blow, ye billows foam,
And bear me to my haven home.

THE THIEF IN HEAVEN.

If Christ and the penitent thief were received into heaven on the day of the crucifixion, it follows that Christ's second coming is in the past. Let us count.

1st. All agree that Christ once came and tabernacled in flesh, and dwelt on earth several years. That was his first coming.

2nd. Then it is claimed that at the death of his body Christ went back to heaven and lived there three days, and then returned to earth again and tabernacled in flesh a second time, and lived on earth forty days. This would certainly make a SECOND COMING! Who dare dispute it? Firstly, he comes and tabernacles in flesh and dwells on earth some thirty-three years, then leaves the flesh and goes back to heaven. Secondly, he comes again and tabernacles in flesh and dwells on earth forty days more. This is a second coming as positively as one and one make two.

This theory locates the second coming of Christ in the past, whereas many years after this period of forty days Paul affirms,—"Unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time," etc. Thus Paul claimed that Christ's "second" coming was then future, and if Paul was correct, it follows that Christ could not have left the earth to dwell in heaven three days with the thief, and have returned to earth a second time so long before Paul wrote. In other words, if Christ's second coming was future when Paul wrote, it could not have been in the past long years before he wrote; hence it follows that Christ could not have gone to heaven on the day of the crucifixion, unless he remained there till after Paul wrote; and if so, the story of his resurrection must be renounced as a deceptive fabrication (and we left "in our sins"), as a reunion of the human and the Divine would be indispensably essential to the formation of the former personage called Jesus Christ; and this reunion could not be effected short of the return of the Divine guest (if it had gone to heaven), and this return would constitute a second coming!

The truth is, Christ was once "manifested in the flesh," and "put to death in the flesh," and raised from death,—all during his first mission to our globe,—then went back to heaven, not with the thief, but all alone, from whence he will come on a second mission to set up his kingdom, and fulfill that misunderstood promise to the expiring penitent on the cross, by giving him and all the righteous a home in Paradise on the renovated earth.

Strangers to our faith will find an exposition of the Savior's promise to the thief in "Ghostology" and other books.

THE PROSPECT.

"And ye shall hear of wars and rumors of wars; for nation shall rise against nation, and kingdom against kingdom." "And there shall be . . . upon the earth distress of nations, with perplexity."—MATT. 24: 6, 7; LUKE 21: 25.

The summary of news from the four winds is, "There is strife, or its coming shadow, in every part of the world." On our own soil, the great civil war, which has slain its millions, and has already lasted three years without a moment's respite, still continues. "More men for the field," is the call of the authorities; and additional thousands are about to be marched to the scene of carnage.

A little south of us, in a neighboring republic, another bloody contest is being waged. The subtle emperor of the French has thrown an army into Mexico, and is changing the whole system of government there, by overthrowing the republic, and erecting an imperial establishment upon its ruins. An empire has been proclaimed and an emperor elected, and the sword is being glutted to sustain that empire against a bloody resistance which may take years to overcome. Napoleon, having gained possession of the silver-fields of Potosi, is most probably aiming at the annexation of California and Sonora to the French dominions. He is desirous of a French colony and foothold on the coast of the Pacific, and will doubtless make efforts to accomplish it. Having set at defiance the decrees of the "Holy Alliance" of the Old World, he has not hesitated to tread under foot the "Monroe doctrine" of the New. It would seem, also, as if these French movements on this continent were about to involve still further hostile complications. . . .

The emperor is also largely involved in the contest in Cochin-China. And the failure of his proposition of a grand Congress of European sovereigns in Paris, in consequence of England's refusal to enter it, has caused her to be branded as an enemy to liberty and the happiness of the human race, and is extensively announced as the forerunner of "a universal war of the peoples against their sovereigns."

The proposed Congress itself was the product of a great plan to compromise lawless revolution with existing despotism. The people of all the nations have for a long time had a growing determination to be free. But the notions of freedom which look to the abjuration of all bonds of religion and government, society and order, have more than once proven themselves the breeders of worse evils than those against which they protested. Revolutionists have grown wiser since their first experiments. They are now for compromise. They say to the existing regime: "Let us come to terms. Let democratic principles prevail, and we will agree to have them sustained and protected by a strong central dictatorship." Hence the idea of "the liberty of peoples" under one great confederate empire over all Christendom, with the democratic Emperor of France at its head. Hence the proposed Congress, which was simply a bid to legitimate and enthrone revolution,—a thing which has now been determined, and which its projectors are bent to accomplish by one means and another, proclaiming peace and liberty with the sword unsheathed, and with vengeance and chains for all hinderers of their purposes. Such is now the spirit of the most vigorous movements in the world of European politics.

On the 5th of November last, the day on which England celebrates her deliverance from the Gunpowder Plot and popery, Napoleon III. delivered his imperial address, which may justly be taken as the inaugurative manifesto of the new alliance. He then said, "The treaties of 1815 have ceased to exist." He thus expressed a literal and momentous fact, which he shows he appreciates, and upon which he indicates his purpose to proceed. That one little sentence covers the political history of a century, and puts Europe back into the days of the French Revolution and the first Napoleonic empire. We may, therefore, look for the putting forth of those same revolutionary ideas, guided by that same Napoleonic mind, made wiser by experience, and sustained by a wider influence, deeper schemes and a firmer compact. Says one of the London journals, "The emperor has crossed the Rubicon; and he has crossed it with the revolution for his ally. We are on the eve of momentous events. . . .

Surveying, then, this excited, exciting and threatening state of things the world over,—the multitudes of men engaged in deadly strife, and the multitudes more in arms and at the command of leaders preparing to give the word which at any moment may make the vast world one field of blood,—the fearful activity of agencies and elements which have been the depreciation of wise and good men of all ages,—the disintegration, revolution, impiety, selfishness and treachery, enfeebling and destroying all the fabrics and ties by which society has hitherto been preserved,—and a cunning, ambitious and unprincipled adventurer, leagued with revolution, rising to the head of earthly power, and promising the world liberty and peace by means of his own universal, despotic dictatorship, which troubled and restless people seem at any time ready to accept,—what conclusion can we draw, but that unexampled changes are at hand, and that all that Christ and his prophets have spoken respecting the last perilous times, and the man of sin, are about to have their speedy fulfillment?

Some persuade themselves that all is well and hopeful; that the reign of evil is about its last; that the long-trampled plant of liberty is putting forth for its world-wide bloom; that time's great conflicts are so far over, that we have only to pursue the easy victory, to complete the emancipation of the earth from all its ills. And we would fain believe, after a voyage so long and against so many adverse storms, that we are at last touching upon the blessed shores; that at length the gates of final triumph are opening before the steady march of light and inquiry and freedom. But every one knows, who readeth things aright, that these shores are only islands and marshes of confusion and despond, and these opening gates but flood-gates of disaster and judgment, and that continents and seas of trials and of storms yet lie between us and the promised Millennium. Prophecy assures us, with unmistakable certainty, that the earth shall first be "turned upside-down," the nations scourged, shaken and deceived, and all confederations of the unsanctified finally smitten, until "the mountains shall be melted with their blood," and all people be in pain as a woman in travail!

Call it the shriek of birds who love to fly in storms; denounce it as the Jeremiad of silly people; here stand the words of God as its full warrant, so plain that one may read them while he runs. And man can no more keep back the fulfillment of those words, than pluck the stars from their places, or stay the golden chariot of the sun in the magnificence of its morning ascensions.

There have, indeed, been "wars and rumors of wars" before, and revolutionary troubles, and powerful men of insatiable ambition, causing disturbances and overthrowing nations, in other ages. But never to this day has there been the same menacing and convulsed state of things, so universal in extent, so intense in degree, and connecting so directly with one centre of power and one system of ideas. More than ever in the whole history of Christendom, things are heading up to that fulness of development in the directions of prophetic indication, which argues that "the harvest" is at hand. The whole period of the personal absence of Christ from the earth is more or less characterized by the prevalence of wars, deceitful usurpations and tribulations. But, everywhere, the Scriptures tell us that the last years of that period are to have these features ripened and intensified to a point which shall shake the world, overwhelm nations, and entail unparalleled distresses upon mankind. And the year upon which we are entering promises to be one of those years,—at least one of the years of eventful preparation for the triumphs of Antichrist and the sufferings of nations. The signs and probabilities all point sufficiently in that way to make us solemn and thoughtful. These certainly are not the times for the people of God to grovel in levity, worldliness, and extravagant and luxurious living, but rather to watch and be sober. Every soul should be making ready for the Lord's coming and the days of vengeance upon the proud and Christless. As remarked by the Boston Recorder, "The great day and its momentous events, may be nearer than we think. We may have but little time for all we have planned to do for ourselves, for our friends, for the church and for the world. Let every house, then, be put in order, and every lamp trimmed and burning."

The Lord gives us grace to attain that peace which his Holy Spirit, diligently sought and followed, alone can give; and to keep the word of his patience, that he may also keep us from that hour of trial which shall come upon all the world, to try them that dwell upon the earth!—Prophetic Times, Jan. 1st.

For the World's Crisis.

THE KINGDOM OF GOD.

God has a kingdom to be established. It is called "the kingdom of God," and this by way of distinction from all the kingdoms that have gone before it. The kingdoms of this world are emblematically set forth as dreadful beasts,—savage, oppressive, warlike, and doomed to destruction; but another is to succeed them entirely dissimilar,—mild, equitable, peaceable, and everlasting.

We are required to pray—"Thy kingdom come." We should pray understandingly. How can we do so if we are ignorant of its nature and location? It is vastly more important than most professed christians suppose, that we have clear and distinct ideas about this kingdom, if we would not pray about it hypocritically, and seek for it as one that beateth the air.

First, its location. The prayer our Savior taught us states distinctly where we are to expect the kingdom of God to be established. "Thy kingdom come, thy will be done on earth." We are to pray for this kingdom to be established on earth. Daniel also saw in vision (chap. 7) one like the Son of man have given him dominion and glory, and a kingdom, that all people, nations and languages should serve him. And the explanation of that vision shows that the kingdom, and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven is that to be possessed by the saints, including Christ, the great Head of the church, who said—"The meek shall inherit the earth"; thus settling the point that the kingdom of God is to be on the earth.

2nd. The nature of the kingdom of God. Its King is immortal. He can die no more. Death hath no more dominion over him. He will reign personally and visibly. This same Jesus. Acts 1: 11. "The Lord himself shall descend from heaven." 1 Thess. 4: 16. The saints are to reign with him, for they have the promise of sitting with him in his throne. Rev. 3: 21. Christ and the saints jointly shall possess the kingdom throughout the endless ages. Our vile bodies shall be changed and fashioned like unto the King immortal's most glorious body, and we shall die no more. There shall be no more death, or sorrow, neither shall there be any more pain.

We are commanded to seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness. Patriarchs and prophets lived for this kingdom. Christ and the apostles dwelt much upon the character we should possess to enable us to enter the city of the New Jerusalem.

The kingdom of God lies just before us. We are called to give it our highest attention and efforts. Consider its immense value, its glory, its high privileges, its exalted honors, its endless durability. Consider, it was that which filled the Savior's heart—the joy set before him—the kingdom of God, where he would with his followers sit on the throne of his glory. It was that which occupied the minds of patriarchs, prophets, apostles, and all the faithful martyrs. Shall we then neglect it?

Where are our sympathies? Are they with the kingdoms of this world, or with the kingdom of our God and his Christ? The unrighteous shall not inherit the kingdom of God. We must strive to enter in at the "strait gate,"—be in earnest, be diligent, be faithful. Amen.

BE SOMETHING.

It is the duty of every one to take some active part as actor on the stage of life. Some seem to think they can vegetate, as it were, without being any thing in particular. Man was not made to rust out his life. It is expected he should "act well his part." He must be something. He has a work to perform, which it is his duty to attend to. We are not placed here to grow up, pass through the various stages of life, and then die, without having done any thing for the benefit of the human race. It is a principle in the creed of the Mohametans that every one should have a trade; there are few doctrines better than that. Is a man to be brought up in idleness? Is he to live upon the wealth which his ancestors have acquired by frugal industry? Is he placed here to pass through life like an automaton? A man who does nothing is useless to his country as an inhabitant. A man who does nothing is a mere cipher. He does not fulfill the obligations for which he was sent into the world, and when he dies, he has not finished the work that was given him to do. He is a mere blank in creation. Some are born with riches and honors upon their heads. But does it follow that they have nothing to do in their career through life? There are certain duties for every one to perform. Be something. Do not live like a hermit and die unregretted.

SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

BY HARRIET B. HASTINGS.

Dear Brethren and Sisters scattered abroad:—More than three years have gone by since I have written any thing for the public eye, though I have often felt constrained to do it. There are many things I wish to write about; I shall, however, direct your attention to the subject of Sunday Schools.

Having had some experience in the past, and being a careful observer of these things, I feel it duty to address my brethren and sisters on this subject. I have long since felt that there was a great deficiency among our brethren of the different churches in the matter of training their children, and giving them proper instruction in the Scriptures of divine truth. Some say they can teach their children at home, and do not care to send them to a Sunday School. I have often found, as a general thing, that such men do not love their children as well as they might, and they do not always get that instruction at home which they need. Others say they do not want their children to follow in the wake of the other churches. Neither do I, when in any respect they depart from the living God; but this is not necessary. We are not obliged to go into all the ceremonies and follies of the times. I am as much opposed to these things as any other person need to be. But children are children, and you cannot make sober men and women of them. To make an impression upon children, you must come down to their capacities, and make them feel that you love them. Condescend to small things. Do not be afraid of being too small. You can not come down as much as your Savior did when he stooped to save you.

"O," says one, "I can't teach children. I don't know how." Well, then, it is time you took lessons and learned how. I have been to a dozen persons in a congregation, who seemed to be well educated, and intelligent, and who confessed in the prayer meeting that they wanted to do God's will, wanted to do something for Christ, yet refused to take a class of little children to teach, and that too after seeing the necessity of the case; saying they were not capable of teaching little children, that were hardly able to read their A B C's.

Now my brother, my sister, reflect on these things. Just think, you want to do something for the Lord, and are not willing to do the little things first; you have only one talent, and would rather a Sunday School would go down, and children run in the streets, or go elsewhere and learn error. Yes, you will look on and see a superintendent, and two or three teachers, pull and drag a heavy load alone, because you are so selfish, you will not lift your finger to lighten the load.

Now you may think this hard talk; but if you consider the matter, and examine the subject, you will find it even so. Perhaps you have never thought of these things before; then think of them now. Do not let that whole class of children leave a Sunday School because you are not willing to do the best you can to teach them, and then lay all the blame on the superintendent. I know of some who feel it is beneath their dignity to scarcely look into a Sunday School. I heard a good Bro. say, only a few weeks since, that he had but little interest in Sunday Schools; and that man had several children who were old enough to comprehend the religion of the Bible.

I had once a Sunday School on my hands. I felt impressed to take a different course with those children than what I had ever been accustomed to see taken. After our classes were done with their lessons, we had a prayer meeting for them. The result was most desirable. Brethren and Sisters were not too old nor too big to throw in their influence with these little ones. We all became as children, and all sought the Lord in behalf of those children and ourselves. God heard us, and four of that school sought the Lord most earnestly, and soon after were baptized. They were from fourteen to seventeen years old. Do you want to do any thing for God? There is a chance for you, and be careful that you do not refuse when he calls.

Yours, looking and waiting, and believing the Master will soon come.

Lawrence, Mass., June 27th, 1864.

For the World's Crisis.

A LETTER TO SCATTERED PILGRIMS.

Dear ones, whether acquainted in the flesh or by the one Spirit which unites us all to Christ, although you do not hear from me very often through the medium of our loved paper, yet I wish to say to you that I am still doing what I can in the great field of our Master. I would like to meet you again at your great feast of tabernacles at Wilbraham this fall, but do not expect to. Are we ready for translation? Have we the mind of Christ our Head? Is there difference enough between us and the world? Do we hold this world with all its false allurements as a loose garment?

These questions with many others let us consider, and know whether we belong to the family of God, for we may prove ourselves. God's children ought to love one another more. By this the Savior said, "Shall all men know that ye are my disciples." Although poor, weak, despised and cast out of men, I often think what a power we might have in this old world of sorrow, if we would but take heed more strictly to the Savior, when he said, "Be ye one, even as I and my Father are one."

Brethren and sisters, although scattered, three, five, ten, fifteen, or more in a place, do love one another fervently with the love of Christ. Do not let the devil get in a wedge to split, divide and tear you to pieces. We are living in a day when he is trying his best. Run together often like two drops of water. Help one another. Satan cannot live under the gentle distilling influence of God's love. What if you cannot have all your troubles understood here just as you think they ought to be? Very soon, when we come into the great family circle, it will be made right. Glory to God! to think that we shall soon meet all of Father's family, where parting will be no more. Cheer up, loved ones, and look not behind you, the kingdom is just ahead.

I would take this opportunity to thank that kind sister near Mansville, N. Y., whose name I do not know, for her kind remembrance of me. May the Lord keep you all in the patient waiting for Jesus. Amen.

Your brother in Christ,

GEO. W. TURNER.

The World's Crisis
AND SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER.

Boston, Tuesday, July 12, 1864.

☞ NOTICE.

All orders and monies for the World's Crisis, or for Books and Tracts for sale at this Office, and all matters pertaining to the business of the Office, must be addressed to the Business Agent,

MILES GRANT, Crisis Box, Boston.

THE TRACT FUND.

Our Tract Fund is doing well, but can we not have it all made up before campmeeting? People are greedy after the tracts, and let us keep them supplied. There are many who cannot preach, or even spare money to buy tracts, who have a hearty good will to circulate them judiciously, where much good might be accomplished. Come, let us give them plenty of work to do, while we have opportunity to do something. Already a great amount of good has been accomplished by means of the tracts scattered. They have caused much trouble in the theological waters, and set many to thinking in the right direction. By means of the tracts they have caught sight of the truth, and are now engaged in an earnest search of the Scriptures. We are receiving many letters expressing much gratitude for the light received from the tracts. We have often remarked, we think there is no way by which we can accomplish so much good with our money as by scattering tracts.

Who else will help make up the two thousand dollar tract fund? Dear reader, have you done all you wish to, and all you think the Lord would have you do? If not, would it not be well to do it immediately? Come, invest some money where it will produce "a hundred-fold"—ten thousand per cent. Do not refuse because you cannot do but little. Remember the poor widow, who gave two mites, did more than all the rest. If we all do what we can, a great work will be accomplished. Let us have a shower of gifts for the tract fund that will make thousands of thirsty souls rejoice.

WILBRAHAM CAMPMEETING.

The time for our great annual feast at Wilbraham will soon arrive. Let us see a greater gathering of the scattered saints than ever before. The signs of the times indicate that we shall have but few more such meetings before the King of kings appears. Arrange to be present at the commencement of the meeting, and you will enjoy it much better, and receive much more benefit. While others spend their money for worldly pleasures, fashions, rich food, and self-gratification, let us gather at Camp Wilbraham to worship the God of our fathers, and consecrate ourselves anew to his service. The meeting is to begin Aug. 22nd, and continue one week. Preaching on the ground Aug. 21st. Particulars hereafter.

TREMONT CAMPMEETING.

The Tremont meeting commenced June 26th, and continued till July 4th. There was not a large attendance during the week, but we think much good was accomplished. It was a union meeting, where all christians appeared to feel at home; and consequently felt free to take a part. We had very pleasant interviews with various ministers not directly associated with us, but who enjoyed the meetings and took an active part. They talked and acted like men who love the truth, and who felt willing to follow all the light they saw. One remarked that hereafter he felt it to be his duty to preach the speedy coming of Christ, if his congregation all left him. It is evident that the Lord's faithful ones are becoming more interested in the coming of our Savior, and better satisfied that the time of his coming is near.

We were not able to be present at the meeting until Thursday morning. It was held in a pleasant pine grove, about half a mile from the depot. Bro. Hastings had his large tent erected, which afforded a nice place for our conference meetings, and for preaching when the weather was unfair. We hope to see it spread at Wilbraham this year.

We heard good preaching on practical and prophetical subjects by Brn. M. Batchelor, H. K. Flagg, H. L. Hastings, and H. F. Carpenter. Several requested prayers; some, we trust, found peace in believing, and one was baptized.

Lord's day, July 3d, was lovely, and a large number assembled to participate in the benefits of the meeting. Good order prevailed, and all seemed to feel pleased with their situation. The audience gave good attention all day, and appeared anxious to hear what the preachers had to say. We think it was a very profitable season to many. There was sweet harmony in all our meetings during the entire week.

Monday, July 4th. This day, so noted in the history of our country, was spent very pleasantly and profitably in the tented grove. Many, when speaking in our conference meeting, said they never enjoyed the 4th of July so well before; it being the first they ever spent in worshiping the Lord. We were disturbed by no roar of the cannon, or noisy shouts of careless men and boys. All was peaceful—heavenly. We all felt it was good to be there; and when night came, that the day had been well spent,—far better than we could have improved it in any popular celebration. There seemed to be quite a general disposition to declare an independence from sin and Satan and all bad habits. Several resolved to desert from the service of the Devil, and requested prayers that they might never be ensnared by him again. We think those present will long remember the day with pleasure. Hallowed associations cluster around it that will serve to cast a beam of joy on days to come. We parted in hope of meeting soon in the great camp of the saints, in the promised land.

DARK PROSPECTS.

The religious aspect of the world has a very disheartening, gloomy look at present. Vital godliness appears to be on a rapid decline in many hearts, and but very few are inquiring for the road to life; most seem to have decided to go with the majority, right or wrong. Yet we sometimes meet with sober, thinking men, who have never made a profession of religion, who are looking at the religious state of things with a sad heart. They are satisfied that some great event is about to transpire, and feel the necessity of a preparation; but they say, "What shall we do? We have lost our confidence in the religion exhibited by most church members, and where shall we go? We think there may be a reality in the christian religion, and wish we enjoyed it; but we are disheartened at what we see among those who profess it." We can only say to such, You may expect to see a still worse state of things, and if you wish to be saved, go directly to the Lord, do as his word says, without regard to what others do, and you will soon know you are a child of his.

PROGRESSIOM.

The enemies of the cross of Christ talk much of the progress of this age. It is true, there is great progress, but it is downward to destruction. In view of it, there is great cause for fasting and mourning. The following, from one of our exchanges, shows in what direction things are moving:—

"A writer in the Christian Mirror gives a tabular statement of the Congregational churches in twenty-three States and Territories for 1862–3, and in view of the result he thinks when nearly one-fourth of the whole number of Congregational ministers in the land are reported as not in service, some public notice should be taken of the fact, as one not consistent with our normal condition. When there are forty-nine less ministers this year than last, and seventy-two less pastors, and two hundred and eighteen less stated supplies; where there are sixteen more vacant churches, five hundred and sixty-eight more removals, and one hundred and forty more excommunications; with an average accession to each church of less than one and a half during the year; when the proportion of infant baptisms to the number of church members is only one baptism to fifty-eight members, in a whole year; I think it highly proper that the state of things which these facts disclose, should be brought plainly before the notice of all, lay members as well as ministers.

We think so too. It is a loud call to be up and doing."

"THE BIBLE STUDENT'S LIBRARY."

We have just received a nice lot of "The Bible Student's Library." This comprises five volumes of neatly bound books, published by Bro. Hastings, composed of very interesting matter previously issued in other forms. We think these works should be in every family, and be read by all lovers of truth. These volumes contain about 400 pp. each, which make a valuable library for a Bible student. The following are the titles of the books:—I. "The Signs of the Times." II. "The Voice of the Church." III. "Thessalonica, or the Model Church," bound with "Reasons for my Hope," and "Spiritualism a Satanic Delusion." IV. "The Great Controversy between God and Man," with several tracts on prophetical subjects. V. "Future Punishment," according to the Scriptures.

These books contain very valuable matter, of which none should be ignorant who are interested in a future life. The price of each book single, bound, postpaid, is $1.00; in paper covers, 50 cts. See book list.

A NEW KINGDOM OF HEAVEN.

A Spiritualist paper is being published at Huntsville, Ind., called "The Kingdom of Heaven." It is a small "four-page sheet, advocating non-resistance and absolute freedom." The Editor says:—

"The Kingdom of Heaven, outwardly, is nothing more or less than a collection of persons into a group or society, to live together in a state of perfect social equality; wherein all will act in obedience to the law of perfect love and justice. Who will go?"

He calls himself "the Son of man," and says:—"The Son of man calls to lecture to private circles, during the present lecturing season, on the setting up of the Kingdom of Heaven, or on any subject of reform. For the present, and perhaps not until 1866, will he be permitted to speak to a public or promiscuous assemblage. He is not developed, but developing."

"Most minds regard the announcement that I was 'the Son of man,' as emanating in my own brain, and as being a mark of egotism, supposing, doubtless, that I am expecting honor or happiness thereby. All such are very much mistaken. On me it falls as a curse, a weight or load, from under which I would gladly escape. It has come as unbidden to me as did Paul's mission to him. And believe, Brother, I tremble at what I see mapped out for me to suffer."

We wait for more wonderful developments. Satan is preparing for his grand movement in the history of the world. Christians, "put on the whole armor of God, that ye may be able to stand against the wiles of the devil."

A DARK PROSPECT.

The war prospect at present is very dark. It is generally understood that very soon the President will issue another call for a draft of three, and perhaps five hundred thousand men. This war has opened a great slaughter house for men, while the people are taxed enormously to carry it on. Like the great cattle market at Brighton, Mass., about so many are required for butchery every week. People begin to feel that war is a serious matter, and that a little military glory to a few selfish, covetous officers, and a rich financial harvest to those who are affording army supplies, will hardly pay for all the suffering entailed upon us by the prolonged heathen barbarities of war.

Says the Boston Journal of July 2nd:—

"The public mind is passing into one of those periods of temporary depression which have been intermittent during the whole progress of the war. Public feeling has been like a pendulum, vibrating between the extremes of undue elation and unreasonable depression. Perhaps the present extreme is likely to be more severe than any previous depression, because, to gloomy views of the military situation is added some degree of alarm at the financial prospect. Is there any sound reason for this depression? A glance at the field of operations will answer this question."

We think but one rational answer can be given to the question, and that is, an emphatic YES! The future will tell the story. It is better to prepare for a storm before the hurricane strikes us. We see no chance to avoid a terrible financial crush. We cannot say how soon, but we think it is certain to transpire, and near at hand. We shall yet feel the meaning of the words expressing one of the last signs of the times, before the coming of Christ,—"distress of nations."

DEMONOLOGY.

This is emphatically an age of demonology. The demons, we think, never had so much influence on our fellow beings as at the present time. Men and women whom we may think are firmly established in the christian doctrine, are just on the point of yielding to the teachings of the "evil angels." It would have been thought a thing incredible, a few years since, had men been told that such sentiments would prevail as are now believed by millions. But this is one of the last signs of the times.

In answer to the question,—"In what way are we the image of God?" the spirit answered,—"We are created in the image of God in all senses, in every respect."—Banner of Light, June 4th, 1864.

In the same paper another conversation with a spirit is reported as follows:—

"Q. Have you ever seen Confucius and Zoroaster?

A. Yes, many times.

Q. In the order of degree, which stands the higher in moral excellence—Jesus Christ, Confucius, or Zoroaster?

A. Confucius stands in morality higher than the other two. . . . Jesus himself claims to have been inspired to a large extent, by this same Confucius. And if we are to place reliance upon the records concerning each individual, we shall find that Jesus spoke the truth when he tells us he was inspired by Confucius."

At the late four days' convention of Spiritualists, in Boston, during the "anniversary week," Mr. Storer is reported to have said that, "Spiritualists were endeavoring to tear down the old and worthless structures of society and government, and out of the materials to build up better structures, and better forms of government."

"Dr. L. K. Coonley thought the Spiritual philosophy had given us a much better and more consistent God than we ever had before."

It is a well known fact that the more advanced Spiritualists acknowledge no God but MAN, and all deny, so far as we know, that God exists as a personal being; thus really denying that there is any God at all.

The Spiritualists have decided to hold a national convention in Chicago, Ill., commencing Aug. 9th, for the purpose of political organization. Stirring events are rapidly approaching. No one is safe unless he has on the whole christian armor.

WAR APPROACHING.

The present indications are very threatening in favor of a great war in Europe. All the efforts of the late conference to adjust existing difficulties have only served to increase them. There is now no reason to hope for peace. There is one general cry of war from all directions, while vast preparations are being made for its commencement and progress.

The Boston evening Journal of July 7th, 1864, says:

"If we may credit nearly the whole of the London press, except the Star, which is as peaceful now as during the Mason and Slidell excitement, there is a prospect that the Danish war may be resumed, with England, and perhaps Russia, as parties to it. The Conference has substantially come to an end, without accomplishing anything in the interest of peace. The question at issue had become narrowed down to the frontiers of Schleswig, and there it hung. No boundaries satisfactory to the several parties could be proposed. It was then desired to leave the matter to arbitration. But Prussia, as the leader of the German interest, steadily rejected this, because she hoped to acquire through possession the whole of Schleswig. Neither would Denmark give her consent, because, probably, she saw that the arrangement would give time to the allies to Germanize the population of Schleswig, which they were now said to be doing at a rapid rate. Hence she was even for the speedy termination of the armistice.

Under these circumstances, therefore, hostilities are likely to be renewed. Will England join in them? Even the Times says 'yes,' after having stood out in favor of peace during all the preceding stages of the controversy. The Morning Post, Palmerston's organ, which has always been belligerent, is now more so than ever. Still, nothing definite appears from the Ministry or from the House of Commons. It is impossible, therefore, to say how much of the newspaper writing is bluster, and how much is truly representative of the national determination. A short time will show, as the resumption of hostilities, with all its consequences, or else the emergence of some new peace gurranty, must be announced soon."

THE YOUNG PILGRIM.

Volume II. There has been some delay in the preparations for the second volume. The first and second number are now issued, and will be mailed together this week.

Subscribers will bear in mind that the terms are strictly in advance, and that no copies will be sent, after the first number, except to those heard from. Let every one, then, who has not written, write at once, that we may know who wish the paper continued the coming year.

In sending clubs of new subscribers, the individual names need not be given. All we want is the name to which the club is to be addressed. If any persons embraced in the club are old subscribers on last year's single list, their names should in all cases be given.

Volume I. We have several hundred sets of Vol. I. on hand, which we will send, postpaid, for 20 cents to every new subscriber to Vol. II. Send us 50 cents, then, and have The Young Pilgrim complete from the beginning, suitable for binding into a pretty little volume.

For the World's Crisis.

TREMONT CAMPMEETING.

Another precious season has been enjoyed in the tented grove. This meeting, though not unusually large in numbers, was, we have reason to believe, large in its results. A deeper work of God was manifested than at any former meeting at this place. Several backsliders were joyfully reclaimed, and quite a number sought and confessed the Lord. Two things were noticeable, viz: an unusual earnestness on the part of the ministry in their efforts to save the lost, and a sweet spirit of harmony and peace among the friends of Jesus. No perverse disputings, no doting about questions and strifes of words, marred the enjoyment and profitableness of the meeting.

Another pleasing feature of the meeting was the liberty enjoyed among us by other denominations. The Methodist church in the vicinity dismissed all its meetings, pitched its tent in our circle, and entered heartily into our worship of God. Our views of Scripture were never more boldly and ably set forth, yet they received a candid hearing, and did not disturb at all the comfort of our christian friends, not yet of "like precious faith." May God bless them and their preacher, who declared his intention of preaching a coming Jesus if all forsook him.

It was cheering to meet so many warm friends of the blessed Savior. Some whom we had met from year to year had fallen asleep in Jesus, and, even while we were together, there came the sad intelligence of our dear Bro. D. A. Jones' death. Sad hearts mourn, and we truly share their grief. But the night of weeping passes. The morn of joy soon will dawn. How cheering is the christian's hope!

Sunday was a good day. The multitude gathered and heard with attention the word of life. The ordinance of baptism was administered by Bro. H. L. Hastings in a most solemn and impressive manner, with the laying on of hands at the water's side. God blessed the deed. Those who scoff at this ordinance "do err, not knowing the Scriptures nor the power of God."

Monday, the fourth of July, was the best day of all. Many declared their independence of sin. That evening seven precious souls sought the freedom wherewith Christ makes free. May they obtain and maintain their freedom by an earnest warfare. The meeting received great help from the labors of Brn. H. K. Flagg, A. W. Sibley, Hathaway, Pierce, B. Batchelor of New Bedford, and others. The committee made ample provision for our physical wants, which added not a little to the comfort of the meeting. May the Lord reward them.

Tuesday morning, after a social season of prayer, we reluctantly left the hallowed spot of many blessings. Beloved in Jesus, again we've parted.

"Shall we meet with Christ our Savior,
When he comes to claim his own?
Shall we know his blessed favor
And sit down upon his throne?"

Amen. H. F. C.

For the World's Crisis.

PROVINCIAL REPORT.

Halifax, July 1st, 1864.

DEAR FRIENDS:—I should love to speak to you, but, as I cannot just now do that, I will write a few lines to you. So far my tour into the Provinces has been a success. I commenced labor in Rev. Samuel Robinson's Baptist church in St. John, N. B. During the several weeks that I remained here God revived his work, and gave us to see his salvation. The house was crowded to a perfect "jam" and "overflow", and the word took effect. At one of the inquiring meetings, forty anxious persons were present. This church has for several years ever treated me with great love and kindness. May God bless them for ever. I put up while there with my kind friend S. F. Mathews, who always acts the gentleman with me, and in whose family I am made to feel at home.

During my stay, Rev. Mr. More, of Bear River, N. S., came over the bay and pressed me to preach in his Baptist house, instead of the "Advent" house, when visiting Bear River. I, supposing it was all in good faith, agreed so to do; for I had previously agreed with friends to visit the place. In due time I took the boat across the bay to Digby. I tried to do some good in Digby, but could do but little for the hardness, ignorance, and unbelief of the people. I preached three evenings to a "small people," and saw no prospect of "lifting the game," and so concluded not to waste the powder! Several years, perhaps twenty-five years ago, I was at Cape Porpoise, in Maine, at the house of Bro. C. Huff. One day I took his rifle and went out to hunt. As I passed along the seashore, I saw what appeared to me to be a large bird rise into the air over the water. So I "drew a sight" and brought him down. I was excited a little, and off went "boots and socks," and I was into the water after my "game." Just as I was in my glory, I heard Bro. Huff's voice—"Ah, you have only shot a Poke!" This learned me the lesson to fire hereafter at something, at least, worth the powder and bullet. While I was preaching the last evening at Digby, some persons came quietly and opened a deep pit just at the door of the chapel, so that the people coming out might fall into it, and seriously if not fatally injure themselves. But God opened some one's eyes to see it in time, although the night was pitchy dark. "He shall give his angels charge concerning thee." The people in this whole region, from Digby to Goat Island, are decidedly, with a few good exceptions, the most mean, ignorant, savage sort of people I ever fell in with.

From Digby I went up to Smith's Cove, and preached one evening to a tolerable congregation. There is bigotry and stinginess enough here. At one place where I stopped I asked the lady if I could have some milk for breakfast. She said, "Yes, you can, but we have pigs and calves to feed"! Go it, pigs and calves.

I stepped in one day while here to a Baptist conference. I think there were seven persons present, and seven bluer ones you never saw; they were so blue they were black! One distilled blue deacon saw me come in, and instantly he began to speak of "trouble ahead," and "strange doctrines"; while I had the impiety to sit and laugh at the poor dolt's folly.

From Smith's Cove I went to Bear River, and began my work in Mr. More's church, but did not finish it there. I labored there two Sundays and several days, during which thirty persons arose for prayers, and then—how shall I describe the rest? The Baptists got mad at the doctrine of God. The poor Adventists got awfully scolded for not coming in to help, and when they did come they got awfully insulted by Mr. More and his people for coming according to the very invitation himself gave them to come. The Methodists were fearfully mad that the Baptists were likely to prosper. The Episcopal Churchmen looked sour, bitter, and kept "glum." Church members told foolish lies, and bigger fools believed them. The minister told one story one day, and another the next. (Ministers ought to keep sober.) It was reported that twenty-eight dollars were collected for me, while only eighteen came into my hands. I prayed and laughed to see it go. I was popular one day with all, and cast overboard the next day. Finally, the pot boiled so hard that the cover had to be removed, and I hopped out into the "Advent Tabernacle," where I preached some days and saw the work of God, and happily baptized a goodly number of converts in Bear River.

From Bear River I went to Goat Island, and saw some good people, but the most of them are a stupid class. I had a meeting appointed one day at three o'clock, and the people kept stringing in until four; of course I could not get time to preach. I thought of shooting the Poke! While at Bear River I put up with Bro. Wm. Mayo, one of those sweet, dear families that you only know to love. I am now in Halifax. I meet with a kind and warm reception from the Rev. Bro. who invited me, and hope for good things.

For the World's Crisis.

BRO. D. A. JONES.

BRO. GRANT:—I was made sad by the reading of the telegram in a late Crisis—"Bro. D. A. Jones is dead." Can it be that that beloved brother has fallen a victim to death, and that in his youthful days, in the meridian of his usefulness? But so it is. The old enemy has triumphed and taken his victim, breaking the most sacred ties, causing many hearts to bleed and tears to flow. But he sleeps in Jesus. His life is hid with Christ in God, made secure. In short, he was wise enough to get his life insured. Thus it will be sure at the coming of the Life-giver.

But how can he be spared in an emergency like the present? The laborers are few. The calls are many. The harvest is great. But still we have to yield to the Adamic penalty—"Dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return."

My first acquaintance with Bro. Jones was made while riding from Waterbury to Plymouth, Ct., on the Naugatuck R. R. He was coming from New York; had heard I was in that region; thought he had his eye on the right man,—took me by the hand and found he was not mistaken; and although but a boy, and a short interview, still it bound me to Daniel by a chord of love never to be broken. Subsequently at Danielsonville, in the early history of that church, his interest, labor and sacrifice for God and his truth, with his bitter trials in leaving that delightful field for the East, where he devoted himself to the missionary labor with a zeal and sacrifice worthy of all commendation, till his health was impaired, and it became necessary for him to return to his native State, and finally to his "oasis," the former place of his residence, to spend the remnant of his days. Here he was successful in his business, where he could provide for his family and preach the gospel to the poor in all that region. And he was ever faithful and active in that department of labor. Never consulted his own comfort or ease,—but, What can I do for Christ and the cause? considering no sacrifice too great for Christ's sake.

Thus Bro. Jones lived three years in one; and although he has fallen young in years, his labor and sacrifice have been abundant, and his loss will be severely felt by the church looking for redemption.

I can but weep. I loved him. He was a son in the gospel. My last interview with him was at the Boston Conference last April. But he has gone to the grave, to wait the trumpet's call, when Daniel, "with the wise," will shine as the stars in the firmament for ever and ever.

His companion and fatherless children have drank the bitter cup, and are sorely bereaved. Then how dear was Daniel to his parents and sister! But they must bow with submission. The most tender ties have been cut, and, were it not for the good hope, these sad afflictions would be unendurable. But the gospel bringing the dead to life, and the changing of the living bringing them to their Eden home, where parting will never be known and life will be eternal, sweetens the bitter cup, binds the broken heart, and gives sweet comfort; and the soon coming of this event adds more pleasure still.

So I would urge all the weeping ones to run to the life-giving fountain, and be prepared to meet their loved one in the land of life and immortality.

BOWER'S HISTORY OF THE POPES.—Has any Bro. or Sr. a copy of Bower's History of the Popes, that they will sell at a fair price? If they have, will they please let me know at Polk City, Iowa, or through the Crisis, stating the price? I. K. LOMBARD.

PHOTOGRAPH OF REV. ED. IRVING.

Card photographs of this great Scottish Presbyterian minister, copied from a splendid steel plate engraving, made in London the year of his death, 1834, being the first ever taken and sold in this country. He is in the pulpit at the Caledonian Chapel, his towering form six feet four inches in height, covered with the black robes of his order; one arm is grandly uplifted in gesture, while the other rests on the open Bible before him; the raven hair is parted in the middle over a magnificent brow, the striking attitude, the majestic countenance, the chiseled lip, the dilated nostril, the fire-flashing eye are all here. The piercing, lightning glance magnetizes you. You gaze and are spell-bound. You actually wait to see the lips part, and to hear again the gorgeous thunders of eloquence roll forth from the golden-mouthed orator,—to feel the shrill of that voice that thirty years ago shook all Great Britain as with an angel's summons, proclaiming "The Lord cometh!" The likeness given in Mrs. Oliphant's recent Life of Irving is lifeless, tame, and but a miserable caricature. Those that love and admire the man and his sainted memory—and they are not a few—now have a chance to secure an accurate picture of him, with a fac-simile of his autograph. Price by mail, prepaid, 50 cents single, or $5 per dozen.

All papers printing this notice entire, and conspicuously, and sending me post-paid a single copy, will receive one photograph by mail. Cash orders only attended to.

THE DAY OF TROUBLE.

We would say to all the humble poor scattered throughout the land, who are crying to God out of desolate places, and are waiting and watching for the coming of Jesus more than they who watch for the morning, you are welcome to make your way to this place; and you who are troubled (with surrounding difficulties) we would say, Rest with us in the day of the Lord's revelation and trouble coming on the land, and let us watch and pray always that we may be hid in the day of the Lord's fierce anger, when he ariseth to shake terribly the earth. Correspondence.

From Bro. H. E. Twing.

BRO. GRANT:—I am thankful that I am permitted to write a few lines once more. I have within a few weeks received a number of letters from unknown sources, containing money, some of them contain no name, by which I can write to them and thank them for the kind offerings. But I go and tell Jesus. I pray that he will reward them in this life a hundred-fold and in the world to come, O! may the kind sympathizing ones obtain eternal life. One dear widow writes me that she has given up tea and coffee, and by so doing has been enabled to send me a token of love. God bless you, and thank you, are too common expressions. I do not find words to express my feelings. I am satisfied that if Jesus was now on this earth, as the man of sorrows, there are some even now that would love to minister to his necessities.

I am still in feeble health. I do want to endure my affliction patiently without murmuring at my lot, knowing that affliction and trials are necessary for us; they purge out the dross; but our heavenly Father's eye is continually upon us when we are in the furnace of affliction, and soon he will say, It is enough, come up higher!

Bro. Grant, I have not asked my brethren to give me a farthing. I have received from those who sympathize with me, and my dear wife, some twelve dollars since April 1st. Can I doubt God's promises? They are sure. He is mindful of our temporal necessities, and they will be supplied from his great storehouse. God has many door-keepers and stewards in his granary, and all of his poor children can draw their daily rations. My heart says, Praise the Lord! The Lord permitting us, we shall be at the Wilbraham camp-meeting. But stop, here is a letter from Minnesota, Castle Rock. I do not know any body there. I will open it. Ah! there is $1,25, sent by three young pilgrims. I will tell Jesus about them. They shall have my feeble prayers in their behalf. I wonder what Mary will say when she comes home from her work at night. I think I see tears in her eyes as she says, God does think of us in our afflictions, and gives us sympathizing friends to cheer us by the way. Brethren, I will strive to greet you in the kingdom of God,

Feeding Hills, Mass. H. E. TWING.

From Bro. B. P. Manning.

BRO. GRANT:—I am now gaining my health slowly. I have been confined to my bed from the 28th day of last December to the 28th of May, with the exception of ten days in March. I am now able to walk a few rods in a day. My flesh is most all gone from my bones. Still God has been good to me. No one knows the pain I have suffered, but the Lord and myself. But it is all right.

I wish to say to the brethren and sisters, those that have assisted me in the past winter, that they have my prayers that God will preserve them from the snare that is coming on the world till Jesus comes, and then give them eternal life in the kingdom of God. As I never expect to see your faces in the flesh, I wish you would drop me a few lines. You do not know how it cheers my poor heart to hear from the dear saints of the Lord. O! how I long to see Jesus and be made like him. Dear brethren and sisters, let me have your prayers, that God would relieve me.

Your brother in great pain,

Goffstown. N. H. B. P. MANNING.

From Bro. J. W. Austin.

BRO. GRANT:—Myself and wife are here close beside the great father of waters, far from our home. We like the place very well. The scenery is fine, but the habits and morals of the people are very bad. Almost all Germans. We thirst for the preaching of the blessed truths that we love and have so often heard for a few years past. We feel that the coming of the Lord draweth nigh, and can only say, "Come, Lord Jesus, and come quickly," and put an end to sin, and bring in everlasting righteousness. The people here are mostly Catholics and Lutherans, quite similar in their habits and worship. They attend meeting on Sunday morning and often have a shooting match in the afternoon. It is a hard place to enjoy the Sabbath, especially for one brought up in New England. We have heard but two sermons in our own language for six or seven weeks, and that by a German Methodist, who was kind enough to accommodate us thus far once in three weeks. It was well received in the place of better. We have had the privilege of meeting at the Methodist minister's house on Thursday evenings for prayer, all in German, but still it is worship; therefore we enjoy it.

I prize the Crisis more and more since it has come here. I cannot do without it, for it supplies, in a great measure, the place of the gospel of the kingdom.

Yours in love, JOHN W. AUSTIN.

From Bro. P. Tandy.

DEAR BRETHREN AND SISTERS:—We are living in a grand and awful time; even in "perilous times." The enemies of God's precious truth are graphically described by St. Paul in the following language (2 Tim. 1: 9),—

"This know also, that in the last days perilous times shall come. For men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, without natural affection, trucebreakers, false accusers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of those that are good, traitors, heady, high-minded, lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God; having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof; from such turn away! For of this sort are they which creep into houses, and lead captive silly women laden with sins, led away with divers lusts, ever learning, and never able to come to the knowledge of the truth. Now as Jannes and Jambres withstood Moses, so do these also resist the truth; men of corrupt minds, reprobate concerning the faith. But they shall proceed no further; for their folly shall be made manifest unto all men, as theirs also was."

I consider that this language describes our whereabouts. If so, we are in the last days of perilous times. Oh! how important that we have our lamps trimmed and burning, and our vessels filled with oil. May God help us all to be practical christians daily!

Yours in hope of redemption when the Lord comes, P. TANDY.

BRO. GRANT:—Those tracts you sent in the spring—for which accept our grateful thanks—are doing quite an extensive mission work in this locality. I begin to realize that the feeblest agencies armed with a "thus saith the Lord," can make even Satan tremble in his strongholds.

Those Cincinnati tracts seem to be just the thing for a certain class, and are bringing out the light and the truth both at home and abroad. They are now in the hands of a noted infidel, who "glories in his infirmity," but professes to be willing to examine the subject. Have you more tracts of the same sort you could spare?

We are having a severe drouth in this section of country that threatens to destroy every thing in the shape of vegetation. If it continues much longer there must necessarily be great suffering among all classes, but especially those made friendless by the war.

DEATH WILL BE DESTROYED.

Bro. Grant:—I have just received the sad news that my dear father Preble sleeps among the dead. He died June 28th, nearly eighty-three years of age. He resided in Richmond, Me., with my brother, Eld. N. Preble. My dear mother is now left a widow, in her eightieth year, after having lived with my father more than sixty years!

O, when will our Savior come and break the power of death! Come, Lord Jesus, and come quickly. T. M. PREBLE.

MARY A. CRUSE.

Fell asleep in Jesus, in Westminster, Mass., June 11th, 1864, Mary E. Cruse, aged seventeen years.

Her disease was consumption, and her sufferings for three months were very great. When told that she could not recover, she said she was willing to live or die, as the Lord saw fit. The blessed hope sustained her amid her sufferings; and towards the last she desired to die. When asked by a friend if she did not expect to be with Jesus when she died, her reply was, "No, not till the resurrection." Death had no terrors to her. She was calm when she spoke of dying, and gave directions concerning her funeral. As the closing scene approached, she gave the parting hand to her friends, kissed them, and bade them good bye, and told them all to meet her in the kingdom. She said her sleep in the grave would be short. Her last words were, "I am happy." As the last rays of the setting sun gilded Wachusett's heights, she gently breathed her life away. It was the happiest death bed scene I ever witnessed.

Her funeral was attended by Brn. J. D. Merriam and J. C. Day, of Ashburnham, who spoke words of comfort from various portions of the Scriptures.

Ah! who for thee need tears of sorrow weep,
That looks upon thee in thy placid sleep?
No sign of suff'ring marks thy marble brow,
But perfect peace seems resting on thee now.

SAMUEL MITCHELL.

Fell asleep in Jesus, in Litchfield, Me., March 27th, 1864, Bro. Samuel Mitchell, aged sixty-four.

For a number of years the health of Bro. M. had been declining, and frequently had he been called to pass through the deep waters of sorrow; yet amid all he was sustained by the blessed hope of the gospel. He was one of those who first embraced the truths relating to the coming and kingdom of Christ, and in them he ever afterwards rejoiced. His disease, consumption, he bore with patience. His end was peaceful, and radiant with gospel light. A heart-stricken widow, and several children, weep over his grave, but it is in expectation that husband and father will soon awake to die no more. May the abundant grace of God sustain them. R. R. FREDDIE PETTINGILLE.

Died of heart disease, in Farmington, Wis., June 20th, 1864, Freddie G., only son of Jay and Adaline Pettingille, aged five years, three months and twenty days.

Funeral discourse by the writer, from John 3: 7,—"Marvel not that I said unto thee, ye must be born again."

These afflicted parents love the blessed truths of the Bible. O may the Lord sustain them in this time of trial, and lead them in the straight and narrow way to an endless life. May the Lord soon come and destroy death, and deliver the children of God from the bondage of corruption.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

LONDON, June 23. The Conference yesterday accomplished nothing. The proposition for arbitration was rejected. The Conference is regarded as a failure, but will meet again on the 25th for completion of formal business. It is supposed that hostilities will recommence on the 27th.

No change in the Dano-German question. It is stated that Austria is the only belligerent that favors the proposed arbitration; it is also stated that the cry for peace is loud at Vienna.

The London journals continue a warlike tone toward Germany, except the London Star.

DESTRUCTION OF THE ALABAMA.

Sunday, 19th ult. at 10 30 A. M., the Alabama was seen coming out of Cherbourg harbor towards the Kearsarge which was lying to about 9 miles from the land.

At 11. 10 A. M., the Alabama commenced the action, by firing with the starboard battery at the distance of about a mile. The Kearsarge commenced firing immediately with her starboard guns, and a sharp engagement by very rapid firing took place. Shot and shell were used by both vessels. In the meantime both ships maneuvered around each other in complete circles at the distance of a quarter to a half a mile.

At 12 o'clock the firing from the Alabama was observed to slacken and she appeared to be making head sail and shaping her course for the land. At 12.30 she was in a disabled and sinking condition.

The Deerhound ran down to her and picked up Capt. Semmes and forty of his men who had taken to their boats.

The Kearsarge appeared to be disabled, although her boats were out and picked up the remainder of the pirate's crew.

The Alabama sunk in about thirty minutes after Semmes left her.

The Alabama lost one officer and seven men killed, and one officer and sixteen men wounded. Capt. Semmes was slightly wounded.

Liverpool, June 25th, Queenstown 26th.

Great anxiety is manifested for a ministerial announcement of the result of the conference and the policy of England on the Dano-German question. There is a very unsettled feeling, and many of the journals continue to hold a decidedly warlike tone.

The yacht Deerhound is charged with being a mere tender or consort of the pirate Alabama.

It is rumored that Semmes will have another pirate steamer in August.

It was stated that orders had been issued by the English Government to have ready all the equipments necessary for 30,000 troops.

The King of Wirtemburg is dead.

A letter in the Paris Patrie states that Semmes has announced that on the 15th of August he will again embark in a new Alabama, which will then be completed.

The seamen of the old Alabama will continue to receive the pay and form a part of the crew of the new cruiser. Rumor points to the steamer Rappahannock, ex-British war vessel which stole away from Sheerness to Calais, as likly to be Semmes' next vessel.

A committee headed by Admiral Anson, has been formed in London to raise, by guinea subscriptions, funds for the purchase of a handsome sword to replace that which Semmes sank with his ship. It is reported that a considerable sum will be raised in Liverpool for that object.

A semi-official Berlin paper represents that England has declared that on the renewal of hostilities she will place herself with her fleet on the side of Denmark.

It is reported from Schleswig that the German troops were already moving northward to take up positions. It is also reported that an immediate attack will be made on Funen and Alsen when the armistice is over.

The London Herald contends that the failure of the Conference ought unquestionably to involve the resignation of the British Ministry.

The United Service Gazette says that orders hrve been issued to prepare and hold in readiness for immediate use the necessary warlike equipments for 30,000 troops.

LATER.

It is stated that Prussia and Austria will act in concert until Denmark is compelled to accept of peace.

The rebel commissioner Slidell had an interview with Napoleon on the 28th ult.

Another plot against Napoleon has been discovered.

A speedy attack upon Alson is expected.

It is stated that the German Sovereigns had come to an understanding that Prussia, with the concurrence of Austria, should propose at the Federal Diet that the German Confederation should declare war against Denmark.

THE DANO-GERMAN QUESTION. The final meeting of the Conference took place on the 25th. It was purely formal, and the war had recommenced. It is understood that at the last meeting the representatives of the German powers read a declaration in which they threw upon Denmark the whole responsibility, which Denmark entirely repudiates.

A letter was read from the Emperor of Russia, announcing that he had ceded his claims upon Holstein to the Duke of Oldenburg, and that these claims must be considered as revived by the present situation.

The Conference unanimously sustained a vote of thanks to Earl Russell, who presided at its sittings. Earl Russell reviewed the labors of the Conference, and expressed a hope, in which all the neutral powers concurred, that whatever might be the issue in the conflict, the independence of the Danish monarbhy would be maintained.

DOMESTIC.

Washington, July 5th. A letter from the Army of the Potomac states that the practice of picket firing has been stopped by mutual consent. The rebels keep up intercourse with our men, and sup with them every opportunity. There are frequent fires in Petersburg. The firemen are not called out but are kept in the trenches. We are fighting the whole population of Petersburg. The 8th, 5th and 9th corps are so near the enemy that constant skirmishing occurs. Refugees and deserters report great suffering in Richmond for want of food since their communications were cut.

Harrisburg, Pa., July 6th. Gov. Curtin calls for 12,000 volunteers in addition to those called for yesterday, to serve 100 days in Pennsylvania, Maryland and Washington.

Baltimore, July 6th—Midnight. There are rumors that the enemy are in large force on this side of the Potomac. Some estimate their number at thirty thousand, but I think the report is doubtful.

New York, July 7th. The World's Washington dispatch says: Notwithstanding the wild reports, it is learned that the rebels burned only one important bridge west of Harper's Ferry, at Patterson's Creek.

Gov. Curtin telegraphs that 20,000 rebels had crossed at Point of Rocks, when the trains from here have run to-day regularly to and beyond that point.

New York, July 7th. The Tribune's Washington dispatch says Petersburg is now covered by over 100 of our guns, and were Gen. Grant to give the word its destruction would be the work of but a few hours.

A private letter from off Charleston says the rebel officers sent there have been placed in quarters where the rebel-shell mostly fall.

The cause of the suspension of habeas corpus in Kentucky was anticipated trouble in enforcing the draft, and particularly in the enlistment of slaves.

New York, July 7th. The Herald's 18th corps correspondent, writing on the 2nd inst., says: To-day we witnessed one of the most exciting artillery battles of the war. After two hours cannonading the rebel batteries were completely silenced and the gunners driven from their places.

Later—3 P. M. The rebels opened again fiercely and soon the enemy's line of works was enveloped in a continuous cloud of dust caused by our shells. The rebel gunners were seen running to the rear to places of safety. After two hours more of fighting every rebel battery was silenced. Our batteries have been placed with great skill and care, so that at any moment they concentrate upon any given point.

Our bombardment of Petersburg is steadily doing its work, numbers of buildings having already been destroyed.

The Tribune's Monocacy dispatch of the 7th says Harper's Ferry is still held by the rebels, with sharp-shooters in the houses, to prevent our men marching down from the hights. We hold the hights. A sharp fight occurred last night, but we could not dislodge the rebels. The bridge at Harper's Ferry was fired again by the rebels and fifty feet of the trestle-work destroyed.

New York, July 8th. The Tribune's Harrisburg dispatch of the 7th says Gen. Couch reports that the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad telegraph that a rebel force thirty thousand strong is marching on Maryland. They ascertained the fact from private agents. Fifteen hundred of the enemy left Hagerstown this morning, en route to Frederick City. Rumor says there are several thousand rebels between Greencastle and Hagerstown, but it is doubtful. The party at Hagerstown was of Imboden's and Jenkins' old force. There are no rebels this side of Hagerstown.

The Herald's Chambersburg dispatch of the 8th says the rebel invaders consist of cavalry, infantry and artillery to the number of 20,000. The column under Imboden entered Hagerstown this morning and ransacked the town, committing all manner of depredations, burning several private dwellings. Imboden demanded $20,000 or he would burn Zeller's & Co.'s warehouse, which was paid, although a like sum had already been paid to a previous party.

The Tribune's Harrisburg dispatch of the 8th says the Court House, railroad depot and all railroad buildings at Hagerstown were burned.

The Tribune's Washington dispatch says: Strong pressure is being brought to bear on the government to demand the rendition of the pirate semmes and crew, picked up by the Deerhound, and that Secretary Seward will resist the pressure.

New York, July 8th. The Express gives currency to a rumor that Gen. Dix, in obedience to orders from the President, will not reappear in the civil process instituted against him before Judge Russell, for shutting up the World and Journal of Commerce. "As at present advised," says the Express, "it is believed Gov. Seymour will, if necessary, after showing the powerlessness of the civil courts, call upon the militia of the State to aid in executing the process of the court, if the court should issue a warrant for the arrest of Gen. Dix and it should be resisted."

Col. Cleveland Winslow, of the 5th New York regiment, died yesterday at Alexandria.

New York, July 9th. The Herald's headquarters Army of the Potomac dispatch of the 7th, says that deserters are continually coming into our lines. They complain of short rations in Petersburg. In this respect the siege of Vicksburg is being acted over again. From all accounts, including refugees, the rebel army and population is not less than 200,000 who have to be fed in the two cities, and as the rebel government has got to feed or get rid of them, the problem of the siege cannot be long in solving.

Washington, July 9. An official report from Maj. Gen. Wallace states that a battle took place between the forces under his command and the rebel forces at Monocacy to-day, in which our forces were overpowered by superior numbers and forced to retreat in disorder. The rebels are retreating on Baltimore.

BALTIMORE, July 9, 1864—midnight.

Citizens of Baltimore:—We have been unwilling to create unnecessary alarm or agitation in this community by any appeal for your immediate assistance in resisting the threatened invasion that may be deemed premature; but we have no longer such an apprehension, and feel no hesitation in declaring that, in our opinion, the danger which now threatens the city is imminent, and if you would avert it, every loyal man must at once prepare to meet it. The invading enemy is, by the last accounts, approaching the city.

MEN. All the men that can be raised are wanted to occupy the fortifications already compieted, and to complete others. It is not important how you should come, but it is most important that you should come at once. Come in your leagues, or come in your militia companies, but come in crowds and come quickly.

Baltimore, July 10. The excitement here is intense. Union citizens have been arming all night. At six o'clock this morning the alarm bells were rung. Parties headed by drum and fife are moving through town to man the defensive works.

July 11. The rebel cavalry burnt the residence of Gov. Bradford this morning. They are now operating on the Philadeldhia Railroad.

New York, July 11. Some rebel cavalry dashed into Darnstown this morning, plundered the stores, stole cattle, and left in the direction of Frederick. They are sending all their plunder to the Virginia side of the Potomac.

The latest reports express the opinion that the rebels are making toward Washington.

The rebel cavalry, some 1200 strong, at Greenspring Valley, destroyed the bridges on the Northern Central Railroad. It is also reported that a large body of rebels are marching on York, Penn.

Philadelphia, July 11. The telegraph lines crossing the Susquehanna river at Port Deposit, Md. have been cut.

The rebels got possession of the wires at Magnolia, about fourteen miles from Baltimore, and intercepted a large number of dispatches. We have no communication with Washington, and there is great excitement here. They also attacked a train at Magnolia, capturing all the officers and soldiers, among them Maj. Gen. Franklin. They robbed most of the passengers' pockets of watches and money; also unloaded baggage. Then set fire to the train, burning three first class cars, one second class, and the baggage cars.

It is ascertained that two trains were destroyed upon the Philadelphia, Wilmington and Baltimore railroad.

Baltimore, July 11. Panic-stricken refugees arriving to-day from the vicinity of Edwards' Ferry state that the rebels were crossing to the north side of the Potomac at that point in large numbers, Breckenridge was believed to be in command.

We have just received the following from a source of great reliability:

The rebel army of invasion marched down the valley with 45,000 men, including 8000 cavalry, under Major General J. Early and Brigadier Generals Breckinridge, Ransom, Imboden and McCruseland. Longstreet was at Gordonsville on Tuesday last with an additional force to join the army of invasion. The purpose of the army is to attempt to capture Washington by surprise.

THE NEW ENROLLMENT LAW.—The following is the enrollment law as it passed both branches of Congress and was signed by the President:—

First—The President may call for any number of men as volunteers for respective terms of one, two and three years. Such volunteers or their substitutes shall be credited to town, township, ward, etc., toward the quota of which they may have volunteered or engaged as substitutes. Every accecpted and mustered volunteer for one year shall receive $100 bounty, for two years $200, for three years $300, one-third of the bounty at the time of muster, one-third at the expiration of half the term of service, and one-third at the expiration of the term of service. In case of his death in service, the residue of the bounty goes to the widow, or, in case there is no widow, then to the children; if no children, to the soldier's mother if she be a widow.

Second—If the quota is not filled within fifty days after such call, then the President shall immediately order the draft for one year to fill such quota or any part thereof, which may be unfilled, and in case of any such draft no payment of money shall be accepted or received by the Government as commutation to release any enrolled or drafted men from personal obligation to perform military service.

Third—It shall he lawful for the executive of any of the States to send recruiting agents into any of the States declared to be in rebellion, except Tennessee, Arkansas and Louisiana, to recruit volunteers under any call, under the provisions of this act, who shall be credited to the State and to the respective subdivision thereof which may procure enlistment.

Fourth—Drafted men, substitutes and volunteers shall be assigned to organizations from their own States, and as far as possible of their own selection.

Fifth—Any person under sixteen, enlisted or mustered without the consent of his parents or guardians, shall be immediately discharged upon the repayment of the bounty received by him, and the officer knowingly enlisting or mustering such person, shall be dismissed the service with forfeiture of pay and allowances and be subject to court martial.

Sixth—Drafts shall be for one hundred per centum in addition to the number required to fill the quotas.

Seventh—Drafted persons shall be allowed transportation to the place of rendezvous.

Eighth—All persons in the naval service of the United States, who have entered said service during the present rebellion, and who have not been credited to the quota of any town, district, ward, or State, by reason of their being in said service, and not enrolled prior to February 24, 1864, shall, upon satisfactory proof of residence made to the secretary of war, be enrolled and credited to the quotas of their places of residence.

Ninth—Drafted men absent from their homes shall be notified as soon as possible, but shall not be deemed deserters till a reasonable time is given them to return.

Tenth—The existing law is not changed in respect to persons conscientiously opposed to bearing arms.

WAIFS FROM WASHINGTON.—The Washington correspondent of the Boston Journal, under date of June 26th, says:—

"Congress did a 'sutler's business' last week. All fugitive slave laws were repealed. All men were made equal before the law in courts of justice. The coast-wise slave-trade was repealed."

Items.

☞ The indefatigable Perham succeeded in getting through Congress his bill for a Northern Pacific railroad, and it has been signed by the President. The company will be organized in Boston and the first meeting will be held about the first of September.

☞ The wheat harvest commenced in the vicinity of Quincy, Ill., the middle of last week. The Chicago Journal says the crop is represented as being better than it has been for years, and the yield will be abundant.

☞ The cable destined to connect Europe with America, has now been fairly commenced, and by this time next year we expect to announce the preparation for, if not the actual departure of the Great Eastern steamship with the cable on board.

THE CONSTITUTION
Of the Advent Christian Association as now revised and amended.

ART. I. This Society shall be known by the name of the Advent Christian Association.

ART. II. The objects of this Society shall be the promulgation of Bible truth and the promotion of vital piety by the formation of a Christian Publication Society for the issue of books, tracts and periodicals.

ART. III. The officers of this Society shall be a President, Vice-President, Secretary, Treasurer and nine Directors, who, together with the Editor or Editors, shall constitute a Board of Managers.

ART. IV. The members of this Society shall consist of all pastors and evangelists co-operating, and of delegates from churches* also co-operating, and of all officers of this Association. Each church shall be allowed one delegate and one additional delegate for every fifty members above the number of twenty-five members.

ART. V. The duties of the officers shall be the same as are usually performed by such officers. And the Board of Managers shall by means of Committees whom they shall appoint provide for the discharge of the duties indicated in the second article of this Constitution. A majority of the Board at any meeting duly notified and two-thirds present at any time without notice, shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business. The Board shall also fill vacancies occurring until the next annual meeting of the Society. The Board shall make annual reports of all funds received and disbursed, of business transacted, and of the condition of the various interests of the Society. The Board shall be chosen by ballot at the annual meeting of the Society.

ART. VI. The annual meeting of the Society shall be held at such time and place as shall be declared by adjournment of the Society, or appointed by the Board. Special meetings may be called by the Society, by public notice given at least three weeks previously, at the request of ten members, either preachers or delegates from the separate churches.

ART. VII. This Constitution may be amended by a majority at any regular meeting, when two months' notice of the proposed amendment has been given, or without such notice, by two-thirds of the members present at any annual meeting.

ART. VIII. The Editor or Editors of the World's Crisis shall be chosen by ballot at the annual meeting of the Advent Christian Association, or at any special meeting called for that purpose, provided six weeks' notice be given of the same through the columns of the Crisis.

Proposed amendment for Art. IV. now on the table:—"And each church living at such a distance that they cannot conveniently be represented by a delegate from among themselves, may note by written communication to the Secretary, or may select as their proxy any person whom they may designate, whether he reside among them or not."

NOTE. A church is defined in the words of Wesley, "A Society of believers in Jesus Christ."

Meeting of the Advent Christian Association.

The fifth annual meeting of this Society will be held at Wilbraham Grove, commencing at 4 o'clock P. M., Tuesday, Aug. 23d, 1864.

A full representation from all churches co-operating with this Society, and a full attendance of preachers thus co-operating is desirable at this meeting. Questions too important to admit of neglect or indifference on the part of the churches scattered abroad, or of the ministry, will come before this meeting. Does the Constitution require amendment? Shall there be any change in the editorial management of the Crisis? To whom as officers of the Society shall we intrust the funds and various interests of the same for the coming year? These, among many others that will arise, are questions to be decided at this meeting. Let no trifling pecuniary consideration, nor loss of time, prevent a general gathering of the friends of this Association. Each church (i. e., society of believers in Jesus Christ) co-operating, is entitled to one delegate, and one additional delegate for every fifty members above the number of twenty-five members.

Remember ☞ That all delegates sent by churches to the Advent Christian Association must be furnished with written credentials, or forfeit their right to membership. ☜

H. F. CARPENTER, Clerk.
Rutland, Vt., July 7th, 1864.

Meeting of the Board.

The Board of the Advent Christian Association will meet at Wilbraham Grove, Tuesday, Aug. 23d, 1864, at 9 o'clock, A. M. Punctual attendance requested. H. F. CARPENTER, Clerk.

Wisconsin Annual Conference.

The "Advent Christian Conference" will hold its yearly session in connection with the Wisconsin Campmeeting, at Okee, Columbia Co., Wis., twenty miles north west from Madison, by the way of Sodi, beginning September 11th, 1864.

Let every church send delegates, and every minister be in attendance if possible; otherwise be sure to report by letter. Churches and ministers who have not yet united, should be sure to do so this year, that we may move in order and harmony, and consequently with greater strength for good. Delegates should bring letters of appointment from churches, and ministers with whom we are not acquainted should bring letters of commendation.

Letters may be sent to me at Baraboo, Sauk Co., Wis. W. SHELDON, Secretary of Conf.

Notice.

I intend, as the Lord may direct, to visit the scattered ones in the Canadian Provinces, and proclaim as best I can the truths of the coming kingdom. I am willing to go anywhere where good can be done, into back settlements, large places, or small, wherever there are a few, or none, who are waiting for the coming King. I shall travel as I can, on foot, when I can go no other way, and preach where there is an open door, or one to be opened. I am almost without means to do so, but I shall trust in the Lord; and if there are any waiting ones who wish to hear the message, the hour of his judgment is come," and will write to me, directing letters to BOX 231, MONTREAL, C. E. I will try to visit them in the name of the Lord.

L. C. MCKINSTRY.

A LIBERAL OFFER.

Being satisfied that time is short, and that what is done must be done quickly; and feeling anxious to do what we can to arouse a sleeping world and church, we make the following liberal offer:—

Any one who will send three or more new subscribers to the Crisis for six months or one year, with advance pay for the same, shall receive one third the value of the money sent, in any of our books and tracts they may select. For instance, if they send three dollars, they receive one dollar's worth of books or tracts; for six dollars, we send them two dollars' worth; for twelve dollars, four dollars' worth, etc.

Let every reader take hold of the work in earnest, and help scatter tracts, books and papers like autumnal leaves.

For the World's Crisis.

ARE YOU WATCHING?

Brother, sister, are you watching,
Are you longing for the day?
For the coming of the Bridegroom
Can you now sincerely pray?

Are your lamps all trimmed and burning?
Are your vessels filled with oil?
Are you now his faithful servants?
For the Master do you toil?

Are you gentle and long suff'ring?
Are you ready to forgive?
Are you faithful to your calling,
For the good of others live?

Search your hearts and look within you,
Seek for pure and holy love;
Let not this vain world allure you,
Seek for treasure that's above.

Without spot, without a blemish,
We must stand before Him there,—
Pass the ordeal, if found ready,
Then eternal joys we'll share.

INTERESTING CORRESPONDENCE, Etc.

BRO. GRANT:—I wish to say a few words in reference to a correspondent of ours in whom we feel a very great interest. She has been, through the influence of our dear Sister Gilbert (under God), snatched as a brand from the burning, inasmuch as she had well nigh slipped into the abyss of Spiritualism or mysticism. The good Lord seems to have brought her through deep waters until she has found the foundation rock, which is Christ our life. In her recent communication she expresses strong convictions that it is her duty to hold forth the precious truths of life in Jesus Christ only. Those acquainted with her regard her as possessing superior talents, and, having the gift of the good Spirit, no doubt may be the means of much good in the cause.

That you may see the drift of her mind, I thought I would enclose two of her letters to you, believing that you may publish the whole or a part which would be meet for the household. We also send by her request a rather remarkable dream she recently had, which exercised her mind as being ominous of future and proximate events. If we mistake not, God is leading her, and will manifest his power to save through her instrumentality.

May the Lord guide us all to his praise and glory. Fraternally yours,

R. WILLARD.

Hammonton, N. J., April, 1863.

"My dear friend Mrs. W.:—Your precious letter just read touched a chord deep down in my heart, which vibrates yet. . . . All of your letters have been precious to me, but none have stirred me as the last. Every word was so fitting to my present state. In very truth I am being led up to the sacrifice. I see nothing left for me but to lay all, yes, ALL there! But I am willing, I believe, and for many days I have been kept in the most perfect peace. Not a doubt, not a fear. "Bless the Lord, O my soul." The strong arm of the Almighty is underneath me, and I shall not be moved. EVERY EARTHLY THING is at stake now, and I never was so strong, so unmovable. Jesus is mine, and I am happy. Friends, home, money, even my good name, are as nothing. Welcome poverty, disgrace, yea, even death, if needs be; they cannot rob me of that hope which is big with immortality. O! this is a new, a large place, into which I am being led. But this great strength is for use. Very well do I know it will all be needed, but I am resting on God, and he will be my rock and refuge when the storm beats.

"Since I began to walk in the light (which is about two years), the word of God has been my study constantly, and I have been unable, with very few exceptions, to read anything besides. Wonderful light has now and then gleamed upon a single passage or chapter, making it as unmistakably plain as though the voice of God had spoken in my natural ear. I have prayed exceedingly for this understanding constantly, but I do not always have it. I know it is the truth that I most of any thing desire. I care not where it may lead. I only pray, God, give me thine own truth; and I think ever since I put up this prayer in sincerity God has been feeding me with the milk of the word. But latterly I have had some strong meat, and it is of this I wish to speak. And yet I see my danger (I think you see and feel it too in regard to myself) of trusting in the human.

"The intense longings that I have felt to meet you are based upon the feeling that you could be such a help to me in reading the Bible and learning the deep things of God; and yet I think, if I know my own heart, I trust and love you only because I believe you sit at the feet of Jesus and learn of him. . . . I have all my life been striving for something to love in the human; reaching out to this and that person for that which God only could bestow, and as constantly thwarted, until my crushed heart was forced to turn to the only true source. This is why every earthly prop had to be removed, and this is why I must continue alone for a season, until I am willing and able to hold all my friends subservient to God.

"I met a man the other night who seemed to be full of the love of God. While he talked my heart burned. He expounded the Scriptures as I have never heard any one, and seemed to possess the power of making every word he spoke like a picture to my mind's eye. He is of like faith with yourself, waiting for the second coming of Christ. As I separated from him, the old desire to meet you came up with renewed power that I might converse with you upon the immortality of the soul, etc., etc. Just at this moment the passage found in 1 John 2: 27 is presented with wonderful clearness. I know that my Bible and my God are all I need, but He often uses instruments. But the will of God be done in this as in all other things. I was asking this man of God where I could procure some of 'Hastings' works, and he cautioned me against reading anything but the Bible. He observed that people were so apt to introduce self into their books. Then I thought of "Muller," whose entire library consists of a Bible and two Testaments."

ANOTHER EXTRACT.

"For days I have been trying to reason myself out of the conviction that I must write and tell you all the strange exercises I have passed through since last writing you. . . . . I had nearly mailed my last to you when my husband was violently seized with congestion of the lungs and fever, and I have taken the entire care of him night and day, and my kind heavenly Father has given me wonderful strength, both physical and spiritual; and in all my varied trials His great arm has been underneath me. Glory to his excellent name. This is the second call to my husband within the year—Be ye ready! He is again convalescent. And now to the matter before alluded to. It is in regard to a dream which I had some time last week. It was as clear and forcible in every particular as though I had actually passed through the same and had heard the voice of God speaking directly to me; and yet I have so little power to relate it. I have attempted it several times, but language is lame. I cannot seem to find any word to convey the spirit of the wonderful dream, and yet with my first awaking thought came the feeling, yea more, conviction, I must publish it. It was given for others quite as much as for myself. And yet how my nature shrank from doing this, for various reasons, not the least because it is so much beyond language to describe."

"About this time God put it into your heart (as I doubt not) to send me that paper.* O! how refreshing it was to see a paper that takes a rational and christian view of these times of strife and war; and as I read several of the articles with such satisfaction and profit, the conviction came that my dream must be published in the Crisis. Reason said No! what is the use? You cannot tell it as it appeared to you. It would be very common-place narrowed down to words; besides you have no right to ask such a favor. And so I have been hesitating betwixt reason and a fear of being mistaken, and a feeling deep down of duty; and even now I do not see the results, I leave them with God. This morning, while in prayer with regard to this, light came, and the words that have been like a fire shut up in my bones from the first must be written out. I know that a great deal hangs upon this and the decision made at the same time that I must subscribe for the Crisis at once; but I am to take no thought for the morrow. And now I shall send you my dream written, but the faintest semblance of what it was to me; praying God to bless this my first effort at sounding the alarm, which henceforth must be my chief business. I wish you to send it to the publishers of the Crisis, headed by anything you may please to say by way of introduction. I know I may ask this of you, because you are ready to help the weakest of all God's little ones, and I have had light even since I began writing as to the way which is opening up through this first seemingly small beginning. The time is about over for me to be an idler. The harvest is already whitening. Where are the laborers? O pray much for me, my dear friends, that I may be led into all truth, that I may be willing to be ANYTHING for Christ's sake, and that I may be ready for the day of the Lord. * * * Your grateful friend and sister, HARRIET P. VAN KIRK.

A REMARKABLE DREAM.

BY HARRIET P. VAN KIRK.

"The prophet that hath a dream, let him tell a dream; and he that hath my word, let him speak my word faithfully. What is the chaff to the wheat? saith the Lord."—JER. 23: 28.

I dreamed that I, with several other persons, was standing in front of the church nearest my home in a bowed, listening attitude, and I wondered why we were thus waiting, when a voice unlike the human and yet speaking our language, a voice which seemed to fill all space, made the startling announcement, that the time had at last arrived when the wicked must be separated from the good and each one must move on in their own path. I lifted up my eyes just then and saw great multitudes, more than could be numbered, moving in every direction in the greatest excitement and confusion, and among them I observed that soldiers in uniform, and carrying small flags with strange inscriptions upon them, figured largely. Here and there I saw persons walking quietly along, who seemed to have their eyes fixed upon the mark at the end of the race, but they were few, while I saw thousands rushing madly on, without any seeming knowledge of where they were going.

Just then the feeling came strongly to me that I had no time to spare in idly gazing around. I, too, had my path to travel over before the goal could be reached. All this time I had been calmly resting upon God with the sweetest assurance that no harm could come to me out of all this distress. As I moved forward I found myself in an extremely narrow path, just wide enough for my two feet to walk in and no more. It was rough and rugged, and every now and then I would stumble, but always regained my foothold before falling, by laying hold upon something invisible but immovable just above my head, and so intent had I been to keep in the way I had forgotten to look about me or even think of the crowd I had just left, but now I observed that a terrible gulf yawned at my right, and if I took one step out of this narrow way I would be precipitated into destruction. At my left seemed to be green pastures, but I dared not look, for I knew that way too led down to death. I now ventured to look behind me; for the purpose of seeing how many were coming after me, for there were none in advance, when lo! not one in all the way was to be seen. For a moment I was greatly disappointed that I must travel all alone, but again a deep joy filled my soul, and I knew I was in the way my blessed Jesus had marked out, and all must be well.

And now I had come out in a large place; my feet did not slip but I trod firmly upon the "rock." Again that voice spoke, saying, Let the wicked assemble in that great field, and let the followers of the Lamb wait in yonder room, for the SEAL IS ABOUT to be SET—irrevocably fixed.

Here words fail me altogether to give you any adequate idea of the scene spread out before me—everywhere from every direction the great mass hurried on to the field which seemed to be boundless and filled to overflowing; again, among the most reckless of that gathering throng were military men calling loudly to their fellows and moving those TERRIBLE flags—all was confusion and terror, and I turned my gaze from them with a faint, sick feeling, for I knew there doom was now to be fixed.

And now I had arrived at the room before named, where my narrow way terminated, and as I was stepping through the door a lady I very well knew attempted to get in by holding on to my skirt. As I entered and looked about me my soul sent up the cry in very agony, My God! my God! are these all that are to be saved out of that great multitude? There was but a little handful.

Just then I awoke, and after walking about the room for some time I again sought my bed and slept, and again dreamed that great multitudes were gathered together, good and bad in a great building, and again military men were there in great numbers with the same banners; but now there was a hushed feeling all through the room (which was immense). For the third time the voice had spoken and this time it was to give the joyful intelligence that a few hours were given them to turn and live, and that now the offer of mercy was to be given by (O! wondrous love and condescension) one of the most unworthy, even myself. And then and there a power not at all my own ran all through me, and burning words of truth were upon my lips, and self and every earthly consideration were forgotten in my zeal to fulfill my holy mission. I awoke with these words—"Lift up thy head, thy redemption draweth nigh."

☞ If "all things were done in charity" (i. e. love), what a happy world this would be. Why, sickness, poverty and death, would be comparatively nothing were love the element in which all human beings breathed; for though, in a measure grievous, they would lose their bitterness and sting, because hope would then never be doubted when she told of the life and health and riches which were soon to come to all.

For the World's Crisis.

A WORD TO THE WISE.

My spirit is stirred in me when I see the distractions among those who once "loved as brethren," now divided, on account of false doctrines preached among us. I am a devoted lover of Jesus Christ and his blessed word. My chief delight is in keeping the commands of God. "I delight to do thy will, O my God; yea, thy law is within my heart." I love the Lord because he first loved me, and can truthfully say with David, "He brought me up also out of an horrible pit, out of the miry clay, and set my feet upon a rock." O that we all who are there might be wise and remain there! like the wise man who built his house upon a rock, so that now while the unparalleled winds of doctrine are blowing and floods of opposition and persecution are beating against us, we may be able to stand, being built upon the foundation of God, which standeth sure.

Let us beware of the leaven of these last-day deceivers and prove our election of God by following Christ and teaching none other doctrine than he and his apostles taught. Let us withstand them, if need be, right to the face. They went out from us but they were not of us, for if they had been of us they would no doubt have continued with us, but they went out that they might be made manifest that they were not all of us. O my God, deliver all such as have any inclination to turn aside to fables in these last moments of time. We are too near the end to believe a lie, that we might be damned. Let us remember it is that class who received not the love of the truth, but had pleasure in unrighteousness who are to be deluded and lost at last. Be not so vain as to go where false doctrine is preached, lest ye have pleasure in it and it prove your ruin in the end. May God keep us who are his firm unto the end.

Paul says, "These things which ye have both learned and received and heard and seen in me do, and the God of peace shall be with you." He says in another place, "If any man teach otherwise," (than he taught) "and consent not to wholesome words, even the words of our Lord Jesus Christ, and to the doctrine which is according to godliness; he is proud, knowing nothing, but doting about questions and strife of words, whereof cometh envy, strife, railings, evil surmisings, perverse disputings of men of corrupt minds, and destitute of the truth, supposing that gain is godliness; from such withdraw thyself."

Now will we obey these words of Paul, and profit by them, and keep away? Also the words of Christ, who saith, "Behold, I come quickly; hold that fast which thou hast, that no man take thy crown." Again Paul says, "Be not carried about with divers and strange doctrines. For it is a good thing that the heart be established with grace." Glory to God "for the grace that is to be brought unto us at the revelation of Jesus Christ." Let us have our loins girt about with truth, our lamps trimmed, our lights burning, and we waiting for our Lord when he cometh.

WHAT JESUS HATH DONE FOR ME.

"Come and hear, all ye that fear God, and I will declare what he hath done for my soul."—David.

Though a stranger to most of the readers of "The World's Crisis," yet not I trust to the Savior and his precious words, I feel it a privilege to tell those who love the Savior and his glorious appearing what great things he hath wrought in me.

In Dec. '52 I was hopefully converted to God in the Methodist church. Have been a member of the same until very recently,—the truth has led me out. For some years have been a believer in and a lover of Christ's second coming; but it never seemed so precious to me, and so real, as at present.

For over a year the Lord, by the light of his word, and by the influences of his Holy Spirit, has been striving to bring to my mind other great and important truths, which through a self-will and the fear of man I was unwilling to believe and acknowledge, until I was afflicted in the loss of a dear brother who died in the army, and as we fear without hope. In view of this, it afforded me great comfort to know that the Lord hath said, "The dead know not anything." How consoling this truth in contrast with the educational error that the wicked are now in torments!

Bless God! He hath made me a free man in Christ Jesus! which freedom the truth of God alone can give.

The Lord is begetting in me daily such a hungering and thirsting after his truth, and also such a desire to spread the same among those who know it not. Rejoice with me, dear brethren and sisters, and pray with me that Jesus may use me, and keep me humble until his appearing and kingdom. Your Bro. in the "blessed hope." HENRY I. TAYLOR.

P. S.—Our Bro. was licensed as an exhorter in the M. E. Church. Is young, and laboring under some physical disabilities; but the Lord is with him. Pray for him, that God may make him an apostle to his brethren to open their eyes to the momentous time in which we live. Amen. E. S. W.

THE 2300 DAYS.

It has been sometimes urged as a reason why we cannot depend on the calculation of this period, that there are various readings, and it is uncertain which is the correct one. The reading of all the Hebrew manuscripts is 2300. The Septuagint, or Greek version, is 2400. The Latin of Jerome, 2200.

The Hebrew copies* being the oldest, and all the copies agreeing in the reading, it is but a reasonable conclusion that it is the correct reading. As for the reading of Jerome, there are few who place any confidence in it. On the Septuagint, I beg leave to introduce the following extract from "Begg's Connected View," p. 3:

"It is in mercy to his people, although it will end to the condemnation of the wicked, that God has given such clear and determinate intimation of the 'things that are to come hereafter;' and any attempt to throw unnecessary doubt upon the certainty of the 'times' revealed, calls for severe reprehension. To this charge there is reason to fear the Examinator of Mr. Irving's Opinions, in the Edinburg Christian Instructor for 1828, (p. 476,) has exposed himself, when, in order to strengthen his argument for the impossibility of determining the commencement of 'the mighty year of God's glory,' he fixes upon the misprint of one of the dates in our version of the Septuagint translation of the Old Testament. 'In regard to the long period of Daniel, there is, in reality, no reason for its being disputed, whether we should read, with the Hebrew, 2300, or with the Septuagint, 2400 years.' Although all our common editions of the Septuagint have this typographical error, being printed from an edition into which it has crept, yet the manuscript in the Vatican, from which that very edition was printed, has 2300, and not 2400. And of all the principal standard editions of the Septuagint, that alone from which ours are taken has this error. Let not, then, the carelessness of men be charged upon the Most High, nor the errors of copyists on the Spirit of inspiration. For a full statement on this subject, see 'The Scheme of Prophetic Arrangement of the Rev. Edward Irving and Mr. Frere, critically examined by William Cunninghame, Esq., of Lainshaw.'"

Thus, in addition to the fact that all the Hebrew manuscripts read 2300, we have the still more decisive fact that the very manuscript in the Vatican from which the common edition of the Septuagint was printed, reads 2300 instead of 2400, as printed in that edition. Hence that reading is a mere typographical error, a misprint; and on this foundation our friend would fain erect a theory. We cannot, therefore, allow him the benefit of that extra hundred years, with which he would be glad to stretch out the 2300 years. —Litch's Prophetic Exposition, Vol. 1, pp. 115, 116.

HYMN.

My heart, with all thy wakened powers
Survey the glorious prize;
Nor let the evils of this earth
Allure my wandering eyes.

All joys and treasures of this day
I cheerfully resign,
And in that rich and glorious store
Rejoice through grace divine.

Let fools my better choice deride;
Since God and Christ approve,
No scorn of men nor rage of hell
My steadfast soul shall move.

With ardent eye that bright reward
I daily will survey,
And in the glowing prospects lose
The sorrows of the way.

FABLES OF THE LAST DAYS.

The following is from the Portland Daily Advertiser, of Dec. 24th, 1862. It may interest perhaps some who would like to know the public teaching of the day on the most momentous subject of the time, viz: "The coming of Christ"; and plainly shows that we are living in the last days, when the people shall be given unto fables; when the Devil, who knoweth that he hath but a short time, is endeavoring to instil himself as an angel of light into the minds of men, so that they may believe that the coming of Christ is a fiction, "an idle tale," or "day dream"; that they may believe a lie and be damned. Oh! how truly are the words of the prophet fulfilled—"Gross darkness covereth the people." Seeing that such teachings are so very popular, no wonder there is such a "famine of the word of the Lord" in the land, and that they should be destroyed for lack of knowledge. I think such teachings, however, will greatly tend to cause those who are in the possession of the faith that was once delivered to the saints to adhere more firmly to the sure word of prophecy, and which will keep us from the time of temptation which will try the world.

"SWEDENBORGIAN LECTURES ON THE BOOK OF REVELATION.

The third lecture of this course was delivered by Rev. Mr. Hayden, in the New Jerusalem church, last Sunday evening. The subject was The Second Coming of the Lord. . . The nature of the Lord's second coming was then treated of and declared to be, not a personal, visible coming in the material clouds of our atmosphere, but to consist in the revelation to men of new and important truths from his own word, in the revelation; indeed, of the spiritual meaning of the Bible existing within the literal meaning. The prophecies relating to the Second Advent were next examined, and were shown to point to such a coming. First. The prophets declare the day of the Second Advent to be a day of new and fuller light; as a time when the light of the moon should be as the light of the sun, and the light of the sun seven-fold. Our Lord compares his coming to lightning coming out of the east and shining unto the west. The spiritual idea connected with light is truth; and lightning, an intenser degree of light from heaven, was affirmed to mean the revelation of more and greater truth. * * *

"The symbol, 'clouds,' was considered. 'Behold he cometh in' the clouds, or upon the clouds. The prophetic meaning of clouds was maintained to be the clouds of the mental or intellectual world, i. e., the obscurity and dimness of divine truth as contained in the letter of Scripture. The Lord's coming upon the clouds, therefore, was declared to mean that he comes in and upon the literal obscurities of his own word, to light up their meaning, and diffuse the knowledge of a clearer truth. Swedenborg was only a human instrument to write them down,—the servant of the Lord Jesus Christ." JOHN TAYLOR.

TIME TO AWAKE.

"And that knowing the time, that now it is high time to awake out of sleep; for now is our salvation nearer than when we believed."—ROM. 13: 11.

If the Roman church had understanding of the times then, ought not the church to have understanding of the times now? The men of Issachar had understanding of the times, (Chron. 12: 32,) and to know what Israel ought to do, when God had anointed David king.

Our Savior is soon to leave the mediatorial seat, thus finishing his work as a mediator, and return again to earth; not for a sacrifice as before, but as king, to sit on the throne of his father David, which the Lord God shall give unto him; and he shall reign over the house of Jacob forever; and of his kingdom there shall be no end. Luke 1: 32, 33.

Has Israel an understanding of the times now? Does the church know what she ought to do? Of one heart and one mind, joining to make Christ king? He is appointed king. He will be king. The great battle is soon to be fought. Do we not see that the kings and people of the whole earth are consulting the three unclean spirits? Rev. 16: 13. And they have said to them, Come thou and reign over us. And the demons are leading them forth to the great battle of Armageddon.

Is there any mistake about this? I think not. Every thing declares it. The lovers of pleasure, more than lovers of God, declare it. The gratifying of the lusts of the flesh and eye declares it. The unusual covetousness of the age declares it. The movements of the nations declare it. A lukewarm church declares it. The signs in the sun, in the moon and stars, and upon the earth distress of nations, with perplexity, are declaring it. God's watchmen that stand upon the tower are proclaiming it. Can we be mistaken about it? And these are but few among the many evidences which we can see to convince any rational man that the great day of God is at hand, yea, saith the prophet, "It hasteth greatly."

The influences which are thrown around the minds of God's people in these days are not calculated to lead them to believe and obey the truth, but to divert and lead them astray. Therefore let us not sleep as do others, but watch and be sober. Let us have our lamps trimmed and lights burning, oil in our vessels, and we like unto men that wait for their Lord when he shall return from the wedding, that when he cometh and knocketh we may open unto him immediately.

Your brother in Christ,

Bryant's Pond. JARED WHITMAN.

EVIL SPEAKING.

"Speak evil of no man."

Who is there that obeys this command? Who is there, if salvation or destruction depended upon the obeying or disobeying of this one plain and simple command of the Lord, that would dare to lift his face heavenward and claim salvation as his right?

You shall hardly be ten minutes in any company without hearing something to somebody's discredit. If a caller enter and depart, do you not at once hear disparaging remarks made regarding that caller? There is sure to be something that didn't suit; the caller was too well dressed, or too ill dressed, or talked too much, or not enough, or there was some wrong motion, or wrong expression, or wrong manner. Something, perhaps many things, had gone wrong, and as soon as the unfortunate caller is out of ear shot, the unfriendly remarks begin. Have you never heard people after having been to a party—yes, and even when they have just returned from church—discuss the personal appearance and the characters of those in whose company they had just been? How much malice is there usually to be seen in such discussions. Malice and envy and dislike are where there should be only affection, or at least kindness and good will.

Oh! the hypocrisy of this world! it is enough to sicken one to the very heart.

The bell rings, and a caller is ushered into the parlor—Mrs. or Miss, in the chamber above, having peeped from the window and seen who was at the door, flings down her work or her book in a pet, and mutters angrily,

"That creature! how I do wish that she would keep away from here." Then runs down to the parlor, and smilingly welcomes her "dear friend." "Don't let it be so long before you call again Don't wait for me. You know that I never desire ceremony between myself and friends. I have been thinking every day of you, and meaning to call to see you; but really one does find so many things to take up one's time. I am delighted to think that you have been here to day."

"There! I declare, I thought that woman never would get out of this house. I do wish she had something to keep her at home," ejaculates the same lady (?) as she resumes her seat and her employment, after her caller has departed. Among men it is the same thing in spirit, though generally differing in form. They backbite, malign and devour one another to a frightful extent. Let any one who is at all disposed to doubt this, undertake to employ two doctors, to be the confidential friend of two political opponents, or of a pair of rival lovers, or rival anything else, and then say what he thinks.

EXTENT OF THE UNIVERSE.

It is computed that the number of the stars which are visible to the naked eye does not much exceed three thousand: but, when the sight is assisted by a telescope—even one of small power—this number is very much increased; and it continues to multiply, according to the increase of power in the instrument. In one place, where they are more thickly sown than elsewhere, Sir W. Herschel reckoned that fifty thousand had passed over a field of view of two degrees in breadth in a single hour.

Attempts have been made to ascertain the distance of some of the fixed stars by calculations founded on parallax,* it being previously understood that a parallax of one second would justify an assumption of distance not less than nineteen thousand two hundred millions of miles. In the case of the most brilliant star, Sirius, even this minute parallax could not be found: from which it is to be inferred that the distance of that star is beyond even this vast measure. In others the experiment was also tried with no better success. But a sensible parallax of about one second has been ascertained in the case of one double star in the constellation Centaur, and one of the third of that amount for the double star 61 Cygni; which gave reason to presume that the distance of the former might be about twenty thousand millions of miles, while the distance of the latter is not less than six hundred and fifty-eight thousand times the distance of the earth from the sun, and light from the star, traveling one hundred and ninety-two thousand miles a second, is ten years and a quarter in reaching us. If we suppose that similar intervals exist between all the stars, we can readily understand that the space occupied by even the comparatively small number to the naked eye must be vast beyond all powers of conception.

The result of the observations which have been taken by the Herschels, leads to the conviction that, as the planets are parts of a solar system, so are solar systems parts of what may be called an astral system: that is, a system composed of a multitude of stars, bearing a certain relation to each other.

The evidence of the existence of other astral systems, besides our own, is much more decided than might be expected, when it is considered that the nearest of them must be separated by a mighty interval from our visible firmament. Sir W. Herschel, directing his wonderful tube towards the sides of our system where stars are fewest, was enabled to see, with awe struck mind, astral systems suspended in the vast empyrean; firmaments, as he called them, resembling our own. Like light cloudlets to a certain power of the telescope, they resolved themselves, under a greater magnifying power, into a multitude of stars; though these generally appeared no larger than the finest particles of diamond dust.

By observations and calculations which appear to have been conducted with the greatest care, and which were corroborated by facts independently and previously ascertained, the space-penetrating power of Herschel's forty-feet reflector was brought out to be a little more than one hundred and ninety-one times that of ordinary natural vision, or extending to more than three hundred thousand times the distance of Sirius, which is regarded as one of the nearest of the fixed stars. The light by which Sirius is seen by us, is at least six years and four months on its passage to our system. Sir William brought out that the brilliant nebulæ which only that telescope then could reach, are distant from our system by a number of miles, to express which, in common arithmetical numeration, requires twenty figures, of which the first eight are 11,765,475; the 11 denoting trillions, and the other number billions; the remaining part of the sum being much more than nine hundred and forty-eight thousand millions. It follows that the light by which those bright objects are made visible, cannot have been less than one million and nine hundred thousand years in its progress to us.

Yet, when we have strained our mind to contemplate, in the extremely feeble manner to which our faculties are competent, this overwhelming distance, we have no reason to think that we have touched the circumference of the astral universe, or that we have advanced beyond the threshold of God's creation.—Note 3 in Jervis' Trans. of Genesis.

* The parallax of a fixed star is the angle at the star subtended by the radius of the earth's orbit.

"IMPUDENT TO MOTHER."

BY CLARA SYDNEY.

Mother, I say I will have that pink hat, and my new dress shall be made to trail, just as Kate Trevor's does; and that steel-hooped skirt I will have before Sunday!"

So declared Miss Upstart, with a determined and impudent air, to her pale and worried looking mother.

"You know, child," was the reply, "that your father will not approve of my allowing you to dress yourself out in such a style. He is not able to buy so many new things for you so often as you require them. And then I do not wish you to sweep the streets just because other foolish girls do. Why can't you have some judgment, my child, or at least some consideration for your mother's wishes?"

Miss sat in a big, stuffed chair, with her elbows on its arms, and her little feet tap, tap, tapping the floor; her pretty, blue morning dress falling open in front, displayed a finely embroidered skirt; small, white hands, too soft ever to have had much acquaintance with broom or brush, were lying idle, and her head, all glossy with its smoothly combed hair, leaned against the back of the chair.

She eyed her mother almost scornfully, and indeed one would have thought that the woman who stood before the luxuriant miss was her servant (as in fact she was) instead of her mother.

Tired already from overwork—hurrying to get husband and sons comfortably fed and off to business—the feeble woman couldn't think of taking time to attend much to her personal appearance. She had a hundred things to do before dinner-time, and no help could she expect from Miss Whitehands.

Look at the mother's hands! Poor hands! worked out of shape by laboring early and late, summer and winter, for her family. How many hours of former toil had been cheered by pleasant hopes of the time when the little girl trotting about her, playing all day long, would just as cheerfully aid her loving mother.

But that dear daughter had grown into a selfish and saucy creature, who seemed to care for her parents only for what she could force out of them. She would not, without more trouble than the work was worth, touch a single thing about the house; all she wanted was to dress up, and flaunt up and down the streets, to "see the girls," and if the whole truth were told—the men.

Then, viewing the weary looking figure before her, the girl replied to the gentle appeal of her mother:

"Well, I mean to have what things I need; and I mean to have my own clothes made to suit myself. I wouldn't be seen in such duds as you wear. I do wish you'd go and put something decent on if you are going to stay in here,"

"I wish, Lucilla, that you would not always dress up so mornings. If you would only put on something that you could work in, and would come and help me a while mornings, then perhaps I could fix myself up a little, and have some chance to rest."

"You might rest enough, and fix yourself up enough, too, if you'd a mind to. You always would work, and go looking any way. I believe you love to do so; but you never need to think I'll be like you, for I never will."

"I'm afraid you won't be like anybody that is what she should be," said the poor mother, in a desponding tone, going out to the kitchen. They were not able to hire help.

"Mother! mother!" screamed Upstart, "I've got your purse, and am going down town after that hat."

"No, no,—you must not have it; it is too high priced, and you don't need any new hat now."

"I will have it, I say. Now you needn't say another word against it. That's the way you always do when I want anything. I declare you are too bad. But I am going."

Experience had taught the wicked girl that she had but to be violent, resolute, and quick in her operations, to be always measurably sure that they would be successful. So down she went, and bought the hat. She had the beautiful new silk made too long for her. She had the new skirt which made a baloon of her; and then she strutted up and down the streets, an object for the disapproving remarks of the town. Every one knew her father's circumstances, and how hard he had to work to support his family. The mother was greatly blamed for not obliging the foolish girl to stay in doors more, and employ herself about something useful.

The young men made sport of her—yes, even the very one upon whom she had set her affections—what she had of them—did this. He was very willing to make her think that he admired her, but to his mates he spoke in the most disrespectful terms of her character and her conduct.

Thus it usually is. Girls are pretty certain to get wofully paid for ill-treating or disobeying their mothers—their very kindest, most deeply loving earthly friends. Probably there never yet was a young girl who, at her mother's expense, set up to be a lady, who was not seen completely through and most heartily despised, even by the very persons for the sake of whose admiration she was straining herself and squeezing her parents half to death.

But no matter what hardships overtake a girl who ill-uses her mother. If she meets with trouble which breaks her heart, and kills her body, it may bring her to repentance for her ingratitude, and be the means of the salvation of her soul.

NO PAINS NO GAINS.

A little boy, named Samuel, was seen one day to pick up an old horse-shoe in the road. What did he do with it? He took it to a blacksmith, and sold it as old iron for a penny. It was the first penny he ever had to call his own. This penny was saved till it should be wanted.

The next penny little Samuel had was not found, but got by hard work. "If you will move away the rubbish from my door," said a man, "I will give you a penny." To work the boy went and soon got his reward.

"Now," said the man, "if you show me this penny in a fortnight, I will give you another. But first let me put a mark upon it that I may know it again." He knew that boys liked to spend their money, and he had a mind to try Samuel in this way.

"There is the penny, sir," cried Samuel, when the fortnight had passed away. "That is right," said the man; "you shall have another, for you know how to keep as well as to earn."

Samuel had now threepence; and with his first money he bought a hymn-book.

If a penny is worth having, it is worth the trouble of earning. "No gains without pains." So thought Samuel, or at least he acted upon this thought. All boys do not so think and act.

The parents of Samuel were in a humble condition, and the little boy had to go out at an early age to work for his living. But one morning, before he left home, as he passed his mother's room, he heard her voice praying. She was calling upon God to bless her son Samuel. "Oh," said he, "if my mother prays so that I may have a new heart, I ought to pray for it too!" He felt unhappy; he saw sin in a way he had never seen it before, and went away into a quiet corner to pray. As he thought of his evil ways, he prayed to God to forgive him, for the sake of Jesus. He asked for a new heart,—a heart to hate sin, to love the Savior, and to obey his will. From that hour he became a praying youth.

He did not go back to folly, as some young people do, but grew in grace and wisdom.

Samuel went as a boy to assist in a shop. He had to begin his labor at six in the morning, and often had not done till very late at night.

A few more years passed away, and Samuel had, after great care and toil, saved as much as thirty pounds. That was a large sum of money; what did he do with it? Why, he gave it all to his mother, who was poor and ill, and much needed it. "That was the best outlay I ever made," he said, when he grew up to be a man. "No money can be compared in value with a parent's blessing." Let all boys and girls think of these words.

Samuel went to work again, and saved more money. What did he do with these savings? He bought coals, and sent them in a cart to two sisters, who had to get their living by sewing, and who were in need.

He was a good servant to his master. He knew that much depends on doing things well,—taking pains to do them as they ought to be done. He used to say, in whatever station a christian is found, he should strive to do all things in the best manner. "Servants, whatsoever ye do, do it heartily as to the Lord." That was Samuel's plan, and a good plan too.

When he had become a little older, he went into business with his brother. They kept a small shop, and sold butter and cheese, tea and sugar, and many other things. The people soon found that Samuel sold good articles, always spoke the truth, and was honest; and they felt that they were quite safe in dealing at his shop.

God blessed this pious young man in his trade. After a short time he got on so well as to keep five men and three horses to do his work; but onward and upward he went for years, till three hundred men and one hundred horses were hardly enough for his great trade. He had now become a merchant in the large city of Bristol.

But he lived not for this world only. He had given his heart to Christ, and he desired to live for glory. Long before he had become a man, he sought to be useful. Near to where he lived, there were many wicked people.

"Can I do any good for their children?" said he. Yes; there was a way. A Sunday school was begun and he became one of its teachers. "No pains, no gains," said he once more. No good can be done without labor and prayer; and he worked on till he found his reward in seeing some of the little children come to Christ.

While he tried to benefit others he did not forget the state of his own soul. He wrote for his own use such rules as these: Resolved,

To seek a deeper sense of my awful state through sin.

To seek to get clear proofs that I am accepted through Christ.

To make the service of God the great object of my life.

To redeem time, and to be moderate in eating and drinking and sleeping, in order that my soul may grow in grace and be happy.

To read every day a portion of Scripture.

To do this all, looking for the help of the Holy Spirit.

At last he was laid upon a dying bed. How did he then feel, and what did he then say? Hear his words:—"I see that I can do nothing to merit heaven.

'In my hand no price I bring;
Simply to thy cross I'll cling.'

I trust in the merits and atoning blood of my Savior. He will keep me: I am safe." And then he calmly said, "I like to hear of heaven; but what I rejoice in is, that Christ will be there. Where he is, there shall I be also. I shall see him as he is."

Many other pious words were spoken by him about Jesus and heaven; and then he died, happy in the Lord, April 1851, aged fifty-seven.

We have seen in this poor boy and rich merchant how true it is that there are "no gains without pains." And though the little girls or boys who read this may never get on as he did,—for it is the will of God that many of them should fill an humble station,—yet they can be like him in many things. They can obey their parents; they can be busy, and honest, and truthful; they can be kind to all; they can love prayer; they can seek the blessings of the Holy Spirit, and by his grace be led to give up their hearts to Christ. There is no one so poor but who may have "the best riches," and no one so lowly but who may do some good in the world.

THE BLESSED HOPE.

The world, with all its joys,
  Hath lost its charms for me,
E'en in its richest gems
  Or gold, but dross I see;
And it were vain to look for cheer
'Mid life's dark woes, to aught that's here.

The pleasures of the earth
  Are all insipid now,
I do not crave a wreath
  Of fame to deck my brow;
All seem but like an empty breath,
Ending in sorrow, pain and death.

A scene most bright and fair
  Hath met my ravished eyes,
The fields of "living green,"
  And bowers of Paradise;
The Tree of Life, the crystal stream,
And light that doth in glory beam.

My ears have caught the sound
  Of notes intensely sweet,
Redemption's hallowed song,
  Where myriad voices meet,—
"Worthy the Lamb that died," they cry;
"Praise to His name for victory."

By faith I grasp those joys,
  And there my treasure lies;
The blessed gospel hope,
  My highest, dearest prize;
This is my comfort, this my stay,
  While treading life's most devious way.

MAN AS HE WAS, IS, AND IS TO BE.

BY JOHN P. BELT.

NUMBER FIVE.

The term spiritual is used concerning men in the flesh in many places in the Bible, and generally means a person under the influence of the Holy Ghost, and is in opposition to carnal. "Ye which are spiritual restore such a one in the spirit of meekness, considering thyself, lest thou also be tempted." "To be carnally minded is death; but to be spiritually minded is life and peace." Rom. 8: 6. "But he that is spiritual judgeth all things." 1 Cor. 2: 15. Then it is evident that the term does denote a person under the influence of grace, and it stands in opposition to carnal or natural. Again it is written concerning men in this life, "Ye are not in the flesh, but in the Spirit, if so be that the Spirit of God dwell in you." Rom. 8: 9. All such persons are spiritual, being quickened by the Spirit. Hence it is said in verse eleventh, "But if the Spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies, by his Spirit that dwelleth in you." So we are told by the apostle Peter that Christ was put to death in the flesh, and quickened by the Spirit. 1 Peter 3: 18. Such bodies are spiritual and will be made incorruptible in the resurrection.

Then as the body of Christ that rose from the tomb was the same body that was quickened, can any body when it is raised up again from the grave, be more spiriturl than his was? Yet he said to his disciples after he rose from the dead, "Behold my hands and my feet, that it is myself; handle me and see, for a spirit hath not flesh and bones, as ye see me have." Luke 24: 39. Therefore no human reasoning can sustain the theory that the identical body that returned to dust, will not be raised up from the grave, because it will be raised a spiritual body. The case of Christ shows my position to be sound and unanswerable by any mere logical argument. For if there is no existence of man's bodily and spiritual nature after death by the coexistence of spirit and body, his identity will be lost.

The very text on which they so confidently rely is conclusive against their own theory, "It is sown a natural body, it is raised a spiritual body." Now what is it that will be raised? The point at issue is settled definitely by the pronoun it. For the same "it" which is raised again, is that which was buried. Then how can it be an entity evolved from the natural body? If it is not the same body, can the elimination be said to have been sown? And on what principle of exegesis can that be said to be raised up again, which never had been in the grave? Whatever it is, it must be that which had been sown. [illegible]

Having settled that position, and demonstrated that "to be carnally minded is death; but to be spiritually minded is life and peace," he then in verse eleventh shows what good cometh of having the Spirit dwell in them. "He that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in you." He says that those who live after the flesh shall die. Then if to be carnally minded is death, the quickening must refer to the mortal body in this state of existence; inasmuch as those in whom the Spirit dwelleth, "they are the sons of God." "For ye have not received the spirit of bondage again to fear, but ye have received the spirit of adoption." And if children, we are heirs of God jointly with Christ. And if we, as children, suffer with him, we shall be also glorified together. Then in verse twenty-three, he declares that all who had been quickened by the indwelling Spirit, are "waiting for the adoption, to wit, the redemption of the body." Now if the body which was sown is not raised up again, how can it ever be redeemed? Most assuredly, then, all who died having the first fruits of the Spirit, will wait in vain, if they are not physically raised from their graves.

This view is in harmony with what Paul has taught in his other epistles, in which he uses the term quicken in the same sense. "And you hath he quickened who were dead in trespasses and sins. . . Even when we were dead in sins, hath quickened us together with Christ." Eph. 2: 1, 5. "And you, being dead in your sins and the uncircumcision of your flesh, hath he quickened together with him, having forgiven you all trespasses." Col. 2: 13. Then the evident meaning of "quickened in the mortal body," is in reference to that which was done in them by the Spirit in this life, when they "were by nature the children of wrath." "Wherefore he saith, awake thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light." Eph. 5: 14. And hence it is that none but those who are united to Jesus Christ by the quickening power of the Holy Spirit have the promise of an endless life, and the hope of immortality. Then again an objection to the physical resurrection of the body is urged on the ground that it is "raised incorruptible." Therefore they contend that the body which died "is not that body which shall be."

But is the term incorruptible to be understood in the sense of uncorporeal? It is not so used by the apostle in 1 Cor. 15. His argument in that chapter is to show the certainty and necessity of a resurrection of the whole human race, which he demonstrates by the resurrection of Jesus Christ. He commences by saying, "I delivered unto you first of all that which I also received, how that Christ died for our sins according to the Scriptures; and that he was buried, and that he rose again the third day according to the Scriptures." He then enumerates the witnesses who saw and conversed with Jesus after he had been raised from the tomb; and in view of such an array of testimony he asks, "How say some among you that there is no resurrection of the dead?" "The resurrection of all rests on the same foundation as did that of Christ; namely, "God's promise and power." Then to deny the one is but to reject the other. "And if Christ be not risen, then is our preaching vain, and your faith is also vain. Yea, and we are found false witnesses of God; because we have testified of God that he raised up Christ; whom he raised not up if so be that the dead rise not."

If the resurrection of Christ was not true, but is only a cunningly devised fable, which was imposed upon human credulity, it would not only be an imposition, but it would be an end of hope, and the human race, and more especially christians would be in a miserable condition. "But now is Christ risen from the dead and become the first fruits of them that slept." Then as the literal body of Christ was raised from the dead, the figure of the harvest would be incomplete, unless the "sleepers" have a corresponding resurrection of the body; and there would be no force in calling Christ the first fruits. Therefore the apostle says, "For since by man came death, by man came also the resurrection of the dead. For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive." That is, "by the offence of one, (Adam) judgment came upon all men to condemnation; even so by the righteousness of one (Christ) the free gift came upon all men unto the justification of life." Rom. 5: 18. Hence it is that Paul, in his defence before Felix, said, "that there shall be a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and the unjust." Acts 24: 15. He then shows to the Corinthians the order in which all "shall be made alive," by classing them in cohort or bands. The first in order is "Christ." The second band in the cohort are "they that are Christ's at his coming." Then the last of the cohort, or "the end, when he shall have put down all rule and all authority and power." But when is all rule and authority and power put down, and the "kingdom delivered up to [illegible] arisen, and just before his ascension into heaven, he said to his disciples, "Go ye therefore, and teach all nations; baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost." Matt. 28: 19. There is no half-way stopping place. Christ claimed that he was "the resurrection and the life." He was therefore either the Son of God and did rise from the tomb; or he was an impostor. And if he was an impostor, well might it be said, "Why then do ye baptize for the dead," or in his name? But Paul had not only seen Christ after he had arisen, but many others had also been with him and seen his wounds in his side and feet and hands. It was because Christ had been buried and rose again, that it was said, "Know ye not that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ, were baptized into his death? Therefore we are buried with him by baptism into death; that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life, for if we have been planted together in the likeness of his death, we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection." Rom. 6: 3, 4, 5. Then away with the absurd notion that sprinkling is scriptural baptism.

But to come to the objection founded on the text: "That which thou sowest, thou sowest not that body that shall be." This text will be the better understood, and the sense in which it is used, by comparing it with what Christ said in John 12: 24. "Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die, it abideth alone; but if it die, it bringeth forth much fruit." So Paul is now reasoning on the similitude of seed sown in the ground. For he says, "that which thou sowest is not quickened except it die." A grain of corn, or some other grain, for instance, when it is sown in the ground must first die, in order that it spring up and bear fruit. "But God giveth it a body as it hath pleased him, and to every seed his own body." Therefore, when he says, "thou sowest not that body that shall be," he designed to be understood in the sense that the grain could not yield fruit until after it springs up. So will it be with the bodies of those which die. They must be raised up in order that they bear fruit. "They that have done good to eternal life, and they that have done evil unto damnation."

The body which is sown is corruptible, or it would not have died from natural causes; and in that sense it is not the body that shall be. For when they are made alive again they are to die no more from natural causes. The righteous will be incorruptible and they are to die no more; and the wicked are to be destroyed violently in "the lake of fire;" so they will die no more from natural causes. Hence the only sense in which it will not be the bodies that were sown, is in their nature and fashion. Then again corruptibility and mortality are terms which pertain to living beings. For when persons die and decompose, they return to dust. Mortality and corruption have then done their work. Therefore the class that are to be raised incorruptible and made immortal, must be made alive again, before it is put on; for "this incorruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality. And as none have it in this life, it can only be received in the life to come, for here all are subjected to death.

The natural body was in the image of Adam; and like him it was of the earth, earthy. "And as we have borne the image of the earthy, we shall also bear the image of the heavenly." But before they can be in the image of the heavenly, they must be raised from the dead, and their bodies fashioned like unto Christ's glorious body; for "flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God; neither doth corruption inherit incorruption." The whole mystery consists in "we shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed." Then whatever that change may be, the body which was corruptible is the same body which will be raised incorruptible. And as Jesus Christ, after he had arisen from the dead, was seen by those who came up with him from Gallilee to Jerusalem,—"And he was seen many days," before he ascended to his Father, so will it be with his people when he comes again to receive them. "They will be caught up in the clouds to meet the Lord in the air." Or as the prophet says, "Come, my people, enter thou into thy chambers, and shut thy doors about thee; hide thyself as it were for a little moment, until the indignation be overpast." Isa. 26: 20.

This position of the saints with Christ is the antitype of "the Lord's Passover when he passed over the houses of the children of Israel in Egypt, when he smote the Egyptians." Levit. 12: 27. As the destroying angel was not suffered to smite any of the children of Israel, so it will be with the church of Christ in the day of "indignation;" they will be with him in his safe pavilion. The destroyer cannot enter them. But after all the whole matter is clearly defined by the apostle in 2 Cor. 5: 1-10. [illegible]

SANCTIFICATION.

"Follow peace with all men, and holiness, without which no man shall see the Lord."—Heb. 12: 14.

The path of the christian is represented in the Scriptures as a narrow way, in which but few are found journeying to a better country, that is, an heavenly. It is as a shining light, which grows brighter and brighter.

The term "perfect love" is synonymous with sanctification. In short, it is to love God supremely, above all else, and our neighbor as ourself. Then whatever we do we shall do to the glory of God. The sanctified heart is compared to a garden where all the weeds are rooted out, so that nothing shall hinder the unobstructed growth of the plants, but they may develop themselves in all their perfection and symmetrical beauty and form. So with the heart freed from sin. Yet there is always progression in the divine life.

Entire consecration to God is prerequisite to obtain the desired blessing. The idea of a christian's sinning constantly, day by day, of living in disobedience to God, seems an evident proof that the heart is not right with God. "He that sinneth is of the devil," and hath not seen God, "neither known him." "He that is born of God doth not sin." I believe it with all my heart.

Holiness to the Lord is a subject in which I feel deeply interested. By the grace of God I mean to arrive at that blessed state where I can feel I am dead to the world and alive unto God. I want nothing short of complete redemption from sin. I have had a name to live while I have been dead.

We read that Christ is the "end of the law to every one that believeth." He has made ample provision for the sanctification of all his people. How many who are looking for the soon coming of Christ will seek this blessing? He will grant it to all who make an entire consecration of themselves to him, and who believe they will receive it. He is not only our sanctification, but also our wisdom. "He that followeth me shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life." Time is hasting away, and what we do must be done quickly. We must be holy, or we shall not see the Lord. Look to Christ for your example instead of looking to your fellow-men. "He knew no sin, neither was guile found in his mouth."

Soon we must stand before God in judgment. Will it be said of us, "Well done"? Yes, if we have done well; but God will not lie. Let us seek to have our hearts right with God and free from the blood of all men. Then will the church be in the position represented in Scripture—"Bright as the sun, fair as the moon, and terrible as an army with banners."

A REMARKABLE FACT.—WHAT DOES IT MEAN?

There is a strange movement now progressing in the world unlike any thing that has ever transpired in the world's past history, and what, if possible, is stranger still, that this strange and truly significant movement though of a marked religious character and bearing fails to arrest the attention or excite the inquiry of the religious teachers of our day who occupy the relation of watchmen to the professed flock of Christ, and therefore should study the signs of the times that they may know what is coming on the earth and give the trumpet a certain sound, that all may be warned and prepare before it is forever too late. The remarkable fact referred to is this. There is a class of persons coming forth in the most public manner, preaching, exhorting and writing, publishing tracts, periodicals, both weeklies and monthlies, also scores of volumes in book form, all having the same general bearing and object, more especially to warn the people and call their attention to the study of the holy Scriptures especially the prophecies.

Those who felt themselves thus called to warn, teach and write are many of them among the most talented, studious and pious men of our age. They are not confined to any one organization, either religiously or politically, nor to any one people or nation, but are of every branch of the visible church, and of every civilized and christian nation under heaven. These, though strangers to each other's views, have, as it would seem, by intuition strangely arrived to the same conclusion in reference to the most important event that can possibly make the future history of our world. This class is now numbering thousands, and though subdivided into various classes in reference to minor truths, it is a most remarkable fact worthy of much serious thought, the subdivisions all come together and are most harmoniously agreed in reference to the great cardinal truth. Not as many would accuse them of claiming to know or fix upon the day and hour when the Son of man cometh, but just what the blessed Savior taught and commanded all to know in the following most concise and positive language: "So likewise ye, when ye see these things come to pass, know ye that the kingdom of God is nigh at hand." Luke 21: 31.

This knowledge commanded by our Lord is the great burden of the teaching and writing of the large class of witnesses which are now being raised up in every part of the church and of the world. What does it mean? [illegible] shall it be when the Son of man shall appear. Luke 17: 26-30.

What honest observer can for a moment doubt that the very things named as signs of His being nigh even at the door, are now actually upon us? How comforting to the "Little flock." "And when these things begin to come to pass, then look up, and lift up your heads; for your redemption draweth nigh." Surely "the night is far spent; the day is at hand."

"In expectation sweet
We'll wait, and sing, and pray,
Till Christ's triumphal car we meet,
And see an endless day."

THE GOSPEL ECHO.

True faith, producing love to God and man,
Say, Echo, is not this the gospel plan?
  Echo—The gospel plan!

Must I my faith in Jesus constant show,
By doing good to all, both friend and foe?
  Echo—Both friend and foe!

When men conspire to hate and treat me ill,
Must I return them good, and love them still?
  Echo—And love them still!

If they my failings carelessly reveal,
Must I their faults as carefully conceal?
  Echo—As carefully conceal!

But if my name and character they tear,
And cruel malice too, too plain appear,
And when I sorrow and affliction know,
They smile, and add unto my cup of woe;
Say, Echo, say, in such peculiar case,
Must I continue still to love and bless?
  Echo—Still to love and bless!

Why, Echo, how is this? Thou art a dove,
Thy voice will leave me nothing else but love.
  Echo—Nothing else but love!

Amen, with all my heart, then be it so,
And now to practice I'll directly go.
  Echo—Directly go!

This path be mine, and let who will reject,
My gracious God in this will sure protect!
  Echo—Will sure protect!

Henceforth on him I'll cast my every care,
And friends and foes, embrace them all in prayer.
  Echo—Embrace them all in prayer!

The above matchless lines, which so truly breathe the meek and forgiving spirit of our blessed Redeemer, and so sweetly touch the inmost soul of the true christian, were found, some years since, in a pew of a church in England. The author, I think, was never known.

THE FEAR OF THE WICKED.

"The fear of the wicked, it shall come upon him; but the desire of the righteous shall be granted."—Prov. 10: 24.

There are several important truths contained in our text, which we think ought to be treasured up and remembered by each and all of us; for they are sacred truths, which, if understood and believed, are calculated to reform the vicious, to cause the unrighteous to forsake erroneous ways, to break off his sins by righteousness, and his iniquities by turning to the Lord, and thus induce him to practice virtue and walk in the paths of obedience and wisdom. There is also one fact contained in our text which is calculated to relieve the mind of all perplexing doubts and slavish fears, and erect in the understanding a faith unwavering, sufficient to buoy up the mind amid all troubles and tribulations,—a faith which confidently guarantees all which the righteous soul desires,—a faith big with immortality, and acquisition of salvation to the righteous, which shall be granted them. "The fear of the wicked, it shall come upon him."

In the first place, we may notice what the wicked fear: that their wickedness will become exposed, their base characters brought to light and exhibited to the world as they really are, in all their disgusting formality; and this they have reason to fear, for past experience as well as the language of my text prove that they must sooner or later receive it,—their fear, it shall come upon them.

Look at the guilty; you will see him flee when no man pursueth; you will see him startle at the rustling of the straw, or by the wake of the leaves as they are moved by the breeze of the wind, and even cringe at the sight of their own shadow. Ah! there is already within his breast a burning hell; he fears exposure; this fear constitutes a gnawing worm of misery and torment. His fears shall come upon him, his base wickedness brought to light and weighed in the balance of divine justice.

In the next place, we may say that the wicked fear that they shall be punished for all their sins. God has so framed the order of things, the laws of nature, and the constitution of man, that there is constantly a fearful looking for of judgment and fiery indignation upon the wicked. "God will by no means clear the guilty," but he will recompense every man according to his works.

Then it becomes us to look well to our conduct,—to ponder the paths of our feet,—to remember our Creator, and obey his commandments. If we depart from these precepts we are in the paths of wickedness, and the eye of justice will search us out and punish us according as our sins deserve. Surely wickedness produces certain and real misery! "There is no peace, saith my God, to the wicked." While he saith, "Great peace have they which love my law, and nothing shall offend them."

In the second place, we will notice that "the desire of the righteous shall be granted." Now the question arises, what do the righteous desire? I answer, the destruction of sin, and consequently the reformation and salvation of men and the restoration of a lost world. [illegible] misery and woe, and give you that confidence in God which alone can make you happy and reconciled to all his dispensations. Christ came to accomplish this great end; he will punish sin; he will make an end of transgression, and bring in everlasting righteousness. "He shall see the travail of his soul and be satisfied." According to his own word, he will appear the second time unto salvation, and he never will give up his mediatorial reign until all his obedient children are brought home to a world purified from all sin, and clothed with immortality, purity, and holiness. And then the desire of the righteous will be granted.

Dear reader, if we consider the above text to be true, as it surely is, is it not high time to look about ourselves and see that we are on a permanent foundation? We are at this time in a world of violence. The wicked fill our streets with blood and carnage; and if ever there was a time for us to pray that Christ should come and cleanse his sanctuary, it is now. The prayers of the righteous avail much, and "the desire of the righteous, it shall be granted him."

CHRIST'S "KINGDOM NOT OF THIS WORLD" (JOHN 18: 36);

BUT OF THE "WORLD TO COME."—(Heb. 1: 8-2; 5.

I. A "kingdom" implies a King, and a future kingdom implies a future King. Hence, a "kingdom not of this world," but of the "world to come," implies a King who reigns not in this world, but in the world to come. This agrees with Christ's information: "A certain Nobleman went into a far country to receive for himself a kingdom and to return." —Luke 19: 12. And John informs us that when the seventh angel sounds, the kingdoms of this world will "become the kingdoms of our Lord and his Christ; and he shall reign forever and ever."—Rev. 11: 15. Christ testifies,—"When the Son of man shall COME in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, THEN shall he sit upon the THRONE of his glory."—Matt. 25: 31.

II. Christ was "born King of the Jews," not that he reigned in infancy, but was destined to reign at some future period—a prospective King: "Thy King cometh," he who is destined to reign. Yet, "when Jesus perceived that they would come and take him by force to make him a King, he departed, and hid himself," (John 6: 15,) and subsequently remarks, "Now is my kingdom not from hence," (John 18: 36) that is, not from this time onward. When, then, would it commence? "Hereafter shall ye see the Son of man seated on the right hand of power, and coming in the clouds of heaven." Then "another King, one Jesus," will reign "King of saints" and "King of kings."

III. Christ is not now reigning, as he is "Mediator;" and a Mediator is one who stands between the Ruler and the ruled, to bring about a reconciliation:—"There is one God, and one Mediator between God and man—the man Jesus Christ." God, the Father, "hath prepared His throne in the heavens; and His kingdom ruleth over all" (Psalm 103: 19); and Christ, instead of being the King, is a "Mediator" between this King and rebellious mortals. Saints are "joint heirs with Christ." Hence, Christ is now an heir to a future kingdom.

IV. The time of the establishment of this kingdom is frequently foretold. Daniel presents the rise of four universal kingdoms, and the division of the fourth into ten parts, or kingdoms, and then adds,—"In the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom."—Dan. 2: 44. Paul tells us that Christ "shall judge the quick and the dead, at his appearing and his KINGDOM."—2 Tim. 4: 1. And the Revelator connects it with the sounding of the seventh angel.—Rev. 11: 15. One element of the kingdom—the prospective king—came to the Jews 1800 years ago.—Matt. 12: 28. The different component elements of the kingdom are sometimes separately styled the kingdom of God. As for instance: "Then shall the kingdom of heaven [one element of it, the church] be likened unto ten virgins," (Matt. 21; 1) and also, "For the kingdom of heaven [one element of it Christ] is as a man traveling into a far country."—Matt. 25: 11. And again: "The Son of man shall send forth his angels, and they shall gather out of his kingdom [one element of it, the territory] all things that offend and them that do iniquity."—Matt. 13: 41. Thus, sometimes the subjects, sometimes the King, and sometimes the territory, are separately called the kingdom. But not till these elements are all combined and organized, shall we have the perfect kingdom of God. The subjects are now mortal, and need a change; the King is now in a far country, and must return; the territory is in a dilapidated condition, and must be made "new." All these prerequisites precede the setting up of the kingdom of God. Although this kingdom was "at hand" at the first advent, in a comparative sense, yet the Savior, after giving a chain of events reaching down to the [illegible] subjects—it is simply a characteristic element of that kingdom.

VII. Christ said to the wicked Pharisees, when they "demanded of him when the kingdom of God should come"—"The kingdom of God cometh not with observation; neither shall they say, lo! here, or lo! there, for the kingdom of God is within you"—margin, "among you," or "within your midst"—not in the heart, for this was not said to christians, but to wicked Pharisees. The founder of this kingdom was then among them, doing a work preparatory to its future establishment, when King, territory and subjects will be organized into a "kingdom that cannot be destroyed,"—a "kingdom that cannot be moved," located beyond the time when Jehovah will "once more shake" earth and heaven also, as he once shook Sinai, causing the "removing of those things that are shaken, leaving only a "kingdom that cannot be moved."—Heb. 12: 26-28.

VIII. Thus, Christ's kingdom belongs to the "world to come." Some of its unorganized elements are now in this world, while an important element—the King—is in heaven. From thence he will come to "judge the quick and the dead at his appearing and kingdom." The "kingdom" is interwoven with his "appearing."

Prepare for this coming kingdom.

WHAT IS COMING?

"The earth mourneth and fadeth away. The field is wasted. The land mourneth, for the corn is wasted. The harvest of the field is perished. The vine is dried up, and the fig-tree languisheth."

BRO. GRANT:—Everything is suffering very much in this part of the country for rain. We have had none for a month to do any good, and some of the crops are past recovery. The husbandmen walk over their parched fields, upon which they have bestowed their labor in vain, and their faces seem to gather blackness as they reiterate the oft-repeated inquiry, What is going to become of us? And some whose consciences have become seared as with a hot iron have the hardihood to curse God to his face for withholding from them a blessing which they would not thank him for bestowing.

Truly we live in perilous times. Every day we see men's hearts failing them for fear and for looking after those things that are coming on the earth. But, thank God, there is one class who can view the portentous clouds of the gathering storm with feelings calm as a summer morning, who feel all shall "work together for good." Such are pilgrims and strangers, who seek a better country. They are a little flock, scattered among all nations, one here and one there; hated of all men for Christ's sake. You may know them by this sign: they are not of the world; but they often pray, "Thy kingdom come; thy will be done"; and again, "Come, Lord Jesus, and come quickly!" Then when they see the rockings and tossings of earth's crowned heads, they exclaim, Let the "kingdoms of this world become the kingdom of our Lord, and of his Christ." And when worn with fatigue, sorrow, toil, pain and care, and oppressed by the proud and haughty of earth; when they have laid low in the grave those that are near and dear; when they feel that there is none to comfort, they cry in an agony of soul—

"How long, O Lord, how long
Must we in sadness wait?
Oh, come! and take thy weary bride
Safe through the narrow gate!"

Then they receive the following answer, which causes them to wait patiently for the Lord from heaven,—

"Watch! 'tis your Lord's command,
And while we speak he's near;
Mark the first signal of his hand,
And ready all appear."

Dear christian friends, are you all ready to go at a moment's warning? Do you desire the coming of the Lord more than any thing else? Is your treasure laid up in heaven, to be brought nigh unto you at the revelation of Jesus Christ? If so, happy are ye. Then let me say to you as a fellow pilgrim, watch on, pray on, toil on, just a little longer, and "He that shall come, will come, and will not tarry." And then, oh, joy! "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither hath it entered into the heart of man to conceive the things which God hath prepared for those that love him." Our feeble minds cannot comprehend those "unsearchable riches," for we can only judge by things which we have seen, and our measure falls infinitely short, for the "things which are seen are temporal, but the things which are not seen are eternal." But the apostle comes as near expressing it as any one can when he tells us that it is "a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory."

Let us be ready. Let us wait and watch, weep and pray, and do what we can to arouse a sleeping world.

THE BLESSED HOPE.

The world, with all its joys,
Hath lost its charms for me,
E'en in its richest gems
Or gold, but dross I see:
And it were vain to look for cheer
'Mid life's dark woes, to aught that's here.

The pleasures of the earth
Are all insipid now,
I do not crave a wreath
Of fame to deck my brow;
All seem but like an empty breath,
Ending in sorrow, pain and death.

A scene most bright and fair
Hath met my ravished eyes,
The fields of "living green,"
And bowers of Paradise;
The Tree of Life, the crystal stream,
And light that doth in glory beam.

My ears have caught the sound
Of notes intensely sweet,
Redemption's hallowed song,
Where myriad voices meet,—
"Worthy the Lamb that died," they cry;
"Praise to His name for victory."

By faith I grasp those joys,
And there my treasure lies;
The blessed gospel hope,
My highest, dearest prize;
This is my comfort, this my stay,
While treading life's most devious way.

MAN AS HE WAS, IS, AND IS TO BE.

BY JOHN P. BELT.

NUMBER FIVE.

The term spiritual is used concerning men in the flesh in many places in the Bible, and generally means a person under the influence of the Holy Ghost, and is in opposition to carnal. "Ye which are spiritual restore such a one in the spirit of meekness, considering thyself, lest thou also be tempted." "To be carnally minded is death; but to be spiritually minded is life and peace." Rom. 8: 6. "But he that is spiritual judgeth all things." 1 Cor. 2: 15. Then it is evident that the term does denote a person under the influence of grace, and it stands in opposition to carnal or natural. Again it is written concerning men in this life, "Ye are not in the flesh, but in the Spirit, if so be that the Spirit of God dwell in you." Rom. 8: 9. All such persons are spiritual, being quickened by the Spirit. Hence it is said in verse eleventh, "But if the Spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies, by his Spirit that dwelleth in you." So we are told by the apostle Peter that Christ was put to death in the flesh, and quickened by the Spirit. 1 Peter 3: 18. Such bodies are spiritual and will be made incorruptible in the resurrection.

Then as the body of Christ that rose from the tomb was the same body that was quickened, can any body when it is raised up again from the grave, be more spiriturl than his was? Yet he said to his disciples after he rose from the dead, "Behold my hands and my feet, that it is myself; handle me and see, for a spirit hath not flesh and bones, as ye see me have." Luke 24: 39. Therefore no human reasoning can sustain the theory that the identical body that returned to dust, will not be raised up from the grave, because it will be raised a spiritual body. The case of Christ shows my position to be sound and unanswerable by any mere logical argument. For if there is no existence of man's bodily and spiritual nature after death by the coexistence of spirit and body, his identity will be lost.

The very text on which they so confidently rely is conclusive against their own theory, "It is sown a natural body, it is raised a spiritual body." Now what is it that will be raised? The point at issue is settled definitely by the pronoun it. For the same "it" which is raised again, is that which was buried. Then how can it be an entity evolved from the natural body? If it is not the same body, can the elimination be said to have been sown? And on what principle of exegesis can that be said to be raised up again, which never had been in the grave? Whatever it is, it must be that which had been sown. Therefore, whatever change may pass upon it by the miraculous power, the body which comes forth must be the identical body which was in the grave. Hence it is the body which was dead without the co-existence of the Spirit; for "The body without the Spirit is dead."

Then again some writers place great stress on the term "quicken," and earnestly contend that in Rom. 8: 11, the apostle has reference to the literal death and resurrection of the body. But this is in my judgment a mistaken view of that verse. The whole connection in which the text stands, shows that Paul is there contrasting "the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus" with "the law of sin and death." His reasoning is on the principle that "they that are after the flesh do mind the things of the flesh; but they that are after the Spirit the things of the Spirit." The argument is to show that "the carnal mind is enmity against God; for it is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be. So then they that are in the flesh cannot please God."

Having settled that position, and demonstrated that "to be carnally minded is death; but to be spiritually minded is life and peace," he then in verse eleventh shows what good cometh of having the Spirit dwell in them. "He that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in you." He says that those who live after the flesh shall die. Then if to be carnally minded is death, the quickening must refer to the mortal body in this state of existence; inasmuch as those in whom the Spirit dwelleth, "they are the sons of God." "For ye have not received the spirit of bondage again to fear, but ye have received the spirit of adoption." And if children, we are heirs of God jointly with Christ. And if we, as children, suffer with him, we shall be also glorified together. Then in verse twenty-three, he declares that all who had been quickened by the indwelling Spirit, are "waiting for the adoption, to wit, the redemption of the body." Now if the body which was sown is not raised up again, how can it ever be redeemed? Most assuredly, then, all who died having the first fruits of the Spirit, will wait in vain, if they are not physically raised from their graves.

This view is in harmony with what Paul has taught in his other epistles, in which he uses the term quicken in the same sense. "And you hath he quickened who were dead in trespasses and sins. . . Even when we were dead in sins, hath quickened us together with Christ." Eph. 2: 1, 5. "And you, being dead in your sins and the uncircumcision of your flesh, hath he quickened together with him, having forgiven you all trespasses." Col. 2: 13. Then the evident meaning of "quickened in the mortal body," is in reference to that which was done in them by the Spirit in this life, when they "were by nature the children of wrath." "Wherefore he saith, awake thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light." Eph. 5: 14. And hence it is that none but those who are united to Jesus Christ by the quickening power of the Holy Spirit have the promise of an endless life, and the hope of immortality. Then again an objection to the physical resurrection of the body is urged on the ground that it is "raised incorruptible." Therefore they contend that the body which died "is not that body which shall be."

But is the term incorruptible to be understood in the sense of uncorporeal? It is not so used by the apostle in 1 Cor. 15. His argument in that chapter is to show the certainty and necessity of a resurrection of the whole human race, which he demonstrates by the resurrection of Jesus Christ. He commences by saying, "I delivered unto you first of all that which I also received, how that Christ died for our sins according to the Scriptures; and that he was buried, and that he rose again the third day according to the Scriptures." He then enumerates the witnesses who saw and conversed with Jesus after he had been raised from the tomb; and in view of such an array of testimony he asks, "How say some among you that there is no resurrection of the dead?" "The resurrection of all rests on the same foundation as did that of Christ; namely, "God's promise and power." Then to deny the one is but to reject the other. "And if Christ be not risen, then is our preaching vain, and your faith is also vain. Yea, and we are found false witnesses of God; because we have testified of God that he raised up Christ; whom he raised not up if so be that the dead rise not."

If the resurrection of Christ was not true, but is only a cunningly devised fable, which was imposed upon human credulity, it would not only be an imposition, but it would be an end of hope, and the human race, and more especially christians would be in a miserable condition. "But now is Christ risen from the dead and become the first fruits of them that slept." Then as the literal body of Christ was raised from the dead, the figure of the harvest would be incomplete, unless the "sleepers" have a corresponding resurrection of the body; and there would be no force in calling Christ the first fruits. Therefore the apostle says, "For since by man came death, by man came also the resurrection of the dead. For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive." That is, "by the offence of one, (Adam) judgment came upon all men to condemnation; even so by the righteousness of one (Christ) the free gift came upon all men unto the justification of life." Rom. 5: 18. Hence it is that Paul, in his defence before Felix, said, "that there shall be a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and the unjust." Acts 24: 15. He then shows to the Corinthians the order in which all "shall be made alive," by classing them in cohort or bands. The first in order is "Christ." The second band in the cohort are "they that are Christ's at his coming." Then the last of the cohort, or "the end, when he shall have put down all rule and all authority and power." But when is all rule and authority and power put down, and the "kingdom delivered up to God, even the Father"? The answer is in language that is significant and to the point: "For he must reign till he hath put all enemies under his feet. The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death." Now how can death be destroyed so long as the greater portion of the human race are in the graves and held under its power? Therefore if all the race are not raised up from the dead, the devil who has the power of death, and who is the "strong man armed," will retain them under his dominion, in spite of Christ, who is "the stronger than he," and his goods will not be "spoiled," nor will his "house or place be destroyed."

He then proves by the ordinance of baptism that the body which dies will be raised up again. "Else what shall they do which are baptized for the dead, if the dead rise not at all? Why are they then baptized for the dead?" The idea is this; after Christ had arisen, and just before his ascension into heaven, he said to his disciples, "Go ye therefore, and teach all nations; baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost." Matt. 28: 19. There is no half-way stopping place. Christ claimed that he was "the resurrection and the life." He was therefore either the Son of God and did rise from the tomb; or he was an impostor. And if he was an impostor, well might it be said, "Why then do ye baptize for the dead," or in his name? But Paul had not only seen Christ after he had arisen, but many others had also been with him and seen his wounds in his side and feet and hands. It was because Christ had been buried and rose again, that it was said, "Know ye not that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ, were baptized into his death? Therefore we are buried with him by baptism into death; that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life, for if we have been planted together in the likeness of his death, we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection." Rom. 6: 3, 4, 5. Then away with the absurd notion that sprinkling is scriptural baptism.

But to come to the objection founded on the text: "That which thou sowest, thou sowest not that body that shall be." This text will be the better understood, and the sense in which it is used, by comparing it with what Christ said in John 12: 24. "Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die, it abideth alone; but if it die, it bringeth forth much fruit." So Paul is now reasoning on the similitude of seed sown in the ground. For he says, "that which thou sowest is not quickened except it die." A grain of corn, or some other grain, for instance, when it is sown in the ground must first die, in order that it spring up and bear fruit. "But God giveth it a body as it hath pleased him, and to every seed his own body." Therefore, when he says, "thou sowest not that body that shall be," he designed to be understood in the sense that the grain could not yield fruit until after it springs up. So will it be with the bodies of those which die. They must be raised up in order that they bear fruit. "They that have done good to eternal life, and they that have done evil unto damnation."

The body which is sown is corruptible, or it would not have died from natural causes; and in that sense it is not the body that shall be. For when they are made alive again they are to die no more from natural causes. The righteous will be incorruptible and they are to die no more; and the wicked are to be destroyed violently in "the lake of fire;" so they will die no more from natural causes. Hence the only sense in which it will not be the bodies that were sown, is in their nature and fashion. Then again corruptibility and mortality are terms which pertain to living beings. For when persons die and decompose, they return to dust. Mortality and corruption have then done their work. Therefore the class that are to be raised incorruptible and made immortal, must be made alive again, before it is put on; for "this incorruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality. And as none have it in this life, it can only be received in the life to come, for here all are subjected to death.

The natural body was in the image of Adam; and like him it was of the earth, earthy. "And as we have borne the image of the earthy, we shall also bear the image of the heavenly." But before they can be in the image of the heavenly, they must be raised from the dead, and their bodies fashioned like unto Christ's glorious body; for "flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God; neither doth corruption inherit incorruption." The whole mystery consists in "we shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed." Then whatever that change may be, the body which was corruptible is the same body which will be raised incorruptible. And as Jesus Christ, after he had arisen from the dead, was seen by those who came up with him from Gallilee to Jerusalem,—"And he was seen many days," before he ascended to his Father, so will it be with his people when he comes again to receive them. "They will be caught up in the clouds to meet the Lord in the air." Or as the prophet says, "Come, my people, enter thou into thy chambers, and shut thy doors about thee; hide thyself as it were for a little moment, until the indignation be overpast." Isa. 26: 20.

This position of the saints with Christ is the antitype of "the Lord's Passover when he passed over the houses of the children of Israel in Egypt, when he smote the Egyptians." Levit. 12: 27. As the destroying angel was not suffered to smite any of the children of Israel, so it will be with the church of Christ in the day of "indignation;" they will be with him in his safe pavilion. The destroyer cannot enter there. But after all the whole matter is clearly defined by the apostle in 2 Cor. 5: 1-10. The idea which he conveys in the language used therein is this. Our earthly house of this tabernacle, are the things which belong to this corruptible and mortal state, which things are temporal and will be dissolved and pass away. But our house from heaven, which is not made with hands, are the things not yet seen, which things are eternal and will never pass away. Wherefore he labored, that whether "present" (in the house from heaven) or "absent" (in this earthly house), he might be accepted of the Lord. "For we must appear before the judgment seat of Christ; that every one may receive the things done in his body, according to that he has done, whether it be good or bad." Verse 10.

SANCTIFICATION.

"Follow peace with all men, and holiness, without which no man shall see the Lord."—Heb. 12: 14.

The path of the christian is represented in the Scriptures as a narrow way, in which but few are found journeying to a better country, that is, an heavenly. It is as a shining light, which grows brighter and brighter.

The term "perfect love" is synonymous with sanctification. In short, it is to love God supremely, above all else, and our neighbor as ourself. Then whatever we do we shall do to the glory of God. The sanctified heart is compared to a garden where all the weeds are rooted out, so that nothing shall hinder the unobstructed growth of the plants, but they may develop themselves in all their perfection and symmetrical beauty and form. So with the heart freed from sin. Yet there is always progression in the divine life.

Entire consecration to God is prerequisite to obtain the desired blessing. The idea of a christian's sinning constantly, day by day, of living in disobedience to God, seems an evident proof that the heart is not right with God. "He that sinneth is of the devil," and hath not seen God, "neither known him." "He that is born of God doth not sin." I believe it with all my heart.

Holiness to the Lord is a subject in which I feel deeply interested. By the grace of God I mean to arrive at that blessed state where I can feel I am dead to the world and alive unto God. I want nothing short of complete redemption from sin. I have had a name to live while I have been dead.

We read that Christ is the "end of the law to every one that believeth." He has made ample provision for the sanctification of all his people. How many who are looking for the soon coming of Christ will seek this blessing? He will grant it to all who make an entire consecration of themselves to him, and who believe they will receive it. He is not only our sanctification, but also our wisdom. "He that followeth me shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life." Time is hasting away, and what we do must be done quickly. We must be holy, or we shall not see the Lord. Look to Christ for your example instead of looking to your fellowmen. "He knew no sin, neither was guile found in his mouth."

Soon we must stand before God in judgment. Will it be said of us, "Well done"? Yes, if we have done well; but God will not lie. Let us seek to have our hearts right with God and free from the blood of all men. Then will the church be in the position represented in Scripture—"Bright as the sun, fair as the moon, and terrible as an army with banners." T. L. WAUGH.

For the World's Crisis.

A REMARKABLE FACT.—WHAT DOES IT MEAN?

There is a strange movement now progressing in the world unlike any thing that has ever transpired in the world's past history, and what, if possible, is stranger still, that this strange and truly significant movement though of a marked religious character and bearing fails to arrest the attention or excite the inquiry of the religious teachers of our day who occupy the relation of watchmen to the professed flock of Christ, and therefore should study the signs of the times that they may know what is coming on the earth and give the trumpet a certain sound, that all may be warned and prepare before it is forever too late. The remarkable fact referred to is this. There is a class of persons coming forth in the most public manner, preaching, exhorting and writing, publishing tracts, periodicals, both weeklies and monthlies, also scores of volumes in book form, all having the same general bearing and object, more especially to warn the people and call their attention to the study of the holy Scriptures especially the prophecies.

Those who felt themselves thus called to warn, teach and write are many of them among the most talented, studious and pious men of our age. They are not confined to any one organisation, either religiously or politically, nor to any one people or nation, but are of every branch of the visible church, and of every civilized and christian nation under heaven. These, though strangers to each other's views, have, as it would seem, by intuition strangely arrived to the same conclusion in reference to the most important event that can possibly make the future history of our world. This class is now numbering thousands, and though subdivided into various classes in reference to minor truths, it is a most remarkable fact worthy of much serious thought, the subdivisions all come together and are most harmoniously agreed in reference to the great cardinal truth. Not as many would accuse them of claiming to know or fix upon the day and hour when the Son of man cometh, but just what the blessed Savior taught and commanded all to know in the following most concise and positive language: "So likewise ye, when ye see these things come to pass, know ye that the kingdom of God is nigh at hand." Luke 21: 31.

This knowledge commanded by our Lord is the great burden of the teaching and writing of the large class of witnesses which are now being raised up in every part of the church and of the world. What does it mean? Though this warning be as unpopular as the preaching of Noah or Lot and be met in the very language so minutely described and foretold of the latter day scoffers, is it therefore to be rejected as mere fanaticism? Surely it is for this very reason more important and more certain as a warning from God; the last midnight cry to this guilty, distressed and sin-cursed world. This ever has been God's method, in mercy to warn before his heavy judgments are poured upon the people. But as in the days of Noah and of Lot, they heeded but did not heed, repent and reform, so also shall it be when the Son of man shall appear. Luke 17: 26-30.

What honest observer can for a moment doubt that the very things named as signs of His being nigh even at the door, are now actually upon us? How comforting to the "Little flock." "And when these things begin to come to pass, then look up, and lift up your heads; for your redemption draweth nigh." Surely "the night is far spent; the day is at hand."

"In expectation sweet
We'll wait, and sing, and pray,
Till Christ's triumphal car we meet,
And see an endless day."

THE GOSPEL ECHO.

True faith, producing love to God and man,
Say, Echo, is not this the gospel plan?
Echo—The gospel plan!

Must I my faith in Jesus constant show,
By doing good to all, both friend and foe?
Echo—Both friend and foe!

When men conspire to hate and treat me ill,
Must I return them good, and love them still?
Echo—And love them still!

If they my failings carelessly reveal,
Must I their faults as carefully conceal?
Echo—As carefully conceal!

But if my name and character they tear,
And cruel malice too, too plain appear,
And when I sorrow and affliction know,
They smile, and add unto my cup of woe;
Say, Echo, say, in such peculiar case,
Must I continue still to love and bless?
Echo—Still to love and bless!

Why, Echo, how is this? Thou art a dove,
Thy voice will leave me nothing else but love.
Echo—Nothing else but love!

Amen, with all my heart, then be it so,
And now to practice I'll directly go.
Echo—Directly go!

This path be mine, and let who will reject,
My gracious God in this will sure protect!
Echo—Will sure protect!

Henceforth on him I'll cast my every care,
And friends and foes, embrace them all in prayer.
Echo—Embrace them all in prayer!

The above matchless lines, which so truly breathe the meek and forgiving spirit of our blessed Redeemer, and so sweetly touch the inmost soul of the true christian, were found, some years since, in a pew of a church in England. The author, I think, was never known.

THE FEAR OF THE WICKED.

"The fear of the wicked, it shall come upon him; but the desire of the righteous shall be granted."—Prov. 10: 24.

There are several important truths contained in our text, which we think ought to be treasured up and remembered by each and all of us; for they are sacred truths, which, if understood and believed, are calculated to reform the vicious, to cause the unrighteous to forsake erroneous ways, to break off his sins by righteousness, and his iniquities by turning to the Lord, and thus induce him to practice virtue and walk in the paths of obedience and wisdom. There is also one fact contained in our text which is calculated to relieve the mind of all perplexing doubts and slavish fears, and erect in the understanding a faith unwavering, sufficient to buoy up the mind amid all troubles and tribulations,—a faith which confidently guarantees all which the righteous soul desires,—a faith big with immortality, and acquisition of salvation to the righteous, which shall be granted them. "The fear of the wicked, it shall come upon him."

In the first place, we may notice what the wicked fear: that their wickedness will become exposed, their base characters brought to light and exhibited to the world as they really are, in all their disgusting formality; and this they have reason to fear, for past experience as well as the language of my text prove that they must sooner or later receive it,—their fear, it shall come upon them.

Look at the guilty; you will see him flee when no man pursueth; you will see him startle at the rustling of the straw, or by the wake of the leaves as they are moved by the breeze of the wind, and even cringe at the sight of their own shadow. Ah! there is already within his breast a burning hell; he fears exposure; this fear constitutes a gnawing worm of misery and torment. His fears shall come upon him, his base wickedness brought to light and weighed in the balance of divine justice.

In the next place, we may say that the wicked fear that they shall be punished for all their sins. God has so framed the order of things, the laws of nature, and the constitution of man, that there is constantly a fearful looking for of judgment and fiery indignation upon the wicked. "God will by no means clear the guilty," but he will recompense every man according to his works.

Then it becomes us to look well to our conduct,—to ponder the paths of our feet,—to remember our Creator, and obey his commandments. If we depart from these precepts we are in the paths of wickedness, and the eye of justice will search us out and punish us according as our sins deserve. Surely wickedness produces certain and real misery! "There is no peace, saith my God, to the wicked." While he saith, "Great peace have they which love my law, and nothing shall offend them."

In the second place, we will notice that "the desire of the righteous shall be granted." Now the question arises, what do the righteous desire? I answer, the destruction of sin, and consequently the reformation and salvation of men and the restoration of a lost world. All righteous people pray for this great and grand result, and prayer is the secret and sincere desire of the heart. Now, then, all ye righteous, look up toward the throne of heaven and hear it pronounced from the mouth of the great Jehovah, who cannot lie, "The desire of the righteous shall be granted."

Ye doubting, fearful souls! dismiss your fears and put your trust in God; for he will fulfil all his promises. By so doing you may obtain that faith which will make you free from all doubts. It will relieve you from misery and woe, and give you that confidence in God which alone can make you happy and reconciled to all his dispensations. Christ came to accomplish this great end; he will punish sin; he will make an end of transgression, and bring in everlasting righteousness. "He shall see the travail of his soul and be satisfied." According to his own word, he will appear the second time unto salvation, and he never will give up his mediatorial reign until all his obedient children are brought home to a world purified from all sin, and clothed with immortality, purity, and holiness. And then the desire of the righteous will be granted.

Dear reader, if we consider the above text to be true, as it surely is, is it not high time to look about ourselves and see that we are on a permanent foundation? We are at this time in a world of violence. The wicked fill our streets with blood and carnage; and if ever there was a time for us to pray that Christ should come and cleanse his sanctuary, it is now. The prayers of the righteous avail much, and "the desire of the righteous, it shall be granted him." J. ELKINS.

CHRIST'S "KINGDOM NOT OF THIS WORLD" (JOHN 18: 36);

BUT OF THE "WORLD TO COME."—(Heb. 1: 8–2: 5.

I. A "kingdom" implies a King, and a future kingdom implies a future King. Hence, a "kingdom not of this world," but of the "world to come," implies a King who reigns not in this world, but in the world to come. This agrees with Christ's information: "A certain Nobleman went into a far country to receive for himself a kingdom and to return." —Luke 19: 12. And John informs us that when the seventh angel sounds, the kingdoms of this world will "become the kingdoms of our Lord and his Christ; and he shall reign forever and ever."—Rev. 11: 15. Christ testifies,—"When the Son of man shall COME in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, THEN shall he sit upon the THRONE of his glory."—Matt. 25: 31

II. Christ was "born King of the Jews," not that he reigned in infancy, but was destined to reign at some future period—a prospective King: "Thy King cometh," he who is destined to reign. Yet, "when Jesus perceived that they would come and take him by force to make him a King, he departed, and hid himself," (John 6: 15,) and subsequently remarks, "Now is my kingdom not from hence," (John 18: 36) that is, not from this time onward. When, then, would it commence? "Hereafter shall ye see the Son of man seated on the right hand of power, and coming in the clouds of heaven." Then "another King, one Jesus," will reign "King of saints" and "King of kings."

III. Christ is not now reigning, as he is "Mediator;" and a Mediator is one who stands between the Ruler and the ruled, to bring about a reconciliation:—"There is one God, and one Mediator between God and man —the man Jesus Christ." God, the Father, "hath prepared His throne in the heavens; and His kingdom ruleth over all" (Psalm 103: 19); and Christ, instead of being the King, is a "Mediator" between this King and rebellious mortals. Saints are "joint heirs with Christ." Hence, Christ is now an heir to a future kingdom.

IV. The time of the establishment of this kingdom is frequently foretold. Daniel presents the rise of four universal kingdoms, and the division of the fourth into ten parts, or kingdoms, and then adds,—"In the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom."—Dan. 2: 44. Paul tells us that Christ "shall judge the quick and the dead, at his appearing and his KINGDOM."—2 Tim. 4: 1. And the Revelator connects it with the sounding of the seventh angel.—Rev. 11: 15. One element of the kingdom—the prospective king—came to the Jews 1800 years ago.—Matt. 12: 28. The different component elements of the kingdom are sometimes separately styled the kingdom of God. As for instance: "Then shall the kingdom of heaven [one element of it, the church] be likened unto ten virgins," (Matt. 21; 1) and also, "For the kingdom of heaven [one element of it Christ] is as a man traveling into a far country."—Matt. 25: 11. And again: "The Son of man shall send forth his angels, and they shall gather out of his kingdom [one element of it, the territory] all things that offend and them that do iniquity."—Matt. 13: 41. Thus, sometimes the subjects, sometimes the King, and sometimes the territory, are separately called the kingdom. But not till these elements are all combined and organized, shall we have the perfect kingdom of God. The subjects are now mortal, and need a change; the King is now in a far country, and must return; the territory is in a dilapidated condition, and must be made "new." All these prerequisites precede the setting up of the kingdom of God. Although this kingdom was "at hand" at the first advent, in a comparative sense, yet the Savior, after giving a chain of events reaching down to the end of time, remarks: "When ye see these things come to pass, know that the kingdom of God is nigh at hand," (Luke 21: 3)—still future after the signs of the end, and at hand in an emphatic sense.

V. Believers are said to be "translated into" this kingdom, one element of it, the church; and also the believer "presseth into it." But all these component elements of the kingdom will be brought together at its final establishment.

IV. Paul gives the character of this kingdom as being "righteousness, peace and joy in the Holy Ghost" (Rom. 14: 17), but does this argue that this element is a kingdom of itself, independent of a King, territory and subjects,—it is simply a [illegible] of that kingdom.

VII. Christ said to the [illegible] when they "demanded of him when the kingdom of God should come," [illegible] God cometh not with observation: neither shall they say, Lo here! or, lo there! for [illegible] kingdom of God is within you," [illegible] "among you," or [illegible] in the heart, for this was not said to Christians, but to wicked Pharisees [illegible] of this kingdom [illegible] a work preparatory to its future establishment, when King, territory and subjects will be organized [illegible] be destroyed," [illegible] moved," located beyond the time when Jehovah will "once more shake" earth and heaven also, as he once shook Sinai, causing the "removing of those things that are shaken," leaving only a "kingdom that cannot be moved."—Heb. 12: 26-28.

VIII. Thus, Christ's kingdom [illegible] the "world to come." Some of its unorganized elements are now in this world; but an important element—the King—is in heaven. From thence he will come to "judge the quick and the dead at his appearing and kingdom." The "kingdom" is interwoven with his "appearing."

Prepare for this coming kingdom.

WHAT IS COMING?

"The earth mourneth and fadeth away. The field is wasted. The land mourneth, for the corn is wasted. The harvest of the field is perished. The vine is dried up, and the fig-tree languisheth."—Joel 1.

BRO. GRANT:—Everything is suffering very much in this part of the country for rain. We have had none for a month to do any good, and some of the crops are past recovery. The husbandman walk over their parched fields, upon which they have bestowed their labor in vain, and their faces seem to gather blackness as they reiterate the oft-repeated inquiry, What is going to become of us? And some whose consciences have become seared as with a hot iron have the hardihood to curse God to his face for withholding from them a blessing which they would not thank him for bestowing.

Truly we live in perilous times. Every day we see men's hearts failing them for fear and for looking after those things that are coming on the earth. But, thank God, there is one class who can view the portentous clouds of the gathering storm with feelings calm as a summer morning, who feel all shall "work together for good." Such are pilgrims and strangers, who seek a better country. They are a little flock, scattered among all nations, one here and one there; hated of all men for Christ's sake. You may know them by this sign: they are not of the world; but they often pray, "Thy kingdom come, thy will be done"; and again, "Come, Lord Jesus, and come quickly!" Then when they see the rockings and tossings of earth's crowned heads, they exclaim, Let the "kingdoms of this world become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Christ." And when worn with fatigue, sorrow, toil, pain and care, and oppressed by the proud and haughty of earth; when they have laid low in the grave those that are near and dear; when they feel that there is none to comfort, they cry in an agony of soul—

"How long, O Lord, how long
Must we in sadness wait?
Oh, come! and take thy weary bride
Safe through the narrow gate!"

Then they receive the following answer, which causes them to wait patiently for the Lord from heaven,—

"Watch! 'tis your Lord's command;
And while we speak he's near;
Mark the first signal of his hand,
And ready all appear."

Dear christian friends, are you all ready to go at a moment's warning? Do you desire the coming of the Lord more than any thing else? Is your treasure laid up in heaven, to be brought nigh unto you at the revelation of Jesus Christ? If so, happy are ye. Then let me say to you as a fellow pilgrim, watch on, pray on, toil on, just a little longer, and "He that shall come, will come, and will not tarry." And then, oh, joy! "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither hath it entered into the heart of man to conceive the things which God hath prepared for them that love him." Our feeble minds cannot comprehend those "unsearchable riches," for we can only judge by things which we have seen, and our measure falls infinitely short, for the "things which are seen are temporal." But the apostle comes as near expressing it as any one can when he tells us that it is "a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory."

Let us be ready. Let us wait and watch, weep and pray, and do what we can to arouse a sleeping world. EMMA L. [illegible]

LAZARUS.

The colored man is the Lazarus of this dispensation as the now rich Gentile was the Lazarus of the Mosaic.

As the Jew oppressed the Gentile, so does this rich Gentile now oppress, in his turn, the poor colored man, and cast him out as unfit for society. In vain does this poor man ask for the crumbs which fall from this rich man's table, but is left to die with none to console him save here and there one, who for this act is esteemed as a dog in their eyes. But the angels of God do not forget him in his poverty. He has bread to eat that his rich oppressor knows not of. O the heavenly manna that fills his soul from these divine illuminations! manna to which the rich man, with all his purple and fine linen and sumptuous fare, is a stranger. Glory to God, whose ways are equal, and who has respect unto the lowly!

This day (July 10th) the Lord gave us the privilege to minister to one of this Lazarus race. Bless his name for this! We met at the lake, at the water—that great leveler. "The small and the great are there, and the servant is free from his master."—Job 3: 19. There we buried him in the likeness of his Lord, and raised him up, as we hope, to a new life. We then returned bringing our sheaves with us, where we met our Bro. James Ferris from Sandy Hill, N. Y., in waiting to minister to us the word of life. He read the second chapter of James, and spoke from the last verse. What a cordial the first verse was to our souls in the work we had just been performing!

"My brethren, have not the faith of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Lord of glory, with respect of persons. How good it sounded about the gold ring, and the gay clothing, and the vile raiment, and the footstool. We felt, by grace, Lord, we have done as thou hast commanded, and to thy name be all the glory. Amen.

Our brother's preaching was not with enticing words of man's wisdom, but in demonstration of the Spirit and of power, that our faith should not stand in the wisdom of men, but in the power of God. 1 Cor. 2: 4, 5. It was not in word only, but also in power, and in the Holy Ghost, and in much assurance. 1 Thess. 1: 5. He said he had no credentials. This was only the third time he ever had occupied this position, and each of these times in this same place; but that he had felt for two years it was his duty before God, and now God had brought him all this long way to bring him out, and he would give him glory. And so we all felt. I sunk into the depth of my spirit and praised the Lord that he had now answered my prayer of three long years' continuance, that he would send us just such a man.

O thou saint of God, whose hope has been long deferred, even to heart-sickness, judge ye of my joy! Language fails me. It was unspeakable and full of glory. Amen. What a covenant-keeping God is ours! I will always trust in him. Amen.

AWFUL EFFECTS OF WAR.

"Last Sunday evening, the Rev. J. Wesley preached at the Foundry an awful sermon, on the horrid effects of a civil war. Mr. Wesley observed, that of all scourges from God, war was the most to be deprecated, because it often swept away all traces of religion, and even of humanity. He then related the following matter of fact, which drew a tear from almost every eye: 'I conversed with an officer who was of a remarkably mild disposition; he was three years in Germany during the last war, where he was sent by the General with a party of soldiers to get provisions wherever he could find any. They first arrived at a farmhouse; the master of the family having been frequently plundered had fled, and left his wife with the care of seven small children, and only one cow for their subsistence. The woman fell at the feet of the soldiers, imploring them with strong cries and tears, that they would spare the cow for the nourishment of her helpless offspring. The officer could not forbear weeping, and forced himself from her as she clasped his knees, with every sign of frantic grief; nevertheless the soldiers carried away her cow. This officer afterwards told me, war had rendered his heart so hard, and his mind so ferocious, that he could have even broiled the woman and her seven children.'

Mr. Wesley having concluded this affecting narrative, said, 'O! my dear hearers, should the great God suffer the hellish rage of a civil war to be let loose in England, for our idleness, deceit, luxury and oppression, perhaps the most human person now in London, may be equally hardened in his heart.' Mr. Wesley then charged the rich to abound in good works, to be ready to communicate, as they needed only to open their eyes to see the amazing distresses of the poor! Such distress as his eyes never before beheld. How long we may have food to eat, and raiment to put on, and a place where to put our heads, he who is the Creator and Redeemer of mankind only knows.

He selected his text from Dan. 4: 27,—'Let my counsel be acceptable to thee, and break off thy sins by righteousness, and thine iniquities by showing mercy to the poor; if it may be a lengthening of thy tranquility.'"

We are often told that the present war will make us a purer and better people, but plain, positive facts prove the reverse of this, and instead of making people humble, it makes them fierce, restless and tyrannical. I have conversed with several who had the name of being harmless and inoffensive men before they went to war, who have now got the disposition of tigers. One man remarkable for gentleness told me "his heart was so hard whilst in the service of the United States that he saw his fellow-soldiers die by his side, fall off the same bench on which he sat, dead, and he would not notice it more than I would the falling of a rag-doll."

War always has had a brutal, intemperate, licentious effect, in every respect demoralizing on those engaged in it, and its spirit has sat like an infernal incubus on the churches, [illegible] Adam Clarke [illegible] war, 'I here register my testimony against the unprincipled [illegible] and diabolical [illegible] the wickedness of the wicked might come to an end! Come, Lord Jesus, thou Prince of Peace [illegible] concealed. Then the gilded [illegible] the hollow pretext is pompously placed in the front to show.

THE WORLD'S CRISIS AND SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER.

Boston, Tuesday, July 19, 1864.

☞ NOTICE.

All orders and monies for the World's Crisis, or for Books and Tracts for sale at this Office, and all matters pertaining to the business of the Office, must be addressed to the Business Agent, MILES GRANT, Crisis Box, Boston.

LATE.—The Crisis is one day late this week, for want of paper on which to print it. The dry weather has prevented our paper maker from meeting his engagements.

WILBRAHAM.

Remember the campmeeting at Wilbraham is appointed to begin Aug. 22nd, and close Aug. 29th. Are you going? Don't say, "I can't leave my business." Where can you better spend your week of vacation? Don't say, "It will cost too much." You may obtain that which will be of more real value to you than all the treasures of the world.

Get ready,—be there from its commencement to its close. Try to get others to go with you. "Come thou with us, and we will do thee good."

WAR NEWS.

For the last few days the war news has been very exciting. The rebels have made a very bold dash into Maryland, and taken away a large amount of spoil, besides destroying much public and private property. After taking possession of Harper's Ferry, they went within seven miles of Baltimore, and caused great excitement in the city. They next advanced on Washington, destroying all communication with Baltimore, and the north. For one or two days, it was quite a current rumor in Boston that Washington was taken by the rebels. They came so near capturing it, that it made the friends of the Union feel some as one would when his house was struck by lightning, and only the house suffered injury—"it was a narrow escape."

The following items of news from Washington will give a hint of the danger in which the Capital was situated:—

"Washington was to be attacked Sunday night, but the matter was delayed until Monday, when Early received such information as to make him abandon the attempt, causing great dissatisfaction among subordinate officers and men, who believed the thing entirely safe.

There is no doubt that if the enemy had attacked the defenses of Washington previous to Monday night, they could have carried them with ease."

AFFAIRS IN EUROPE.

The political aspect of Europe is very threatening. There is no prospect of peace. There are strong indications of trouble ahead that cannot be averted. The terrible drama may not open this year, and yet it is liable to commence at any time. The world is fast approaching a state that might well be called, one of confusion confounded; but great light is shining on the christian's pathway, showing that his eternal deliverance is at hand.

A Paris correspondent of the New York Commercial says:—

"The opinion is general at this moment that a great deal of intrigue is going on among the despotic sovereigns of Europe, and that some sort of a league is being formed which, while couteracting the maneuvers of the liberal party, will bring about some sort of a change of European frontiers. The liberals of France, on the other hand, were never more certain than they are now that Napoleon is approaching events that will cost him his crown, and they look to a war with the United States as a certainty, and as one of the means which is to bring about his overthrow."

REFORMERS.

The following excellent remarks, from The Evangelical Pulpit, should be treasured up by all who would aid in making the world better, or assist in spreading the truth:—

"Reformers must not only be true and firm, but they must also be meek, kind, and gentle; so much depends upon the spirit and temper in which the truth is urged upon the attention of men."

No one is fit to act as a Reformer till he has first reformed himself. If he cannot be kind to an opposer, he had better be silent. He will do the cause of the Lord more harm than good. He should have great meekness in order to be successful. No harsh or unkind word should escape his lips, if he wishes to convince his opponent. May the Lord help us all to be very watchful on this point.

THE EMPEROR OF MEXICO.

Maximilian, the new Emperor of Mexico, has arrived among his people, and been received with joyful demonstrations. It is said the French managed the order of arrangements, and took the lead in the ceremonies. They were quite flattering to the Emperor and Empress, and partook much more of the democratic spirit than is seen in Europe. We take the following from the report of his reception, as given in the Boston Journal, of July 8th:—

"On the 13th they went out alone and on foot to visit some of the churches. A mass of over five thousand persons soon gathered. Men and women approached them, taking their hands to kiss. Some parties wished an escort to be brought, but Maximilian answered that his best escort was the people. Among the mottoes written in Mexican were the following: 'The ancient throne of the Aztecs is awaiting you, O great Maximilian;' 'The pure Indian race has nothing to offer you, great Prince, but the sceptre of Montezuma;' 'Come, O illustrious Prince, and be our firm support in the holy religion of Jesus Christ;' 'You are going, Sire, to occupy the throne of the Aztecs, but try to exercise on it the empire of truth and justice;' 'Every people of the Mexican territory, boldly raise your heads—the poisoning hand of the impious blasphemer has been paralyzed;' 'Take courage, Mexicans, the true light follows the dark shadow of falsehood;' [illegible] was to be established [illegible] Divine Providence.'"

WHY IN THE DARK?

It is often asked why the spirits choose darkness for their best manifestations, unless the affair be all trickery? Those who are familiar with the philosophy of these manifestations can give a ready answer. Those who have not looked into the matter, the following from Mr. Chas. Partridge, formerly editor of the Spiritual Telegraph, may afford some light. He says:—"Spirits have answered this question to me and others, by saying that the light very much enlivens or disturbs the elements they use in these physical formations; so much so that they can seldom control them when light is present; but that when twilight or darkness comes, these elements are comparatively at rest, and then they can control them."

When Paul was speaking of these same spirits, he calls them "the rulers of the darkness of this world."—Eph. 6: 12.

BLASPHEMY.

If any one should say the Holy Spirit was a "fabulous" myth originating with the heathen, existing only in imagination, would it not be blasphemy against that Spirit?

The following is from the Herald of Progress, July 16th, 1864, edited by Andrew Jackson Davis:—

"ORIGIN OF THE HOLY GHOST SUPERSTITION.—The origin of the tradition respecting this fabulous or mythical being is easily traced to the ancient Brahminical trifold conception of old demi-gods of mythology. The primary windy conception of the Holy Ghost is traceable to that early period of society when the rude and untutored denizens of the earth in their childish 'knownothingism' and profound ignorance of natural causes were very easily and naturally led to the belief that wherever there was motion there was a god or the active manifestation of a god, whether it was in the wind, breath, water, fire or the sun. Hence the Budhists had their god Vasus, who manifested himself in the shape or character of fire, wind, storms, gas, gusts or ghosts, and even the breath, thus constituting a very nearly allied counterpart to the Christian Holy Ghost."

Truly this is an age of PROGRESS. We think the people were never traveling at greater speed away from the road that leads to life.

WITHOUT NATURAL AFFECTION.

We are informed by one of the holy men, who spake as he was "moved by the Holy Ghost," "that in the last days" natural affection would be deficient. It is natural for all animals to love their young and tender offspring. No sacrifice seems too great for the mother to make for the preservation of her young. And in the human species this trait of character is most fully developed; but "in the last days" it will be wanting. Read the following, showing what is done in only one city, whose inhabitants are thought to be the most polite, fashionable, refined, and intelligent in the world:—

"The drains of Paris are declared to be the most wonderful work of the kind ever executed. Hundreds of hollow tubes, each one a marvel of solidity and skill, run from every quarter of the town to one immense receptacle of the filth and waste water thus carried off. Before the mouth of this hideous reservoir is placed a grating through which the mass of infection pours night and day. This grating is meant to prevent the passage of any object beyond a certain size, which might otherwise obstruct the tube. The police reports of the past year record the detection of more than ten thousand new born infants thrown at the moment of birth into the drains, which had carried them to the horrid grating, there to leave them to be gathered as the most damning evidence of neglect and abandonment."

INTELLIGENCE FROM THE SPIRITS.

At a Spiritualist circle held at the office of the Banner of Light, in Boston, May 2nd, 1864, the communicating spirit was asked, "What is the *modus operandi of controlling a medium?"

The spirit answered:—"As a free intelligence, or spirit, who by nature has no right to the medium's body, my first step is to come and hold communion with the spirit who owns the body. The result of that communion is not transmitted to the external senses of the medium, but to the internal; therefore it is quite as tangible, as real, to the spirit, as it could be to the external. I ask that spirit, 'Will you yield me up the control of your mortal form for a short time?' The answer is generally, 'I will.' . . . The spirit is subjected to the entire control of the predominating spirit. It is, in a word, magnetized by the spirit; held in perfect subjection. And it seems to sleep; and it does sleep, so far as external life is concerned."

It will be noticed that it is necessary for the medium to "yield" to the control of the spirit at first; but when the demon has once gained the power of control, it is difficult to escape from his influence. None need be subject to the power of the demons, if they will only "resist" them, and obey the Lord; but if they prefer error to truth, darkness to light, and communion with demons instead of the Lord, they can take their choice, and with it the consequences.

THE GOLD TRADE.

LETTER FROM NEW YORK.

"New York, July 2, 1864.

To the Editor of the Boston Journal:

Of all the exciting days in Wall street and Broad street, yesterday took the lead. The brokers from Williams street, disliking to be under the dictation of Jerome and others, went up to Broad Street, near Wall, took an elegant building and opened what they called an "Open Board." This became so popular that the old, or "Close Board" were obliged to follow suit. And they have taken a new and splendid building near the Open Board. When it was telegraphed that the Senate refused to confirm the nomination of Gov. Tod, the speculators took courage and ran gold up to two hundred and seventy, or eighty. The nomination of Mr. Fessenden brought a change over these gentlemen and gold came down on the run to two hundred and six. The Jews fairly howled with rage, excitement and despair. They called on all the prophets by name [illegible] High as gold was on Thursday, men confidently predicted, that it would run up to three hundred, and one party made an investment of [illegible] gold. Pork [illegible] $15 a barrel to $50, ran down $10 on a barrel, carrying down with it several large houses that had [illegible] investments. Whiskey that reached the high figure of $2.50, fluctuated between 60, and 80 cents, and carried with it in its descent several strong firms. Everything is unsettled. Grocers buy by the retail, and large houses by the single case."

INQUIRIES AND ANSWERS.

MR. GRANT:—Dear Sir,—Having been anxious, all my days to learn somewhat of man and his destiny, and having been an attendant upon your meetings in our State, and heard you speak; and perceiving that you possess considerable talent, ability and skill, and having read your discussions; I therefore solicit a favor of you, or of some of your able expounders, to explain a few questions for me.

I would like to have an answer to each of the following questions, as you or your denomination understand them. My motive is good and intention pure. Should you feel to do so, please put them in your paper, and send me a copy.

1. What do you understand by the term man?

2. What is that in man which thinks, feels, loves and enjoys, etc.? or, in other words, what is intelligence?

3. What part of man was, or is, the image of God?

4. What is the correct idea of the term death, when we say that a man is dead?

5. As the dust returns to the earth as it was, and the spirit to God who gave it, what part of man sleeps?

6. What is meant by the word dead in the passage, "How are the dead raised up?"

7. What does the word they refer to in the same passage,—"With what body do they come?"

8. What is meant by the term mortal as applied to man?

9. In what sense does mortal put on immortality?

10. Does the word immortality in 1 Cor. 15: 53, mean the same as the word in Rom. 2: 7?

11. If mortal puts on immortality, will not man be a compound being of the two natures?

12. If death is the extinction of being (as I heard you once say), what is there to be raised?

Clear, plain, and lucid answers to the above inquiries would be gratefully received by your unworthy friend, etc.,

Corinna, Me. I. H. SAWYER.

1. By the word man we mean a being made of the dust of the ground in the likeness of his Creator. "And God said, Let us make man in our image, after our likeness."—Gen. 1: 26. And the Lord God formed MAN of the dust of the ground."—Gen. 2: 7.

2. Intelligence, as applied to man, is the reresult of an active brain. It is the man himself who "thinks, feels, loves and enjoys;" but he can have none of these emotions without a nervous system connected with the brain.

3. No particular part, but the man as a whole is made of "dust" in the "likeness" of his Creator. That is, man, in his exterior, resembles the form of God who is a Spirit. In Boston, before the State house, is a likeness of Daniel Webster. This likeness was cast of metallic substances. Then does it follow, when we say that it is a likeness of Webster, that Mr. Webster himself was made of copper or brass, or any other metal? Of course not. So when we read in the Scriptures that man was made of "dust" in the "likeness" of his Creator, it does not militate at all against the expression that "God is a Spirit;" for a spirit has a form, as the Bible most plainly teaches.

4. When a man is dead, the Bible declares that he has no "knowledge, nor wisdom," that he knows "not any thing." He is wholly unconscious in death. As David says, "In death, there is no remembrance of thee,"—Ps. 6: 5; and in the day a man dies, "In that very day his thoughts perish;"—Ps. 146: 4. In other words, a man cannot think when he is dead.

5. The whole man sleeps. The spirit that leaves man at death is "the breath of life." The word ruah, rendered "spirit" in the 5th question, is the same that is rendered breath in Ps. 104: 29—"Thou takest away their breath, they die, and return to their dust." The same word occurs in Job 28: 3. "The spirit of God is in my nostrils." These, and many other scriptures, show that there is one spirit in a man's nostrils, called "the breath of life," which is taken from him at death. As God gave it to man, when he takes it away, it may properly be said to return to him; and we find no proof in the Bible that any other spirit leaves man at death. But this spirit is no more the man than the steam in the boiler is the engine. It is not a living being by itself.

6. The word "dead" in I Cor. 15: 35, refers to those who were once alive, and are now in their graves, awaiting the time when they will "come forth" to life again.

7. The word "they" stands for the word "dead," which is used as a collective noun, to represent those who are "in the graves."

8. The term "mortal as applied to man" signifies that man, as a whole, is mortal; otherwise the application cannot be correct.

9. When a mortal man becomes immortal, then it may be truly said he has put on immortality. He is in a new condition. That which was mortal is "changed" to immortality.

10. Yes.

11. We think not on that account. The mortal nature is changed to an immortal one. We do not see how it is possible for a man to be both mortal and immortal at the same time. It looks like an absurdity; consequently, we do not see how any part of man can be immortal in this life. He must either be wholly mortal, or wholly immortal.

12. We said death was "the extinction of life." When a man is dead, his life is extinct. At the resurrection of the dead the man comes forth from the grave, just as Lazarus was raised by the Savior, and as the Savior was raised by his Father. "But if there be no resurrection of the dead, then is Christ not risen. . . . And if Christ be not raised, . . . then they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished."—1 Cor. 15: 13, 17, 18.

WHEN SHALL THE KINGDOM BE SET UP?

BRO. GRANT:—Will you give your views, through the Crisis, if you please, with regard to the time that Christ is to set up his kingdom on earth? It was discussed in our Bible class last Sabbath, and a part of them decided that Christ's kingdom was set up at the time John commenced preaching. I could not agree with them, however, and would like your opinion. MARY M. BABB.

We think no point is clearer in the Bible than that the kingdom of Christ will not be set up till after he comes. Jesus informed his disciples that near the time when the Gentiles would cease to tread down Jerusalem, there would "be signs in the sun, and in the moon, and in the stars; and upon the earth distress of nations, with perplexity; the sea and the waves roaring; men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth." He then says, "When ye see these things come to pass, know ye that the kingdom of God is nigh at hand." It may be readily shown that we are living in the time when these signs are fulfilling, thus indicating that the kingdom "is nigh at hand," but has not yet come.

WHY THE SHOE PINCHES.—A useful little work, showing the conditions of a healthy foot, the cause of deformities, and how to avoid those troublesome diseases and malformations, such as chilblains, corns, bunions, flat-foot, bent-up toes, grown-in nails, etc. Price 30 cts., post paid.

The above named work is for sale at the Crisis office, and we think it a valuable one for those who wish to take care of their feet, and learn how to have healthy boots and shoes made. We have felt much benefited by the information received from this work. It is a German production, and republished by Dr. Trall, of New York.

THE SEAT OF THE BEAST.—The following information relative to the seat of the beast, may be an item of interest to many of our readers:—

"Eld. Billings, in a sermon at Holden, Me., preaching on the beast, stated the beast now had his seat at the 'Crisis' office." W. N.

HALIFAX REPORT.

DEAR FRIENDS:—God is with me here, and is giving me a glorious triumph. I am preaching in the North Baptist church, where large congregations attend and hear with deep and serious attention. The Holy Spirit is moving upon the people, and sinners are coming, coming, coming to the Redeemer. Last evening I preached to a "crowd," and at the close of the sermon requested all who are christians, and all who will be christians from this hour, to stand up and sing—

"That awful day will surely come,
The appointed hour makes haste,"

when, to my astonishment, almost the entire congregation arose and stood. Mighty God, thy grace! I like this wooden city of Halifax much. I really love the people, they are so kind and affectionate to me, and they appear to love me. Real gentlemen and ladies, in the real sense of the term. There are here some noble christians. The minister, with whom I am laboring, has no faith in the soon coming of the Lord, but makes no objection to my preaching it, and so I speak freely. I shall yet remain some little time, but hope to reach home in time to come to Wilbraham campmeeting to see dear and loved friends; and then, God permitting, I shall begin a special protracted effort in Portland, in the Preble street chapel, Rev. O. P. Tuckerman's, the first Sunday in September. God bless you all. Greeting, EDWIN BURNHAM.

For the World's Crisis.

QUERIES.

How can the man pray "Thy kingdom come," who is unprepared to meet the King?

How can the man pray "Thy will be done," who does not delight in doing his will?

How can the man ask God for his daily bread, who gets his bread in a way that God does not approve of?

How can the man pray "forgive us our debts as we forgive our debtors," who does not from the heart forgive his debtors?

How can the man say "Thine is the power and the glory," who would have people see that to him belongs much of the power and the glory?

If "the disciple is not above his lord," where is the disciple of the Lord Jesus Christ that has cause to boast of his attainments as a disciple?

P. S. How it becomes us as followers of the meek and lowly Jesus to put a small value on our own strength, wisdom, and righteousness. When the tempter tempts us to rely on our own strength, or righteousness; or when he would lift us up in our own eyes, let us compare ourselves with the wise, the powerful, the righteous, the great, and yet the humble, lowly and persecuted Jesus. We may thus be brought to see our unworthiness and need. A. L. FORRESTER.

A NOBLE EXAMPLE.

"Gather my saints together unto me; those that have made a covenant with me by sacrifice."—Ps. 50: 5.

It will be recollected that "a certain poor widow" once gave "two mites" "into the treasury; and many that were rich cast in much." Jesus said of her, "This poor widow hath cast more in than all they which have cast into the treasury." The reason was, she was the only one that did all she could.

We have had frequent occasion to think of the "poor widow," when witnessing the sacrifices that many have made for the purpose of scattering tracts and other means of light. The following is another instance:—

BRO. GRANT:—I have long desired to contribute to the Tract Fund, or in some way do something for the cause of the Lord, but want of means has prevented thus far; but last spring, being in need of a bonnet, my husband found a chance to purchase one reasonably, but the trimmings were too fashionable to suit me; and I proposed to have them removed, and the price reduced accordingly, but the milliner, willing to encourage the vanity of her customers, proposed to reduce the price one dollar, and also leave on the trimmings. Feeling, however, that they were useless where they were, and too gay, I removed them, and sold them for one dollar, which, after subscribing for the "Young Pilgrim" for a neighbor's children, leaves me seventy-five cents to give to the Tract Fund, which I now send.

In view of the shortness of time, and the urgency of sending the truth to perishing humanity, are there not others among the readers of the Crisis who would forego some of the superfluities of this world for the sake of aiding the cause of One who became poor for our sakes? Dear sisters, let us look about us and see. True, by this course we may not please the eyes of the world, but I take it there are very many who will read this article who have resolved to seek the approbation of a better friend, and would be willing to dress plainer, if they saw it to be duty, to see which, in these days of extravagance, one needs but to give candid attention to the subject. I fully endorse the sentiments of Sister Streeter in the Crisis of July 5th. Dear sisters, read her article again, and then read the New Testament, and act in the matter as though you fully realized that you were to give account of your doings to the Author of all good, regardless of the doings of the world. Our best efforts are due to the cause of One who has done so much for us.

Yours in christian meekness,
Rutland, Vt. M. S. PERKINS.

Come, dear Brn. and Srs., let us have that two thousand dollar Tract Fund made up at once. Let all help, and help all together, and success is sure.

BOOKS TO PREACHERS.

I will send any three volumes of the Bible Students' Library, in paper covers, post paid, to any three preachers who may be named, for one dollar; and if that is not cheap enough I will pay the dollar myself, if the books will only be carefully read and circulated. Address orders to H. L. Hastings, Boston, Mass.

SOCIAL HYMNS.—Bro. I. C. Wellcome writes: "I like the little book." So do others who have seen it. It is handy for prayer meetings, and meetings in new places, and so cheap it interferes with no other book. $1.00 per dozen; $6.00 per one hundred. For sale by H. L. Hastings, Boston, Mass., and at the Crisis office.

WHO WANTS IT?

It is now time to make arrangements for the Maine Annual Conference; but before we do so, we wish to know where there is a church, or company, who wish it to be held with them? Will some one, or more, communicate with me, if they wish it with them, as we shall not appoint it until we know where to ask the brethren to convene.

Correspondence.

From Bro. B. Spaulding.

BRO. GRANT:—I praise the Lord there is such a good medium of communication between the loyal lovers of our King. It does my soul good to take up the World's Crisis and there read the names and communications of our brother and sister pilgrims. Thus we learn the situation, the state of the cause, its advance or its declension of individuals or churches all over our country. I do rejoice that division, strife and personal bickerings do not come into our paper. We are not now afraid to send it to our neighbors, and can confidently expect it will be read and do good. I have circulated a large amount of back numbers and second-hand copies of the World's Crisis among the outsiders, and they have been received kindly, and I never enjoyed my labors better in my life. I have found kind, hospitable homes everywhere.

Since writing last, have visited Hartford, Ct., where I found a good company of believers, firm in the faith, well united, striving together for the faith once delivered. I enjoyed a free time there, and was helped on my way after a godly sort. I have never experienced such liberality in all my travels. The Lord bless them. I spent only the Sunday, and did not become so well acquainted with them as I could wish.

Went to New Britain, where there is quite a little company of believers, which need to heed the caution not to be overcharged with business and cares, so that great day come on them unawares. I was received in their families with great hospitality. One Sunday had a good [illegible] Then went to Cheshire. Of the first man I saw inquired for Bro. Dp[illegible]. He replied, 'That is my name.' 'Is it William [illegible]' [illegible] doctrine everywhere spoken against." He smiled. "My name is Spaulding. I am a colporteur, one who loves God and the glorious appearing of Jesus." "I know you," says he, "by your writings in the Crisis." He took me home, introduced me to his wife as Bro. Spaulding. "It is not the Bro. Spaulding who writes for the Crisis?" "Yes, the same." She gave me a cordial shake of the hand, and bade me welcome to their home.

Went to Southington, where I met Sr. Mussey. Found Bro. Woodruff, a bold soldier, just beginning to sound the gospel trumpet. God bless and prosper him. God is raising men after his own heart to feed the people with knowledge and understanding. At Cheshire Street found a good company, with a convenient little house of worship.

Yours, B. SPAULDING.

From Bro. L. C. McKinstry.

BRO. GRANT:—After a visit to New Glasgow, preaching and baptizing, working hard to reconcile those who had differences, and enjoying with the waiting ones the privilege of "breaking bread" together in memory of our Redeemer's death and in hope of enjoying the privilege of a seat at the marriage supper-table, I have returned to Montreal, where I find the congregations more than doubled since your last visit here, and evening prayer-meetings as well attended as our Sabbath congregations were, and the time well occupied, new voices joining with us in the pilgrim's songs and stories of experience. The infidel of ten years' standing is holding on his way, and others are pressing on.

It is not an uncommon thing now to find those in the churches about who say they see the truth as to the "gospel hope" plainly, but whether they are kept from coming among us through fear of reproach and losing a good name I cannot say; but they may come out yet or be bold where they are. The leaven is working, and books, tracts and papers are being circulated as much as ever.

One week from next Lord's day (July 17,) it is expected that Bro. D. T. Taylor will be with the church here, and give each his seasonable "portion" of "meat," and your unworthy brother, with his pilgrim's staff will, God helping him, be seeking the "lost sheep" in other parts of the vineyard. Brethren, pray for me. The Lord is coming soon, and I feel like being ready. This world with its kingdoms is going to pieces like a shipwreck, and nothing is of value but the hope of the gospel. Let us be faithful,—

"Till we all arrive at home,"

which will be soon.

Your pilgrim brother,
Montreal, C. E. L. C. MCKINSTRY.

From Bro. I. Rice.

BRO. GRANT:—Permit me to report to my brethren scattered abroad, the tendernesses of the Lord to us. For some time past we have been favored with the ministerial labors of Brn. E. N. Reed and Wm. Ingham. Had preaching quite often during last fall and winter, and when we had no preaching we kept up our meetings three and four times a week. Bro. E. Burnham wrote us he would be at our place about the first of June, and we saw we needed a larger house. So we cut the tabernacle in two pieces and put eighteen feet in length, making it forty-eight feet long, and made some other repairs. Bro. Burnham commenced his labors at the Baptist house, and finished them at the tabernacle. A number have been converted. Some backsliders returned to their first love, and sixteen were baptized, besides one in the Baptist church. I expect more will soon follow in the Lord's appointed way There is some opposition outside, but we have cause to praise the Lord we have union within our borders, and joy in the Holy Ghost. The Lord is adding unto us such as shall be saved.

Bro. Burnham has met with some opposition for trying to get all christians united and ready for the soon coming kingdom. We know that all things shall work together for good to all them that love God. All the opposition is in our favor, and we are on a strong advance, and if the breeze last it will sail us safe into the kingdom. Praise the Lord! O! how blessed to be right with God.

As I do not know Sr. A. Mussey's address, I will say to her in this letter that her dear son Franklin and his wife have both been buried with Christ by baptism into his death. We are believing the day of the Lord is very near, and feel it our duty and privilege to watch and pray always, that we may be counted worthy to escape all those things that are coming on the earth, and stand before the Son of man. Dear brethren, let us be determined by the grace of God to have an abundant entrance into the everlasting kingdom of God, to hear the blessed King of glory say, "Well done, good and faithful servants," and share a welcome reception by the angelic escort that will be in attendance upon the King, when he shall come to be glorified in his saints and admired by all them that believe in that day. Even so, come, Lord Jesus, and come quickly. ISRAEL RICE.

From Bro. S. Sherwin.

BRO. GRANT:—It rejoices my heart to see you doing so much for the spread of the blessed truths of the Bible. My heart and hand are with you, as far as I am able. I am about sixty-nine years old, with a disease that prevents me from doing any kind of labor. I soon expect my pilgrimage will end, and to live in constant preparation for the coming of our King is the great desire of my heart. My mind has dwelt much of late on the prayer of faith to heal the sick. That there is power in the prayer of faith I have no doubt, only lost in the apostasy of the church. Knowing that the Lord does hear prayer, and believing that he will hear, I request the prayers of all God's praying people, that I may be restored to health and fitted to do his will while my pilgrimage lasts. Yours in hope of immortality when Jesus comes.

DEAR CRISIS:—I have just returned from a short visit to some of your friends. They spoke of your prosperity and welfare, and hoped you would prosper in the future, not merely in temporal things, but especially in the spiritual. Some of them have given me money to send to you, to encourage you in your weekly visits to them. They are aware of the fact that you cannot visit them without money, so they help you on your journey. (By the way, they hope you will not forget to

LAZARUS.

The colored man is the Lazarus of this dispensation as the now rich Gentile was the Lazarus of the Mosaic.

As the Jew oppressed the Gentile, so does this rich Gentile now oppress, in his turn, the poor colored man, and cast him out as unfit for society. In vain does this poor man ask for the crumbs which fall from this rich man's table, but is left to die with none to console him save here and there one, who for this act is esteemed as a dog in their eyes. But the angels of God do not forget him in his poverty. He has [illegible] to eat that his rich oppressor knows not of. O the heavenly manna that fills his soul from these divine illuminations! manna to which the rich man, with all his purple and fine linen and sumptuous fare, is a stranger. Glory to God, whose ways are equal, and who has respect unto the lowly!

This day (July 10th) the Lord gave us the privilege to minister to one of this Lazarus race. Bless his name for this! We met at the lake, at the water—that great leveler. "The small and the great are there, and the servant is free from his master."—Job 3: 19. There we buried him in the likeness of his Lord, and raised him up, as we hope, to a new life. We then returned bringing our sheaves with us, where we met our Bro. James Ferris from Sandy Hill, N. Y., in waiting to minister to us the word of life. He read the second chapter of James, and spoke from the last verse. What a cordial the first verse was to our souls in the work we had just been performing!

"My brethren, have not the faith of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Lord of glory, with respect of persons. How good it sounded about the gold ring, and the gay clothing, and the vile raiment, and the footstool. We felt, by grace, Lord, we have done as thou hast commanded, and to thy name be all the glory. Amen.

Our brother's preaching was not with enticing words of man's wisdom, but in demonstration of the Spirit and of power, that our faith should not stand in the wisdom of men, but in the power of God. 1 Cor. 2: 4, 5. It was not in word only, but also in power, and in the Holy Ghost, and in much assurance. 1 Thess. 1: 5. He said he had no credentials. This was only the third time he ever had occupied this position, and each of these times in this same place; but that he had felt for two years it was his duty before God, and now God had brought him all this long way to bring him out, and he would give him glory. And so we all felt. I sunk into the depth of my spirit and praised the Lord that he had now answered my prayer of three long years' continuance, that he would send us just such a man.

O thou saint of God, whose hope has been long deferred, even to heart-sickness, judge ye of my joy! Language fails me. It was unspeakable and full of glory. Amen. What a covenant-keeping God is ours! I will always trust in him. Amen.

AWFUL EFFECTS OF WAR.

"Last Sunday evening, the Rev. J. Wesley preached at the Foundry an awful sermon, on the horrid effects of a civil war. Mr. Wesley observed, that of all scourges from God, war was the most to be deprecated, because it often swept away all traces of religion, and even of humanity. He then related the following matter of fact, which drew a tear from almost every eye: 'I conversed with an officer who was of a remarkably mild disposition; he was three years in Germany during the last war, where he was sent by the General with a party of soldiers to get provisions wherever he could find any. They first arrived at a farmhouse; the master of the family having been frequently plundered had fled, and left his wife with the care of seven small children, and only one cow for their subsistence. The woman fell at the feet of the soldiers, imploring them with strong cries and tears, that they would spare the cow for the nourishment of her helpless offspring. The officer could not forbear weeping, and forced himself from her as she clasped his knees, with every sign of frantic grief; nevertheless the soldiers carried away her cow. This officer afterwards told me, war had rendered his heart so hard, and his mind so ferocious, that he could have even broiled the woman and her seven children.'

Mr. Wesley having concluded this affecting narrative, said, 'O! my dear hearers, should the great God suffer the hellish rage of a civil war to be let loose in England, for our idleness, deceit, luxury and oppression, perhaps the most human person now in London, may be equally hardened in his heart.' Mr. Wesley then charged the rich to abound in good works, to be ready to communicate, as they needed only to open their eyes to see the amazing distresses of the poor! Such distress as his eyes never before beheld. How long we may have food to eat, and raiment to put on, and a place where to put our heads, he who is the Creator and Redeemer of mankind only knows.

He selected his text from Dan. 4: 27,—'Let my counsel be acceptable to thee, and break off thy sins by righteousness, and thine iniquities by showing mercy to the poor; if it may be a lengthening of thy tranquility.'"

We are often told that the present war will make us a purer and better people, but plain, positive facts prove the reverse of this, and instead of making people humble, it makes them fierce, restless and tyrannical. I have conversed with several who had the name of being harmless and inoffensive men before they went to war, who have now got the disposition of tigers. One man remarkable for gentleness told me "his heart was so hard whilst in the service of the United States that he saw his fellow-soldiers die by his side, fall off the same bench on which he sat, dead, and he would not notice it more than I would the falling of a rag doll."

"War always has had a brutal, intemperate, licentious effect, in every respect demoralizing on those engaged in it, and its spirit has sat like an infernal incubus on the churches, gnawing the vitals of godliness, and leaving them a dead, putrid carcass. As Adam Clarke [illegible] I would say of war, 'I here register my testimony against the unprincipled, inhuman, anti-christian and diabolical [illegible] system.' O that [illegible] might [illegible] that the wickedness of the wicked might come to an end! Come, Lord Jesus, thou Prince of Peace, and give thy [illegible] rest in thy holy, peaceful kingdom." [illegible]

[illegible] The true motives of our actions, like the real pipes of an organ, are sometimes concealed. Then the gilded and the hollow pretext is pompously placed in the front for show.

THE WORLD'S CRISIS AND SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER.

Boston, Tuesday, July 19, 1864.

☞ NOTICE.

All orders and monies for the World's Crisis, or for Books and Tracts for sale at this Office, and all matters pertaining to the business of the Office, must be addressed to the Business Agent,

MILES GRANT, Crisis Box, Boston.

LATE.—The Crisis is one day late this week, for want of paper on which to print it. The dry weather has prevented our paper maker from meeting his engagements.

WILBRAHAM.

Remember the campmeeting at Wilbraham is appointed to begin Aug. 22nd, and close Aug. 29th. Are you going? Don't say, "I can't leave my business." Where can you better spend your week of vacation? Don't say, "It will cost too much." You may obtain that which will be of more real value to you than all the treasures of the world.

Get ready,—be there from its commencement to its close. Try to get others to go with you. "Come thou with us, and we will do thee good."

WAR NEWS.

For the last few days the war news has been very exciting. The rebels have made a very bold dash into Maryland, and taken away a large amount of spoil, besides destroying much public and private property. After taking possession of Harper's Ferry, they went within seven miles of Baltimore, and caused great excitement in the city. They next advanced on Washington, destroying all communication with Baltimore, and the north. For one or two days, it was quite a current rumor in Boston that Washington was taken by the rebels. They came so near capturing it, that it made the friends of the Union feel some as one would when his house was struck by lightning, and only the house suffered injury—"it was a narrow escape."

The following items of news from Washington will give a hint of the danger in which the Capital was situated:—

"Washington was to be attacked Sunday night, but the matter was delayed until Monday, when Early received such information as to make him abandon the attempt, causing great dissatisfaction among subordinate officers and men, who believed the thing entirely safe.

There is no doubt that if the enemy had attacked the defenses of Washington previous to Monday night, they could have carried them with ease."

AFFAIRS IN EUROPE.

The political aspect of Europe is very threatening. There is no prospect of peace. There are strong indications of trouble ahead that cannot be averted. The terrible drama may not open this year, and yet it is liable to commence at any time. The world is fast approaching a state that might well be called one of confusion confounded; but great light is shining on the christian's pathway, showing that his eternal deliverance is at hand.

A Paris correspondent of the New York Commercial says:—

"The opinion is general at this moment that a great deal of intrigue is going on among the despotic sovereigns of Europe, and that some sort of a league is being formed which, while couteracting the maneuvers of the liberal party, will bring about some sort of a change of European frontiers. The liberals of France, on the other hand, were never more certain than they are now that Napoleon is approaching events that will cost him his crown, and they look to a war with the United States as a certainty, and as one of the means which is to bring about his overthrow."

REFORMERS.

The following excellent remarks, from The Evangelical Pulpit, should be treasured up by all who would aid in making the world better, or assist in spreading the truth:—

"Reformers must not only be true and firm, but they must also be meek, kind, and gentle; so much depends upon the spirit and temper in which the truth is urged upon the attention of men."

No one is fit to act as a Reformer till he has first reformed himself. If he cannot be kind to an opposer, he had better be silent. He will do the cause of the Lord more harm than good. He should have great meekness in order to be successful. No harsh or unkind word should escape his lips, if he wishes to convince his opponent. May the Lord help us all to be very watchful on this point.

THE EMPEROR OF MEXICO.

Maximilian, the new Emperor of Mexico, has arrived among his people, and been received with joyful demonstrations. It is said the French managed the order of arrangements, and took the lead in the ceremonies. They were quite flattering to the Emperor and Empress, and partook much more of the democratic spirit than is seen in Europe. We take the following from the report of his reception, as given in the Boston Journal, of July 8th:—

"On the 13th they went out alone and on foot to visit some of the churches. A mass of over five thousand persons soon gathered. Men and women approached them, taking their hands to kiss. Some parties wished an escort to be brought, but Maximilian answered that his best escort was the people. Among the mottoes written in Mexican were the following: 'The ancient throne of the Aztecs is awaiting you, O great Maximilian;' 'The pure Indian race has nothing to offer you, great Prince, but the sceptre of Montezuma;' 'Come, O illustrious Prince, and be our firm support in the holy religion of Jesus Christ;' [illegible] to occupy the throne of the Aztecs, but try to exercise on it the empire of truth and justice;' 'Every people of the Mexican territory, boldly raise your heads [illegible] hand of the impious blasphemer has been paralyzed;' 'Take courage, Mexicans, the true light follows the dark [illegible] of childhood;' 'Mexicans, from the East comes this knowledge of the gospel—[illegible] was to be established—but rejoice, for now from the East comes its defence; adore Divine Providence.'"

WHY IN THE DARK?

It is often asked why the spirits choose darkness for their best manifestations, unless the affair be all trickery? Those who are familiar with the philosophy of these manifestations can give a ready answer. Those who have not looked into the matter, the following, from Mr. Chas. Partridge, formerly editor of the Spiritual Telegraph, may afford some light. He says:—"Spirits have answered this question to me and others, by saying that the light very much enlivens or disturbs the elements they use in these physical formations; so much so that they can seldom control them when light is present; but that when twilight or darkness comes, these elements are comparatively at rest, and then they can control them."

When Paul was speaking of these same spirits, he calls them "the rulers of the darkness of this world."—Eph. 6: 12.

BLASPHEMY.

If any one should say the Holy Spirit was a "fabulous" myth originating with the heathen, existing only in imagination, would it not be blasphemy against that Spirit?

The following is from the Herald of Progress, July 16th, 1864, edited by Andrew Jackson Davis:—

"ORIGIN OF THE HOLY GHOST SUPERSTITION.—The origin of the tradition respecting this fabulous or mythical being is easily traced to the ancient Brahminical trifold conception of old demi-gods of mythology. The primary windy conception of the Holy Ghost is traceable to that early period of society when the rude and untutored denizens of the earth in their childish 'knownothingism' and profound ignorance of natural causes were very easily and naturally led to the belief that wherever there was motion there was a god or the active manifestation of a god, whether it was in the wind, breath, water, fire or the sun. Hence the Budhists had their god Vasus, who manifested himself in the shape or character of fire, wind, storms, gas, gusts or ghosts, and even the breath, thus constituting a very nearly allied counterpart to the Christian Holy Ghost."

Truly this is an age of PROGRESS. We think the people were never traveling at greater speed away from the road that leads to life.

WITHOUT NATURAL AFFECTION.

We are informed by one of the holy men, who spake as he was "moved by the Holy Ghost," "that in the last days" natural affection would be deficient. It is natural for all animals to love their young and tender offspring. No sacrifice seems too great for the mother to make for the preservation of her young. And in the human species this trait of character is most fully developed; but "in the last days" it will be wanting. Read the following, showing what is done in only one city, whose inhabitants are thought to be the most polite, fashionable, refined, and intelligent in the world:—

"The drains of Paris are declared to be the most wonderful work of the kind ever executed. Hundreds of hollow tubes, each one a marvel of solidity and skill, run from every quarter of the town to one immense receptacle of the filth and waste water thus carried off. Before the mouth of this hideous reservoir is placed a grating through which the mass of infection pours night and day. This grating is meant to prevent the passage of any object beyond a certain size, which might otherwise obstruct the tube. The police reports of the past year record the detection of more than ten thousand new born infants thrown at the moment of birth into the drains, which had carried them to the horrid grating, there to leave them to be gathered as the most damning evidence of neglect and abandonment."

INTELLIGENCE FROM THE SPIRITS.

At a Spiritualist circle held at the office of the Banner of Light, in Boston, May 2nd, 1864, the communicating spirit was asked, "What is the *modus operandi of controlling a medium?"

The spirit answered:—"As a free intelligence, or spirit, who by nature has no right to the medium's body, my first step is to come and hold communion with the spirit who owns the body. The result of that communion is not transmitted to the external senses of the medium, but to the internal; therefore it is quite as tangible, as real, to the spirit, as it could be to the external. I ask that spirit, 'Will you yield me up the control of your mortal form for a short time?' The answer is generally, 'I will.' . . . The spirit is subjected to the entire control of the predominating spirit. It is, in a word, magnetized by the spirit; held in perfect subjection. And it seems to sleep; and it does sleep, so far as external life is concerned."

It will be noticed that it is necessary for the medium to "yield" to the control of the spirit at first; but when the demon has once gained the power of control, it is difficult to escape from his influence. None need be subject to the power of the demons, if they will only "resist" them, and obey the Lord; but if they prefer error to truth, darkness to light, and communion with demons instead of the Lord, they can take their choice, and with it the consequences.

THE GOLD TRADE.

LETTER FROM NEW YORK.

"New York, July 2, 1864.

To the Editor of the Boston Journal:

Of all the exciting days in Wall street and Broad street, yesterday took the lead. The brokers from Williams street, disliking to be under the dictation of Jerome and others, went up to Broad Street, near Wall, took an elegant building and opened what they called an "Open Board." This became so popular that the old or "Close Board" were obliged to follow suit. And they have taken a new and splendid building near the Open Board. When it was telegraphed that the Senate refused to confirm the nomination of Gov. Tod, the speculators took courage and ran gold up to two hundred and seventy or eighty. The nomination of Mr. Fessenden brought a change over these gentlemen and gold came down on the run to two hundred and six. The Jews fairly howled with rage, excitement and despair. They called on all the prophets by whose [illegible] High as gold was on Thursday, men confidently predicted that it would run up to three hundred, and one party made an investment of $50,000 in gold. Pork, which had been gradually running up from $15 a barrel to $50, ran down $16 on a barrel, carrying [illegible] with several [illegible] that had [illegible] Whisky [illegible] reached [illegible] high figure of [illegible], fluctuated between 60, and 80 cents, and carried with it in its descent several strong firms. INQUIRIES AND ANSWERS.

MR. GRANT:—Dear Sir,—Having been anxious all my days to learn somewhat of man and his destiny, and having been an attendant upon your meetings in our State, and heard you speak; and perceiving that you possess considerable talent, ability and skill, and having read your discussions, I therefore solicit a favor of you, or of some of your able expounders, to explain a few questions for me.

I would like to have an answer to each of the following questions, as you or your denomination understand them. My motive is good and intention pure. Should you feel to do so, please put them in your paper, and send me a copy.

1. What do you understand by the term man?

2. What is that in man which thinks, feels, loves and enjoys, etc.? or, in other words, what is intelligence?

3. What part of man was, or is, the image of God?

4. What is the correct idea of the term death, when we say that a man is dead?

5. As the dust returns to the earth as it was, and the spirit to God who gave it, what part of man sleeps?

6. What is meant by the word dead in the passage, "How are the dead raised up?"

7. What does the word they refer to in the same passage,—"With what body do they come?"

8. What is meant by the term mortal as applied to man?

9. In what sense does mortal put on immortality?

10. Does the word immortality in 1 Cor. 15: 53, mean the same as the word in Rom. 2: 7?

11. If mortal puts on immortality, will not man be a compound being of the two natures?

12. If death is the extinction of being (as I heard you once say), what is there to be raised?

Clear, plain, and lucid answers to the above inquiries would be gratefully received by your unworthy friend, etc.,

Corinna, Me. I. H. SAWYER.

1. By the word man we mean a being made of the dust of the ground in the likeness of his Creator. "And God said, Let us make man in our image, after our likeness."—Gen. 1: 26. And the Lord God formed MAN of the dust of the ground."—Gen. 2: 7.

2. Intelligence, as applied to man, is the result of an active brain. It is the man himself who "thinks, feels, loves and enjoys;" but he can have none of these emotions without a nervous system connected with the brain.

3. No particular part, but the man as a whole is made of "dust" in the "likeness" of his Creator. That is, man, in his exterior, resembles the form of God who is a Spirit. In Boston, before the State house, is a likeness of Daniel Webster. This likeness was cast of metallic substances. Then does it follow, when we say that it is a likeness of Webster, that Mr. Webster himself was made of copper or brass, or any other metal? Of course not. So when we read in the Scriptures that man was made of "dust" in the "likeness" of his Creator, it does not militate at all against the expression that "God is a Spirit;" for a spirit has a form, as the Bible most plainly teaches.

4. When a man is dead, the Bible declares that he has no "knowledge, nor wisdom," that he knows "not any thing." He is wholly unconscious in death. As David says, "In death, there is no remembrance of thee,"—Ps. 6: 5; and in the day a man dies, "In that very day his thoughts perish;"—Ps. 146: 4. In other words, a man cannot think when he is dead.

5. The whole man sleeps. The spirit that leaves man at death is "the breath of life." The word ruah, rendered "spirit" in the 5th question, is the same that is rendered breath in Ps. 104: 29—"Thou takest away their breath, they die, and return to their dust." The same word occurs in Job 28: 3. "The spirit of God is in my nostrils." These, and many other scriptures, show that there is one spirit in a man's nostrils, called "the breath of life," which is taken from him at death. As God gave it to man, when he takes it away, it may properly be said to return to him; and we find no proof in the Bible that any other spirit leaves man at death. But this spirit is no more the man than the steam in the boiler is the engine. It is not a living being by itself.

6. The word "dead" in 1 Cor. 15: 35, refers to those who were once alive, and are now in their graves, awaiting the time when they will "come forth" to life again.

7. The word "they" stands for the word "dead," which is used as a collective noun, to represent those who are "in the graves."

8. The term "mortal as applied to man" signifies that man, as a whole, is mortal; otherwise the application cannot be correct.

9. When a mortal man becomes immortal, then it may be truly said he has put on immortality. He is in a new condition. That which was mortal is "changed" to immortality.

10. Yes.

11. We think not on that account. The mortal nature is changed to an immortal one. We do not see how it is possible for a man to be both mortal and immortal at the same time. It looks like an absurdity; consequently, we do not see how any part of man can be immortal in this life. He must either be wholly mortal or wholly immortal.

12. We said death was "the extinction of life." When a man is dead, his life is extinct. At the resurrection of the dead the man comes forth from the grave, just as Lazarus was raised by the Saviour, and as the Saviour was raised by his Father. "But if there be no resurrection of the dead, then is Christ not risen. . . . And if Christ be not raised, . . . then they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are PERISHED."—1 Cor. 15: 13, 17, 18.

WHEN WILL THE KINGDOM BE SET UP?

BRO. GRANT:—Will you give your views, through the Crisis, if you please, with regard to the time that Christ is to set up his kingdom on earth? It was discussed in our Bible class last Sabbath, and a part of them decided that Christ's kingdom was set up at the time John commenced preaching. I could not agree with them, however, and would like your opinion. MARY M. BARR.

We think no point is clearer in the Bible than that the kingdom of Christ will not be set up till after he comes. Jesus informed his disciples that near the time when the Gentiles would cease to tread down Jerusalem, there would "be signs in the sun, and in the moon, and in the stars; and upon the earth distress of nations, with perplexity; the sea and the waves roaring; men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth." He then says, "When ye see these things come to pass, know ye that the kingdom of God is nigh at hand." It may be readily shown that we are living in the time when these signs are fulfilling, thus indicating that the kingdom "is nigh at hand," but has not yet come.

WHY THE SHOE PINCHES.—A useful little work, showing the conditions of a healthy foot, the cause of deformities, and how to avoid those troublesome diseases and malformations, such as chilblains, corns, bunions, flat-foot, bent-up toes, grown-in nails, etc. Price 30 cts., post paid.

The above named work is for sale at the Crisis office, and we think it a valuable one for those who wish to take care of their feet, and learn how to have healthy boots and shoes made. We have felt much benefited by the information received from this work. It is a German production, and republished by Dr. Trall, of New York.

THE SEAT OF THE BEAST.—The following information relative to the seat of the beast, may be an item of interest to many of our readers:—

"Eld. Billings, in a sermon at Holden, Me., preaching on the beast, stated the beast now had his seat at the 'Crisis' office." W. N.

HALIFAX REPORT.

DEAR FRIENDS:—God is with me here, and is giving me a glorious triumph. I am preaching in the North Baptist church, where large congregations attend and hear with deep and serious attention. The Holy Spirit is moving upon the people, and sinners are coming, coming, coming to the Redeemer. Last evening I preached to a "crowd," and at the close of the sermon requested all who are christians, and all who will be christians from this hour, to stand up and sing—

"That awful day will surely come,
The appointed hour makes haste,"

when, to my astonishment, almost the entire congregation arose and stood. Mighty God, thy grace! I like this wooden city of Halifax much. I really love the people, they are so kind and affectionate to me, and they appear to love me. Real gentlemen and ladies, in the real sense of the term. There are here some noble christians. The minister, with whom I am laboring, has no faith in the soon coming of the Lord, but makes no objection to my preaching it, and so I speak freely. I shall yet remain some little time, but hope to reach home in time to come to Wilbraham campmeeting to see dear and loved friends; and then, God permitting, I shall begin a special protracted effort in Portland, in the Preble street chapel, Rev. O. P. Tuckerman's, the first Sunday in September. God bless you all. Greeting, EDWIN BURNHAM.

QUERIES.

How can the man pray "Thy kingdom come," who is unprepared to meet the King?

How can the man pray "Thy will be done," who does not delight in doing his will?

How can the man ask God for his daily bread, who gets his bread in a way that God does not approve of?

How can the man pray "forgive us our debts as we forgive our debtors," who does not from the heart forgive his debtors?

How can the man say "Thine is the power and the glory," who would have people see that to him belongs much of the power and the glory?

If "the disciple is not above his lord," where is the disciple of the Lord Jesus Christ that has cause to boast of his attainments as a disciple?

P. S. How it becomes us as followers of the meek and lowly Jesus to put a small value on our own strength, wisdom, and righteousness. When the tempter tempts us to rely on our own strength, or righteousness; or when he would lift us up in our own eyes, let us compare ourselves with the wise, the powerful, the righteous, the great, and yet the humble, lowly and persecuted Jesus. We may thus be brought to see our unworthiness and need. A. L. FORRESTER.

A NOBLE EXAMPLE.

"Gather my saints together unto me; those that have made a covenant with me by sacrifice."—Ps. 50: 5.

It will be recollected that "a certain poor widow" once gave "two mites" "into the treasury; and many that were rich cast in much." Jesus said of her, "This poor widow hath cast more in than all they which have cast into the treasury." The reason was, she was the only one that did all she could.

We have had frequent occasion to think of the "poor widow," when witnessing the sacrifices that many have made for the purpose of scattering tracts and other means of light. The following is another instance:—

BRO. GRANT:—I have long desired to contribute to the Tract Fund, or in some way do something for the cause of the Lord, but want of means has prevented thus far; but last spring, being in need of a bonnet, my husband found a chance to purchase one reasonably, but the trimmings were too fashionable to suit me; and I proposed to have them removed, and the price reduced accordingly, but the milliner, willing to encourage the vanity of her customers, proposed to reduce the price one dollar, and also leave on the trimmings. Feeling, however, that they were useless where they were, and too gay, I removed them, and sold them for one dollar, which, after subscribing for the "Young Pilgrim" for a neighbor's children, leaves me seventy-five cents to give to the Tract Fund, which I now send.

In view of the shortness of time, and the urgency of sending the truth to perishing humanity, are there not others among the readers of the Crisis who would forego some of the superfluities of this world for the sake of aiding the cause of One who became poor for our sakes? Dear sisters, let us look about us and see. True, by this course we may not please the eyes of the world, but I take it there are very many who will read this article who have resolved to seek the approbation of a better friend, and would be willing to dress plainer, if they saw it to be duty, to see which, in these days of extravagance, one needs but to give candid attention to the subject. I fully endorse the sentiments of Sister Streeter in the Crisis of July 5th. Dear sisters, read her article again, and then read the New Testament, and act in the matter as though you fully realized that you were to give account of your doings to the Author of all good, regardless of the doings of the world. Our best efforts are due to the cause of One who has done so much for us.

Yours in christian meekness,

Rutland, Vt. M. S. PERKINS.

Come, dear Brn. and Srs., let us have that two thousand dollar Tract Fund made up at once. Let all help, and help all together, and success is sure.

BOOKS TO PREACHERS.

I will send any three volumes of the Bible Students' Library, in paper covers, post paid, to any three preachers who may be named, for one dollar; and if that is not cheap enough I will pay the dollar myself, if the books will only be carefully read and circulated. Address orders to H. L. Hastings, Boston, Mass.

SOCIAL HYMNS.—Bro. I. C. Wellcome writes: "I like the little book." So do others who have seen it. It is handy for prayer meetings, and meetings in new places, and so cheap it interferes with no other book. $1.00 per dozen; $6.00 per one hundred. For sale by H. L. Hastings, Boston, Mass., and at the Crisis office.

For the World's Crisis.

WHO WANTS IT?

It is now time to make arrangements for the Maine Annual Conference; but before we do so, we wish to know where there is a church, or company, who wish it to be held with them? Will some one, or more, communicate with me, if they wish it with them, as we shall not appoint it until we know where to ask the brethren to convene.

I. C. WELLCOME.

Yarmouth, Me., July 14th, 1864.

Correspondence.

From Bro. B. Spaulding.

BRO. GRANT:—I praise the Lord there is such a good medium of communication between the loyal lovers of our King. It does my soul good to take up the World's Crisis and there read the names and communications of our brother and sister pilgrims. Thus we learn the situation, the state of the cause, its advance or its declension of individuals or churches all over our country. I do rejoice that division, strife and personal bickerings do not come into our paper. We are not now afraid to send it to our neighbors, and can confidently expect it will be read and do good. I have circulated a large amount of back numbers and second-hand copies of the World's Crisis among the outsiders, and they have been received kindly, and I never enjoyed my labors better in my life. I have found kind, hospitable homes everywhere.

Since writing last, have visited Hartford, Ct., where I found a good company of believers, firm in the faith, well united, striving together for the faith once delivered. I enjoyed a free time there, and was helped on my way after a godly sort. I have never experienced such liberality in all my travels. The Lord bless them. I spent only the Sunday, and did not become so well acquainted with them as I could wish.

Went to New Britain, where there is quite a little company of believers, which need to heed the caution not to be overcharged with business and cares, so that great day come on them unawares. I was received in their families with great hospitality. On Sunday had a good [illegible]. [illegible] Chisholm [illegible] for Bro. Deyo [illegible]. He replied, 'That is my name.' [illegible] William [illegible] 'Well, I have heard of you as being a believer in the doctrine everywhere spoken against.' He smiled. "My name is Spaulding. I am a colporteur, one who loves God and the glorious appearing of Jesus." "I know you," says he, "by your writings in the Crisis." He took me home, introduced me to his wife as Bro. Spaulding. "It is not the Bro. Spaulding who writes for the Crisis?" "Yes, the same." She gave me a cordial shake of the hand, and bade me welcome to their home.

Went to Southington, where I met Sr. Mussey. Found Bro. Woodruff, a bold soldier, just beginning to sound the gospel trumpet. God bless and prosper him. God is raising men after his own heart to feed the people with knowledge and understanding. At Cheshire Street found a good company, with a convenient little house of worship.

Yours, B. SPAULDING.

From Bro. L. C. McKinstry.

BRO. GRANT:—After a visit to New Glasgow, preaching and baptizing, working hard to reconcile those who had differences, and enjoying with the waiting ones the privilege of "breaking bread" together in memory of our Redeemer's death and in hope of enjoying the privilege of a seat at the marriage supper-table, I have returned to Montreal, where I find the congregations more than doubled since your last visit here, and evening prayer-meetings as well attended as our Sabbath congregations were, and the time well occupied, new voices joining with us in the pilgrim's songs and stories of experience. "The infidel of ten years" standing is holding on his way, and others are pressing on.

It is not an uncommon thing now to find those in the churches about who say they see the truth as to the "gospel hope" plainly, but whether they are kept from coming among us through fear of reproach and losing a good name I cannot say; but they may come out yet or be bold where they are. The leaven is working, and books, tracts and papers are being circulated as much as ever.

One week from next Lord's day (July 17,) it is expected that Bro. D. T. Taylor will be with the church here, and give each his seasonable "portion" of "meat," and your unworthy brother, with his pilgrim's staff will, God helping him, be seeking the "lost sheep" in other parts of the vineyard. Brethren, pray for me. The Lord is coming soon, and I feel like being ready. This world with its kingdoms is going to pieces like a shipwreck, and nothing is of value but the hope of the gospel. Let us be faithful,—

"Till we all arrive at home,"

which will be soon.

Your pilgrim brother,

Montreal, C. E. L. C. MCKINSTRY.

From Bro. I. Rice.

BRO. GRANT:—Permit me to report to my brethren scattered abroad, the tendernesses of the Lord to us. For some time past we have been favored with the ministerial labors of Brn. E. N. Reed and Wm. Ingham. Had preaching quite often during last fall and winter, and when we had no preaching we kept up our meetings three and four times a week. Bro. E. Burnham wrote us he would be at our place about the first of June, and we saw we needed a larger house. So we cut the tabernacle in two pieces and put eighteen feet in length, making it forty-eight feet long, and made some other repairs. Bro. Burnham commenced his labors at the Baptist house, and finished them at the tabernacle. A number have been converted. Some backsliders returned to their first love, and sixteen were baptized, besides one in the Baptist church. I expect more will soon follow in the Lord's appointed way There is some opposition outside, but we have cause to praise the Lord we have union within our borders, and joy in the Holy Ghost. The Lord is adding unto us such as shall be saved.

Bro. Burnham has met with some opposition for trying to get all christians united and ready for the soon coming kingdom. We know that all things shall work together for good to all them that love God. All the opposition is in our favor, and we are on a strong advance, and if the breeze last it will sail us safe into the kingdom. Praise the Lord! O! how blessed to be right with God.

As I do not know Sr. A. Mussey's address, I will say to her in this letter that her dear son Franklin and his wife have both been buried with Christ by baptism into his death. We are believing the day of the Lord is very near, and feel it our duty and privilege to watch and pray always, that we may be counted worthy to escape all those things that are coming on the earth, and stand before the Son of man. Dear brethren, let us be determined by the grace of God to have an abundant entrance into the everlasting kingdom of God, to hear the blessed King of glory say, "Well done, good and faithful servants," and share a welcome reception by the angelic escort that will be in attendance upon the King, when he shall come to be glorified in his saints and admired by all them that believe in that day. Even so, come, Lord Jesus, and come quickly. ISRAEL RICE.

Nova Scotia.

From Bro. S. Sherwin.

BRO. GRANT:—It rejoices my heart to see you doing so much for the spread of the blessed truths of the Bible. My heart and hand are with you, as far as I am able. I am about sixty-nine years old, with a disease that prevents me from doing any kind of labor. I soon expect my pilgrimage will end, and to live in constant preparation for the coming of our King is the great desire of my heart. My mind has dwelt much of late on the prayer of faith to heal the sick. That there is power in the prayer of faith I have no doubt, only lost in the apostasy of the church. Knowing that the Lord does hear prayer, and believing that he will hear, I request the prayers of all God's praying people, that I may be restored to health and fitted to do his will while my pilgrimage lasts. Yours in hope of immortality when Jesus comes.

Grafton, Vt. STEPHEN SHERWIN.

From Bro. Geo. A. Streeter.

DEAR CRISIS:—I have just returned from a short visit to some of your friends. They spoke of your prosperity and welfare, and hoped you would prosper in the future, not merely in temporal things, but especially in the spiritual. Some of them have given me money to send to you to encourage you in your weekly visits to them. They are aware of the fact that you cannot visit them without money, so they help you on your journey. (By the way, they hope you will not forget to bring along with you a good many of those sweet letters that are so calculated to comfort and cheer the lone ones. They inform me that they are not so partial to long, dry letters, or articles, which are not so interesting, but the short, spicy ones, right from the heart, guided by the Spirit of the meek and lowly Jesus.

Praying that God would bless you, your true friend and well wisher,

No. Dana, Mass. GEO. A. STREETER.

From Bro. Geo. L. Winter.

BRO. GRANT:—I have become much attached to your paper and intend to take it as long as I take any paper. I like it for its plain truths, its practical teachings, its common sense view of the Bible. It is not popular to take your paper, read it, or believe its teachings, and more yet, it never will be; and the man that has the moral courage to take it may expect to have all the scorn the hireling can give him. I prefer the truth, and the frowns of all such, rather than their fables with their smiles.

Your brother in Christ, G. L. WINTER.

Obituaries.

WM. COCKS.

Died in Nunda, Liv. Co., N. Y., July 5th, 1864, Bro. Wm. G. Cocks, in the forty-fourth year of his age.

For two years and a half Bro. C. was an extreme sufferer. It seems almost impossible for mortality to endure the agony of extreme pain so long as he did. As I stood by his bedside at times, and saw his extreme and continued agony, and heard him pray for death to come, I often thought how glad I was to know that the doctrine of eternal misery was not true. I never saw or heard of a man's suffering so much as Bro. Cocks did. I have seen persons waste away with cancer, but this was far worse. But he will never suffer any more, and soon he will receive the crown of life. He died in full faith that Jesus would soon come and awake him from the dead. He was an exemplary christian, and a standard bearer of the faith in the community in which he lived. The church miss him now, but soon they'll meet him—

"Where congregations ne'er break up."

At his funeral the mourners were comforted by a discourse from the words of Jesus—"Thy brother shall rise again." F. BURR.

MARY CALDWELL.

Died July 8th, 1864, at the residence of her mother, at Quidnic, Coventry, R. I., Mary Jane, wife of John Caldwell, in the thirty-first year of her age.

She left a husband and a large circle of relatives and acquaintances to mourn. The funeral was in the Baptist church at Quidnic. The house was crowded, and many could not get in. The writer improved the occasion from the text in Eccl 9: 12. May the affliction be sanctified to the husband and all the friends and neighbors. J. K. BELLOWS.

MALISSA ALDRICH.

Died in East Killingly, Ct., June 26th, of consumption, Malissa, only daughter of Jonathan and Abigail Aldrich, aged nineteen years.

It was the privilege of the writer to comfort the friends of Malissa, at her funeral, with the assurance of meeting her in the resurrection, if faithful. She died in hope. Peacefully and composedly did she express her wishes as to her burial. The robe prepared for her wedding dress was used for her winding sheet in death. Such are earthly hopes.

WM. A. FENN.

W. CHISM.

Died at Branch Mills, China, Me., Bro. John W. Chism, son of Bro. Elbridge Chism, after a lingering sickness, which he bore with patience.

He quietly fell asleep in Jesus. Funeral sermon by the writer. Text, 1 Cor. 15: 21. May the Lord bless the mourners. JOHN R. HALL.

FREDDIE WILLOUGHBY.

Died in Lowell, Mass., July 12th, 1864, Freddie, son of Bro. Hastings C. and Vesta A. Willoughby, aged three months and nine days.

O, when shall death cease to blight? When Jesus comes. J. COUCH.

MARY M. GUNNER.

Died in Newark, N. J., June 17th, after an illness of three weeks, which terminated in hemorrhage of the bowels, Mary Matilda, second child of George and Mary Gunner, grand-child of Eld. W. Ingmire, aged nine years and nineteen days.

DOMESTIC.

Baltimore, July 11, 11 P. M. The excitement in Baltimore has increased by the rebel operations around the city to-day. The destruction of Gov. Bradford's house was complete. They plundered the house of all valuables, and would not allow Mrs. Bradford to save her own clothing. They carried off all the valuable papers and deeds of the Governor. They read to Mrs. Bradford an order from Gen. Bradley Johnson to destroy the house in retaliation for the destruction of Governor Letcher's house by Gen. Hunter.

We have accounts of the stealing of horses and the plundering of stores all through Baltimore county.

The turnpike bridge over the Gunpowder river has been destroyed.

Fears are entertained that the mills, factories and foundries around the city will be destroyed.

As far as known, the whole cavalry force in Baltimore county who have done this mischief does not exceed eight hundred, under the notorious Harry Gilmore. The banks and insurance companies have all deposited their valuables on board a steamer, ready to leave at a moment's notice. Arrangements have also been made to remove the archives of the State from Annapolis.

It is reported that Elliott's Mills are in possession of the rebels.

Harrisburg, Pa., July 11. Headquarters here are no longer in communication with Washington.

It is understood that at least eight bridges have been destroyed on the Northern Central Railroad, between Moncton and Cockeysville.

Perryville, Md., July 12. When I left Baltimore there was a fight going on 6 miles from Washington, between a considerable force of rebel cavalry and infantry and a force sent out from Washington. The fight was on the 6th Avenue road, near Blair's residence. The result is not known. Fears were entertained that the rebel cavalry would cut the telegraph between Baltimore and Washington.

Washington, July 11. Information received tonight is to the effect that a very large force of rebels is within six miles of this city, not far from Tenallytown. There has been no general engagement, but continuous skirmishing all day. Among the casualties reported are: Frederick S. Robinson, Co. C, 1st Conn. cavalry, left arm; and Peter Berty, 1st Conn. cavalry, neck.

There seems to be no doubt the rebels are threatening Washington, but the preparations for defense are of such a character as to give assurance of safety.

A large number of families at their summer residences, together with citizens in the counties adjoining Washington, have come into the city for safety.

All the telegraph lines have again been destroyed between Baltimore and Philadelphia.

New York, July 13. Communication with Washington by telegraph has been re-established. The lines are now occupied by government business.

Baltimore Md., July 13. There has been a general suspension of business this afternoon. The people turned out largely for duty. Confidence is again restored.

Rebel sympathizers predict that the rebel force which crossed the Washington Railroad yesterday are going to Point Lookout to release 20,000 rebel prisoners confined there. The distance from Bettsville, where they crossed the railroad to Point Lookout is eighty miles.

There are no fears for the safety of the capitol.

General Grant has not reduced his force, and the surrender of Petersburg is hourly expected.

Washington, July 13. Skirmishing had been constantly going on, and our troops had acted strictly on the defensive until yesterday evening, when the rebel sharpshooters becoming annoying, we determined to dislodge them from in front of Fort Stevens. This was effectually done. The rebels retired in hot haste, leaving at the house of F. P. Blair, at Silver Springs, 100 wounded, including 11 officers, and their dead on the field.

Scouts report the rebels were this A. M. recrossing the Potomac nearly opposite Poolesville, driving before them about 2000 head of cattle.

Washington, July 14th. Up to ten o'clock this morning it had been ascertained here that the rebel army had recrossed the Potomac, though they had sent over the most of their plunder. All the troops that could be spared have gone in pursuit of the rebels.

Washington, July 14th. Reports from the Army of the Potomac say the rebel troops are maneuvered in such a manner as to augur an attack on our rear. From last accounts Gen. Hill's corps was moving around our left, with the intention, say military men, of getting in our rear. Picket's division is in front of Butler's forces and a portion of Longstreet's division in front of the 9th corps.

The Weldon railroad, which was cut by Gen. Wilson's late raid, has been repaired by the rebels, and is used by them. Thirteen trains ran to and from Petersburg on Sunday.

New York, July 15th. Information has been received that the rebels are in Maryland in large force to-day.

Washington, July 15th. It is now feared that the rebels have succeeded in crossing the various fords of the Potomac, despite all our efforts to prevent them.

State House, Augusta, Me., July 15th. The Governor has received advices to the effect that the American Consul at St. John has information that a small raiding party left that city last Wednesday night, to commit depredations on the frontier of Maine. The State authorities have already adopted vigilant measures for repelling any attack should the raiders threaten any of our sea-board cities, which is not improbable. They will find them protected by batteries, well mounted with ordnance and supplied with an abundance of ammunition.

Portland, July 15th. From information received by passengers from St. John, N. B., we learn that there are a large number of Southern rebels in the provinces, among other a rebel Major, who hold secret meetings nightly, one of the principal objects of which is to send an expedition against the coast of Maine, to burn Portland, etc. Active preparations are being quietly made to receive such a raid in a becoming manner.

LATER. A dispatch to Gov. Cony conveys the intelligence from the American Consul at St. John, N. B., that a raiding party has left that city for the purpose of making depredations on this coast.

Washington, July 15th. Gov. Cony, of Maine, telegraphs to the President to send two gunboats immediately to Castine and Eastport as there is a raid anticipated from New Brunswick on the frontier. The President, it is understood, promptly complied with the Governor's request, and telegraphed to New York to have the vessels dispatched immediately.

Philadelphia, July 15th. The Nashville Union states that Sherman's army have driven the rebels and has arrived in front of the fortifications of Atlanta, Ga.

Lackawaxen, Pa., July 15th. A train with about 850 rebel prisoners on their way to camp at Elmira, collided with a coal train between here and Hohak this afternoon, killing and wounding, it is reported, over 100.

New York, July 16. The Herald's Washington dispatch says no fort in front of Washington was captured by the rebels.

It is reported to-day that trains were heard on the Orange and Alexandria Railroad, and it is supposed that reinforcements were coming to the rebels or to carry off the plunder. The prevailing opinion is that they are hurrying away. The last of their rear guard passed Rockville at noon Wednesday.

The World's dispatch says: Advices from the Upper Potomac confirm the retreat of the rebels into Virginia. Our artillery shelled the rebel rear last evening and some stragglers were taken, but it was impossible to intercept the main body. They had, when at Wilson's farm, 576 prisoners taken at Monocacy.

The Tribune's dispatch says: It is is estimated that the rebels secured 10,000 head of cattle and horses, besides droves of sheep and hogs, which they got across the Potomac while threatening Washington.

Brief as was the combat before Washington, it was bloody. The rebel killed and wounded must have reached fifteen hundred.

Washington, July 16. Additional alarm was occasioned on the Virginia side of the Potomac yesterday by reports that the rebels are running the railroad up to Manassas. This is not yet established as a fact, but many persons observant of military affairs, think it not improbable and that the design of the rebels is to command the gaps and keep open communication between Gordonsville and the valley.

Louisville, Ky., July 17. A rebel force, variously estimated at from 5000 to 15,000, entered Kentucky via Pound Gap two days since and are now at Martindale, Floyd County. The military authorities are preparing for them. Quite a number of refugees from the Eastern section are en route for Lexington and Northerly parts of Kentucky. Defensive arrangements in this city are actively progressing.

New York, July 18. The Times' Washington dispatch says the last information from Gen. Grant's army represents heavy skirmishing going on in front of the 9th corps.

An early assault was expected along our whole line.

Washington, July 18. The government has ascertained satisfactorily that Seymour of New York and other Governors, are not disposed to furnish troops when the exigencies of the public service demand them, and a large draft of perhaps half a million must be resorted to in order to crush out the rebellion.

A large number of military men left last night for the army of the Potomac, anticipating stirring times before Petersburg.

San Francisco, July 14th. A correspondent writing from Guaymas, Mexico, June 29th, says official information had been received there of a conspiracy to sieze one or more steamers on the coast as privateers, and that a party had been sent from Becenais for that purpose. The persons indicated are said to be at Guaymas, where steps will be taken to check them.

Mazatlan has not been taken by the French. A frigate arrived off the harbor and seized a schooner. The defences of the city have been completed, but there are no guns to man them.

Gen. McDowell, Gov. Low and a large number of military and civil officers yesterday inspected the fortifications of the harbor. More land defences are to be erected.

The work of putting together the monitor Camanche has commenced and will be rapidly prosecuted.

THE LEAVEN WORKING.—The petition which has for many months been circulating among the Roman Catholic priests of Italy, asking the Pope, as spiritual head of the Church on earth, to resign his temporal power, has been sent to Pius IX., signed by 8,943 Italian priests, or about a fourth of the whole number, 2,000 of whom are of the higher clergy and dignitaries. Though the object of the petition was not opposition to the Papacy, to which many of the signers are still bigotedly attached, but rather a patriotic desire for the union of the different states of Italy under one king, the Pope regards it as a serious and wicked insult, and has directed the bishops of the different dioceses to suspend all the signers from their priestly functions. Many of the bishops hesitate to execute this order of the Pope in the present state of the popular mind.

ANTICIPATED ADVANCE OF WEEKLY PAPERS.—It is, we understand, the intention of the weekly press of this city, at an early date, to take some concerted steps to place themselves on a safe footing as regards their prices. For some time the expenses of publishing have exceeded the receipts, but many have held out in the hope that the advance was only temporary. However, as paper has very rapidly advanced, of late, and labor and materials are constantly increasing in price, it has been felt that advance in rates was imperative. We hope that the increase in price, which may be decided on, may be only temporary—but time alone can show what will be the condition of business affairs at any future date.—New England Farmer.

COMMUTATION AND THE DRAFT.—Those who write to inquire, says the Tribune, whether the payment of $300 commutation exempts for three full years from all drafts, are informed that such payment, if made at any time prior to February last, does so exempt. In February the law was changed so that the payment of $300 thenceforth exempted only for the impending draft; while since the passage of the act of this month there is no commutation whatever. All who are henceforth drafted, and are found liable, must serve in person or by substitute.

A PROCLAMATION.

Whereas the Senate and House of Representatives, at their last session, adopted a concurrent resolution, which was approved on the second day of July instant, and which was in the words following, namely

"That the President of the United States be requested to appoint a day for humiliation and prayer by the people of the United States, that he request his constitutional advisers at the head of the Executive Departments to unite with him as Chief Magistrate of the nation, at the city of Washington, and the members of Congress, and all magistrates, all civil, military and naval officers, all soldiers, sailors and marines, with all loyal and law-abiding people, to convene at their usual places of worship, or wherever they may be, to confess and repent of their manifold sins; to implore the compassion and forgiveness of the Almighty, that, if, consistent with his will, the existing rebellion may be speedily suppressed, and the supremacy of the Constitution and laws of the United States may be established throughout all the States; to implore Him, as the Supreme Ruler of the world, not to destroy us as a people, nor suffer us to be destroyed by the hostility or connivance of other nations, or by obstinate adhesion to our own counsels, which may be in conflict with His eternal purposes, and to implore Him to enlighten the mind of the nation to know and do His will, humbly believing that it is in accordance with His will that our place should be maintained as a united people among the family of nations; to implore Him to grant to our armed defenders and the masses of the people that courage, power of resistance, and endurance necessary to secure that result; to implore Him in his infinite goodness to soften the hearts, enlighten the minds, and quicken the consciences of those in rebellion that they may lay down their arms and speedily return to their allegiance to the United States, that they may not be utterly destroyed, that the effusion of blood may be stayed, and that unity and fraternity may be restored, and peace established throughout all our borders."

Now, therefore, I, Abraham Lincoln, President of the United States, cordially concurring with the Congress of the United States in the penitential and pious sentiments expressed in the aforesaid resolution, and heartily approving of the devotional design and purpose thereof, do hereby appoint the first Thursday of August next to be observed by the people of the United States as a day of national humiliation and prayer.

I do hereby further invite and request the heads of the executive departments of this government, together with all legislators, all judges and magistrates, and all other persons exercising authority in the land, whether civil, military or naval, and all soldiers, seamen and marines in the national service, and all the other loyal and law-abiding people of the United States, to assemble in their preferred places of public worship on that day, and there to render to the Almighty and Merciful Ruler of the universe such homage and such confessions, and to offer Him such supplications as the Congress of the United States have, in their aforesaid resolution, so solemnly, so earnestly and so reverently recommended.

In testimony whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done at the city of Washington this seventh day of July, in the year of our Lord one thousand [L. S.] eight hundred and sixty-four, and of the Independence of the United States the eighty-ninth. ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

By the President:

WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Sec'y of State.

Meeting of the Advent Christian Association.

The fifth annual meeting of this Society will be held at Wilbraham Grove, commencing at 4 o'clock P. M., Tuesday, Aug 23d, 1864.

A full representation from all churches co-operating with this Society, and a full attendance of preachers thus co-operating is desirable at this meeting. Questions too important to admit of neglect or indifference on the part of the churches scattered abroad, or of the ministry, will come before this meeting. Does the Constitution require amendment? Shall there be any change in the editorial management of the Crisis? To whom as officers of the Society shall we intrust the funds and various interests of the same for the coming year? These, among many others that will arise, are questions to be decided at this meeting. Let no trifling pecuniary consideration, nor loss of time, prevent a general gathering of the friends of this Association. Each church (i. e., society of believers in Jesus Christ) co-operating, is entitled to one delegate, and one additional delegate for every fifty members above the number of twenty-five members.

Remember ☞ That all delegates sent by churches to the Advent Christian Association must be furnished with written credentials, or forfeit their right to membership. ☜

H. F. CARPENTER, Clerk.

Rutland, Vt., July 7th, 1864.

Meeting of the Board.

The Board of the Advent Christian Association will meet at Wilbraham Grove, Tuesday, Aug. 23d, 1864, at 9 o'clock, A. M. Punctual attendance requested. H. F. CARPENTER, Clerk.

Wisconsin Annual Conference.

The "Advent Christian Conference" will hold its yearly session in connection with the Wisconsin Campmeeting, at Okee, Columbia Co., Wis., twenty miles north west from Madison, by the way of Sodl, beginning September 11th, 1864.

Let every church send delegates, and every minister be in attendance if possible; otherwise be sure to report by letter. Churches and ministers who have not yet united, should be sure to do so this year, that we may move in order and harmony, and consequently with greater strength for good. Delegates should bring letters of appointment from churches, and ministers with whom we are not acquainted should bring letters of commendation. Letters may be sent to me at Baraboo, Sauk Co., Wis. W. SHELDON, Secretary of Conf.

THE CONSTITUTION

Of the Advent Christian Association as now revised and amended.

ART. I. This Society shall be known by the name of the Advent Christian Association.

ART. II. The objects of this Society shall be the promulgation of Bible truth and the promotion of vital piety by the formation of a Christian Publication Society for the issue of books, tracts and periodicals.

ART. III. The officers of this Society shall be a President, Vice-President, Secretary, Treasurer and nine Directors, who, together with the Editor or Editors, shall constitute a Board of Managers.

ART. IV. The members of this Society shall consist of all pastors and evangelists co-operating, and of delegates from churches also co-operating, and of all officers of this Association. Each church shall be allowed one delegate and one additional delegate for every fifty members above the number of twenty-five members.

ART. V. The duties of the officers shall be the same as are usually performed by such officers. And the Board of Managers shall by means of Committees whom they shall appoint provide for the discharge of the duties indicated in the second article of this Constitution. A majority of the Board at any meeting duly notified and two-thirds present at any time without notice, shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business. The Board shall also fill vacancies occurring until the next annual meeting of the Society. The Board shall make annual reports of all funds received and disbursed, of business transacted, and of the condition of the various interests of the Society. The Board shall be chosen by ballot at the annual meeting of the Society.

ART. VI. The annual meeting of the Society shall be held at such time and place as shall be declared by adjournment of the Society, or appointed by the Board. Special meetings may be called by the Society, by public notice given at least three weeks previously, at the request of ten members, either preachers or delegates from the separate churches.

ART. VII. This Constitution may be amended by a majority at any regular meeting, when two months' notice of the proposed amendment has been given, or without such notice, by two-thirds of the members present at any annual meeting.

ART. VIII. The Editor or Editors of the World's Crisis shall be chosen by ballot at the annual meeting of the Advent Christian Association, or at any special meeting called for that purpose, provided six weeks' notice be given of the same through the columns of the Crisis.

Proposed amendment for Art. IV. now on the table:—"And each church living at such a distance that they cannot conveniently be represented by a delegate from among themselves, may note by written communication to the Secretary, or may select as their proxy any person whom they may designate, whether he reside among them or not."

NOTE. A church is defined in the words of Wesley, "A Society of believers in Jesus Christ."

Ho for the Tent Meeting

At Feltonville, Genesee, Co., Mich., not in search of the glittering gold dust, "which while some coveted after they have erred from the faith, and pierced themselves through with many sorrows;" but in search of the hidden treasures, even the true riches, that moths cannot corrupt, nor thieves steal away. Yes, come, that thou mayest be fed with the words of life, which are able to make you wise unto salvation. Now, dear brethren and sisters, you will see by appointment that we are to have a tent meeting at Feltonville, Mich., probably over the last Sunday in July,—a rare chance to hear the word of God expounded by our beloved Bro. Himes. You well know he is a man of experience, being an old pioneer in the Advent cause, having been a co-worker with Father Miller.

Come, dear brethren and sisters, laden with the Spirit of Jesus; come to work for God, by your sympathies, prayers, exhortations, and with your means. God's servant's hands must be holden up; his expenses must be paid, and he must have some for his loved ones at home. Dear ones in whose hearts burn the love of God, this last work is yours. Will you make as much sacrifice, if necessary, to do your part, as our brother does to do his? We know by your warm exhortations that you only wait an opportunity. God bless you all. You have but a little time to work, and what you do for God must be done NOW; soon he will say, "Come, ye blessed of my Father, . . . for I was an hungered and ye gave me meat," etc., or, "depart, . . . ye cursed, . . . for I was an hungered and ye gave me no meat," etc. O my dear brother and sister, will you rally, shake off this worldly mindedness, this snare which Satan hath set for you, and come up? The Lord hath need of you—hath a work for you to do. We want to see every soul that loves our Lord in sincerity and truth at this meeting. Important business will come before the meeting, which demands your presence. The cause of God in all this northern country demands it. Shall we see you here? Yes, if it cost a sacrifice, be at your post. But if you cannot, do not forget to aid us by your prayers, and a cheering epistle, and if you have a free-will offering for God, send it along. Our Father will bless. Direct to J. V. Himes, Fentonville, Mich. This is a new field. A missionary work is to be done here, and if any can, and would love to aid us in the good work of caring for God's little ones, by fetching as they can of such as they have to spare, let them do so. The smallest item will be gratefully received, as from the Lord. We are willing and anxious to do all in our power for the comfort, happiness, and convenience of all. Come, then, in the name of the Lord, to cheer us by your songs and praise, and verily thou shalt be blessed. J. A. & M. J. SOBER.

P. S.—Fentonville is located on the D. and M. R. R., about fifty miles west of Detroit. Come direct to the tent. You shall be cared for in due time. J. A. & M. J. S.

Campmeeting.

There will be a campmeeting in Wolcott, Ct., commencing Aug. 5th, and continuing through the week and over the following Sabbath, on land owned by Bro. Hector Smith. This meeting will be in a beautiful grove near the highway, with an excellent spring of water on the ground, and with every other convenience desirable to make it an object for the brethren and sisters to come.

This is an entirely new field, and hopes are entertained that both preachers and brethren and sisters will come filled with faith that God will bless the effort to the saving of some. Bro. Smith and wife have stood almost alone in this place for twenty years witnesses to the truth of the Savior's speedy coming, and now ask the co-operation of the brethren while he makes this effort to benefit his fellow men.

We hope there will be a general rally of all the brethren and sisters from the surrounding towns. Come bringing your tents, and stay through the meeting. Brethren coming by Railroad east or west, will stop at Bristol. This is on the Hartford, Providence, and Fishkill R. R., where teams will be in readiness to carry passengers to the ground. Those coming on the Canal Road will stop at Southington, where they will find conveyance. Other arrangements noticed hereafter.

For the Brethren, RALPH WILLIAMS.

Conference.

The Maine Quarterly Conference of Free Sabbath Adventists will hold its next session at North Berwick, Me., commencing Thursday evening, Aug. 4th, and continuing over the Sabbath and first day. All lovers of truth are cheerfully invited to attend. Also, if it be His good pleasure, I will hold meetings, as brethren at Meredith Village and New Hampton may arrange, Sundays 14th and 21st.

S. C. HANCOCK.

Notice.

The Christian Easterly Maine Conference is appointed to be held at North Searsport, to commence Thursday, Aug. 18th, at 5 o'clock P. M., and continue over the Sabbath.

By order of managers, M. YOUNG, Clerk.

Campmeeting in Wisconsin.

Probably our Wisconsin campmeeting will be held at Okee, Columbia Co., Wis., beginning on Sunday, Sept. 11th. Tents to be erected on Saturday, the 10th. Despite the hard times, we look for a grand rally. Particulars in time.

Alton Campmeeting.

A campmeeting will be held at Alton, N. H., to commence Aug. 20th, and hold over the following Sunday. Also a meeting on the ground Sunday, the 28th. Particulars hereafter.

For the Committee, J. G. SMITH.

Campmeeting.

A campmeeting will be held in Etna, Me., on the same ground where it was in 1863, to commence the first week in September. Arrangements will be made accordingly. More hereafter.

They inform me that they are not so partial to long, dry letters, or articles, which are not so interesting, but the short, spicy ones, right from the heart, guided by the Spirit of the meek and lowly Jesus.

From Bro. Geo. L. Winter.

BRO. GRANT:—I have become much attached to your paper and intend to take it as long as I take any paper. I like it for its plain truths, its practical teachings, its common sense view of the Bible. It is not popular to take your paper, read it, or believe its teachings, and more yet, it never will be; and the man that has the moral courage to take it may expect to have all the scorn the hireling can give him. I prefer the truth, and the frowns of all such, rather than their fables with their smiles.

Your brother in Christ, G. L. WINTER.

Obituaries.

WM. COCKS.

Died in Nunda, Liv. Co., N. Y., July 5th, 1864, Bro. Wm. G. Cocks, in the forty-fourth year of his age.

For two years and a half Bro. C. was an extreme sufferer. It seems almost impossible for mortality to endure the agony of extreme pain so long as he did. As I stood by his bedside at times, and saw his extreme and continued agony, and heard him pray for death to come, I often thought how glad I was to know that the doctrine of eternal misery was not true. I never saw or heard of a man's suffering so much as Bro. Cocks did. I have seen persons waste away with cancer, but this was far worse. But he will never suffer any more, and soon he will receive the crown of life. He died in full faith that Jesus would soon come and awake him from the dead. He was an exemplary christian, and a standard bearer of the faith in the community in which he lived. The church miss him now, but soon they'll meet him—

"Where congregations ne'er break up."

At his funeral the mourners were comforted by a discourse from the words of Jesus—"Thy brother shall rise again." F. BURR.

MARY CALDWELL.

Died July 8th, 1664, at the residence of her mother, at Quidnic, Coventry, R. I., Mary Jane, wife of John Caldwell, in the thirty-first year of her age.

She left a husband and a large circle of relatives and acquaintances to mourn. The funeral was in the Baptist church at Quidnic. The house was crowded, and many could not get in. It was the privilege of the writer to comfort the friends of Malissa, at her funeral, with the assurance of meeting her in the resurrection, if faithful. She died in hope. Peacefully and composedly did she express her wishes as to her burial. The robe prepared for her wedding dress was used for her winding sheet in death. Such are earthly hopes. WM. A. FENN.

DOMESTIC.

Baltimore, July 11, 11 P. M. The excitement in Baltimore has increased by the rebel operations around the city to-day. The destruction of Gov. Bradford's house was complete. They plundered the house of all valuables, and would not allow Mrs. Bradford to save her own clothing. They carried off all the valuable papers and deeds of the Governor. They read to Mrs. Bradford an order from Gen. Bradley Johnson to destroy the house in retaliation for the destruction of Governor Letcher's house by Gen. Hunter.

We have accounts of the stealing of horses and the plundering of stores all through Baltimore county.

The turnpike bridge over the Gunpowder river has been destroyed.

Fears are entertained that the mills, factories and foundries around the city will be destroyed.

As far as known, the whole cavalry force in Baltimore county who have done this mischief does not exceed eight hundred, under the notorious Harry Gilmore. The banks and insurance companies have all deposited their valuables on board a steamer, ready to leave at a moment's notice. Arrangements have also been made to remove the archives of the State from Annapolis.

It is reported that Elliott's Mills are in possession of the rebels.

Harrisburg, Pa., July 11. Headquarters here are no longer in communication with Washington.

It is understood that at least eight bridges have been destroyed on the Northern Central Railroad, between Moncton and Cockeysville.

Perryville, Md., July 12. When I left Baltimore there was a fight going on 6 miles from Washington, between a considerable force of rebel cavalry and infantry and a force sent out from Washington. The fight was on the 8th Avenue road, near Blair's residence. The result is not known. Fears were entertained that the rebel cavalry would cut the telegraph between Baltimore and Washington.

Washington, July 11. Information received tonight is to the effect that a very large force of rebels is within six miles of this city, not far from Tenallytown. There has been no general engagement, but continuous skirmishing all day. Among the casualities reported are: Frederick S. Robinson, Co. C, 1st Conn. cavalry, left arm; and Peter Berty, 1st Conn. cavalry, neck.

There seems to be no doubt the rebels are threatening Washington, but the preparations for defense are of such a character as to give assurance of safety.

A large number of families at their summer residences, together with citizens in the counties adjoining Washington, have come into the city for safety.

All the telegraph lines have again been destroyed between Baltimore and Philadelphia.

New York, July 13. Communication with Washington by telegraph has been re-established. The lines are now occupied by government business.

Baltimore Md., July 13. There has been a general suspension of business this afternoon. The people turned out largely for duty. Confidence is again restored.

Rebel sympathizers predict that the rebel force which crossed the Washington Railroad yesterday are going to Point Lookout to release 20,000 rebel prisoners confined there. The distance from Bettsville, where they crossed the railroad to Point Lookout is eighty miles.

There are no fears for the safety of the capitol.

General Grant has not reduced his force, and the surrender of Petersburg is hourly expected.

Washington, July 13. Skirmishing had been constantly going on, and our troops had acted strictly on the defensive until yesterday evening, when the rebel sharpshooters becoming annoying, we determined to dislodge them from in front of Fort Stevens. This was effectually done. The rebels retired in hot haste, leaving at the house of F. P. Blair, at Silver Springs, 100 wounded, including 11 officers, and their dead on the field.

Scouts report the rebels were this A. M. recrossing the Potomac nearly opposite Poolesville, driving before them about 2000 head of cattle.

Washington, July 14th. Up to ten o'clock this morning it had been ascertained here that the rebel army had recrossed the Potomac, though they had sent over the most of their plunder. All the troops that could be spared have gone in pursuit of the rebels.

Washington, July 14th. Reports from the Army of the Potomac say the rebel troops are maneuvered in such a manner as to augur an attack on our rear. From last accounts Gen. Hill's corps was moving around our left, with the intention, say military men, of getting in our rear. Picket's division is in front of Butler's forces and a portion of Longstreet's division in front of the 9th corps.

The Weldon railroad, which was cut by Gen. Wilson's late raid, has been repaired by the rebels, and is used by them. Thirteen trains ran to and from Petersburg on Sunday.

New York, July 15th. Information has been received that the rebels are in Maryland in large force to-day.

Washington, July 15th. It is now feared that the rebels have succeeded in crossing the various fords of the Potomac, despite all our efforts to prevent them.

State House, Augusta, Me., July 15th. The Governor has received advices to the effect that the American Consul at St. John has information that a small raiding party left that city last Wednesday night, to commit depredations on the frontier of Maine. The State authorities have already adopted vigilant measures for repelling any attack should the raiders threaten any of our sea-board cities, which is not improbable. They will find them protected by batteries well mounted with ordnance and supplied with an abundance of ammunition.

Portland, July 15th. From information received by passengers from St. John, N. B., we learn that there are a large number of Southern rebels in the provinces, among other a rebel Major, who hold secret meetings nightly, one of the principal objects of which is to send an expedition against the coast of Maine, to burn Portland, etc. Active preparations are being quietly made to receive such a raid in a becoming manner.

LATER. A dispatch to Gov. Cony conveys the intelligence from the American Consul at St. John, N. B., that a raiding party has left that city for the purpose of making depredations on this coast.

Washington, July 15th. Gov. Cony, of Maine, telegraphs to the President to send two gunboats immediately to Castine and Eastport as there is a raid anticipated from New Brunswick on the frontier. The President, it is understood, promptly complied with the Governor's request, and telegraphed to New York to have the vessels dispatched immediately.

Philadelphia, July 15th. The Nashville Union states that Sherman's army have driven the rebels and has arrived in front of the fortifications of Atlanta, Ga.

Lackawaxen, Pa., July 15th. A train with about 850 rebel prisoners on their way to camp at Elmira, collided with a coal train between here and Hohak this afternoon, killing and wounding, it is reported, over 100.

It is reported to-day that trains were heard on the Orange and Alexandria Railroad, and it is supposed that reinforcements were coming to the rebels or to carry off the plunder. The prevailing opinion is that they are hurrying away. The last of their rear guard passed Rockville at noon Wednesday.

The World's dispatch says: Advices from the Upper Potomac confirm the retreat of the rebels into Virginia. Our artillery shelled the rebel rear last evening and some stragglers were taken, but it was impossible to intercept the main body. They had, when at Wilson's farm, 576 prisoners taken at Monocacy.

The Tribune's dispatch says: It is is estimated that the rebels secured 10,000 head of cattle and horses, besides droves of sheep and hogs, which they got across the Potomac while threatening Washington.

Brief as was the combat before Washington, it was bloody. The rebel killed and wounded must have reached fifteen hundred.

Washington, July 16. Additional alarm was occasioned on the Virginia side of the Potomac yesterday by reports that the rebels are running the railroad up to Manassas. This is not yet established as a fact, but many persons observant of military affairs, think it not improbable and that the design of the rebels is to command the gaps and keep open communication between Gordonsville and the valley.

Louisville, Ky., July 17. A rebel force, variously estimated at from 5000 to 15,000, entered Kentucky via Pound Gap two days since and are now at Martindale, Floyd County. The military authorities are preparing for them. Quite a number of refugees from the Eastern section are en route for Lexington and Northerly parts of Kentucky. Defensive arrangements in this city are actively progressing.

New York, July 18. The Times' Washington dispatch says the last information from Gen. Grant's army represents heavy skirmishing going on in front of the 9th corps. [illegible] a million must be resorted to in order to crush out the rebellion.

San Francisco, July 14th. A correspondent writing from Guaymas, Mexico, June 29th, says official information had been received there of a conspiracy to sieze one or more steamers on the coast as privateers, and that a party had been sent from Secessia for that purpose. The persons indicated are said to be at Guaymas, where steps will be taken to check them.

Mazatlan has not been taken by the French. A frigate arrived off the harbor and seized a schooner. The defences of the city have been completed, but there are no guns to man them.

Gen. McDowell, Gov. Low and a large number of military and civil officers yesterday inspected the fortifications of the harbor. More land defences are to be erected.

The work of putting together the monitor Camanche has commenced and will be rapidly prosecuted.

THE LEAVEN WORKING.—The petition which has for many months been circulating among the Roman Catholic priests of Italy, asking the Pope as spiritual head of the Church on earth, to resign his temporal power, has been sent to Pius IX., signed by 8,943 Italian priests, or about a fourth of the whole number, 2,000 of whom are of the higher clergy and dignitaries. Though the object of the petition was not opposition to the Papacy, to which many of the signers are still bigotedly attached, but rather a patriotic desire for the union of the different states of Italy under one king, the Pope regards it as a serious and wicked insult, and has directed the bishops of the different dioceses to suspend all the signers from their priestly functions. Many of the bishops hesitate to execute this order of the Pope in the present state of the popular mind.

ANTICIPATED ADVANCE OF WEEKLY PAPERS.—It is, we understand, the intention of the weekly press of this city, at an early date, to take some concerted steps to place themselves on a safe footing as regards their price. For some time the expenses of publishing have exceeded the receipts, but many have held out in the hope that the advance was only temporary. However, as paper has very rapidly advanced, of late, and labor and materials are constantly increasing in price, it has been felt that advance in rates was imperative. We hope that the increase in price, which may be decided on, may be only temporary—but time alone can show what will be the condition of business affairs at any future date.—New England Farmer.

COMMUTATION AND THE DRAFT.—Those who write to inquire, says the Tribune, whether the payment of $300 commutation exempts for three full years from all drafts, are informed that such payment, if made at any time prior to February last, does so exempt. In February the law was changed so that the payment of $300 thenceforth exempted only for the impending draft; while since the passage of the act of this month there is no commutation whatever. All who are henceforth drafted, and are found liable, must serve in person or by substitute

A PROCLAMATION.

Whereas the Senate and House of Representatives, at their last session, adopted a concurrent resolution, which was approved on the second day of July instant, and which was in the words following, namely:

"That the President of the United States be requested to appoint a day for humiliation and prayer by the people of the United States; that he request his constitutional advisers at the head of the Executive Departments to unite with him as Chief Magistrate of the nation, at the city of Washington, and the members of Congress, and all magistrates, all civil, military and naval officers, all soldiers, sailors and marines, with all loyal and law-abiding people, to convene at their usual places of worship, or wherever they may be, to confess and repent of their manifold sins; to implore the compassion and forgiveness of the Almighty, that, if, consistent with his will, the existing rebellion may be speedily suppressed, and the supremacy of the Constitution and laws of the United States may be established throughout all the States; to implore Him, as the Supreme Ruler of the world, not to destroy us as a people, nor suffer us to be destroyed by the hostility or connivance of other nations, or by obstinate adhesion to our own counsels, which may be in conflict with His eternal purposes, and to implore Him to enlighten the mind of the nation to know and do His will, humbly believing that it is in accordance with His will that our place should be maintained as a united people among the family of nations; to implore Him to grant to our armed defenders and the masses of the people that courage, power of resistance, and endurance necessary to secure that result; to implore Him in his infinite goodness to soften the hearts, enlighten the minds, and quicken the consciences of those in rebellion that they may lay down their arms and speedily return to their allegiance to the United States, that they may not be utterly destroyed, that the effusion of blood may be stayed, and that unity and fraternity may be restored, and peace established throughout all our borders."

Now, therefore, I, Abraham Lincoln, President of the United States, cordially concurring with the Congress of the United States in the penitential and pious sentiments expressed in the aforesaid resolution, and heartily approving of the devotional design and purpose thereof, do hereby appoint the first Thursday of August next to be observed by the people of the United States as a day of national humiliation and prayer.

I do hereby further invite and request the heads of the executive departments of this government, together with all legislators, all judges and magistrates, and all other persons exercising authority in the land, whether civil, military or naval, and all soldiers, seamen and marines in the national service, and all the other loyal and law-abiding people of the United States, to assemble in their preferred places of public worship on that day, and there to render to the Almighty and Merciful Ruler of the universe such homage and such confessions, and to offer Him such supplications as the Congress of the United States have, in their aforesaid resolution, so solemnly, so earnestly and so reverently recommended.

In testimony whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done at the city of Washington this seventh day July, in the year of our Lord one thousand [L. S.] eight hundred and sixty-four, and of the Independence of the United States the eighty-ninth. ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

By the President:
WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secy. of State.

Meeting of the Advent Christian Association.

The fifth annual meeting of this Society will be held at Wilbraham Grove, commencing at 4 o'clock P. M., Tuesday, Aug. 23d, 1864.

A full representation from all churches co-operating with this Society, and a full attendance of preachers thus co-operating is desirable at this meeting. Questions too important to admit of neglect or indifference on the part of the churches scattered abroad, or of the ministry, will come before this meeting. Does the Constitution require amendment? Shall there be any change in the editorial management of the Crisis? To whom as officers of the Society shall we intrust the funds and various interests of the same for the coming year? These, among many others that will arise, are questions to be decided at this meeting. Let no trifling pecuniary consideration, nor loss of time, prevent a general gathering of the friends of this Association. Each church (i. e., society of believers in Jesus Christ) co-operating, is entitled to one delegate, and one additional delegate for every fifty members above the number of twenty-five members.

Remember ☞ That all delegates sent by churches to the Advent Christian Association must be furnished with written credentials, or forfeit their right to membership. ☜

H. F. CARPENTER, Clerk.

Rutland, Vt., July 7th, 1864.

THE CONSTITUTION Of the Advent Christian Association as now revised and amended.

ART. I. This Society shall be known by the name of the Advent Christian Association.

ART. II. The objects of this Society shall be the promulgation of Bible truth and the promotion of vital piety by the formation of a Christian Publication Society for the issue of books, tracts and periodicals.

And the Board of Managers shall by means of Committees whom they shall appoint provide for the discharge of the duties indicated in the second article of this Constitution. A majority of the Board at any meeting duly notified and two-thirds present at any time without notice, shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business. The Board shall also fill vacancies occurring until the next annual meeting of the Society. The Board shall make annual reports of all funds received and disbursed, of business transacted, and of the condition of the various interests of the Society. The Board shall be chosen by ballot at the annual meeting of the Society.

ART. VI. The annual meeting of the Society shall be held at such time and place as shall be declared by adjournment of the Society, or appointed by the Board. ART. VIII. The Editor or Editors of the World's Crisis shall be chosen by ballot at the annual meeting of the Advent Christian Association, or at any special meeting called for that purpose, provided six weeks' notice be given of the same through the columns of the Crisis.

Proposed amendment for Art. IV. now on the table:—"And each church living at such a distance that they cannot conveniently be represented by a delegate from among themselves, may note by written communication to the Secretary, or may select as their proxy any person whom they may designate, whether he reside among them or not."

NOTE. A church is defined in the words of Wesley, "A Society of believers in Jesus Christ."

Ho for the Tent Meeting

At Feltonville, Genesee, Co., Mich., not in search of the glittering gold dust, "which while some coveted after they have erred from the faith, and pierced themselves through with many sorrows;" but in search of the hidden treasures, even the true riches, that moths cannot corrupt, nor thieves steal away. Yes, come, that thou mayest be fed with the words of life, which are able to make you wise unto salvation. Now, dear brethren and sisters, you will see by appointment that we are to have a tent meeting at Feltonville, Mich., probably over the last Sunday in July,—a rare chance to hear the word of God expounded by our beloved Bro. Himes. You well know he is a man of experience, being an old pioneer in the Advent cause, having been a co-worker with Father Miller.

Come, dear brethren and sisters, laden with the Spirit of Jesus; come to work for God, by your sympathies, prayers, exhortations, and with your means. God's servant's hands must be holden up; his expenses must be paid, and he must have some for his loved ones at home. Dear ones in whose hearts burn the love of God, this last work is yours. Will you make as much sacrifice, if necessary, to do your part, as our brother does to do his? We know by your warm exhortations, that you only wait an opportunity. God bless you all. You have but a little time to work; and what you do for God must be done NOW; soon be will say, "Come, ye blessed of my Father, . . . for I was an hungered and ye gave me meat," etc.; or, "depart, . . . ye cursed, . . . for I was an hungered and ye gave me no meat," etc. O my dear brother and sister, will you rally, shake off this worldly-mindedness, this snare which Satan hath set for you, and come up? The Lord hath need of you—hath a work for you to do. We want to see every soul that loves our Lord in sincerity and truth at this meeting. Important business will come before the meeting, which demands your presence. The cause of God in all this northern country demands it. Shall we see you here? Yes, if it cost a sacrifice, be at your post. But if you cannot, do not forget to aid us by your prayers, and a cheering epistle; and if you have a free-will offering for God, send it along. Our Father will bless. Direct to J. V. Himes, Fentonville, Mich. This is a new field. A missionary work is to be done here, and if any can, and would love to aid us in the good work of caring for God's little ones, by fetching as they can of such as they have to spare, let them do so. The smallest item will be gratefully received, as from the Lord. We are willing and anxious to do all in our power for the comfort, happiness, and convenience of all. Come, then, in the name of the Lord, to cheer us by your songs and praise, and verily thou shalt be blessed. J. A. & M. J SOBER.

P. S.—Fentonville is located on the D. and M. R. R., about fifty miles west of Detroit. Come direct to the tent. You shall be cared for in due time. J. A. & M. J. S.

Campmeeting.

There will be a campmeeting in Wolcott, Ct., commencing Aug. 5th, and continuing through the week and over the following Sabbath, on land owned by Bro. Hector Smith. This meeting will be in a beautiful grove near the highway, with an excellent spring of water on the ground, and with every other convenience desirable to make it an object for the brethren and sisters to come.

This is an entirely new field, and hopes are entertained that both preachers and brethren and sisters will come filled with faith that God will bless the effort to the saving of some. Bro. Smith and wife have stood almost alone in this place for twenty years witnesses to the truth of the Savior's speedy coming, and now ask the co-operation of the brethren while he makes this effort to benefit his fellow men.

We hope there will be a general rally of all the brethren and sisters from the surrounding towns. Come bringing your tents, and stay through the meeting. Brethren coming by Railroad east or west, will stop at Bristol. This is on the Hartford, Providence, and Fishkill R. R., where teams will be in readiness to carry passengers to the ground. Those coming on the Canal Road will stop at Southington, where they will find conveyance. Other arrangements noticed hereafter.

For the Brethren, RALPH WILLIAMS.

HANCOCK.

DISCIPLINE.

Tremble not, though darkly gather
Clouds and tempests o'er thy sky,
Still believe thy Heavenly Father
Loves thee best when storms are nigh.

When the sun of fortune shineth
Long and brightly on the heart,
Soon its fruitfulness declineth,
Parched and dry in every part.

Then the plants of grace have faded
In the dry and burning soil;
Thorns and briars their growth have shaded—
Earthly cares and earthly toil.

But the clouds are seen ascending;
Soon the heavens are overcast;
And the weary heart is bending
'Neath affliction's stormy blast.

Yet the Lord, on high presiding,
Rules the storm with powerful hand;
He the shower of grace is guiding
To the dry and barren land.

See, at length the clouds are breaking—
Tempests have not passed in vain;
For the soul, revived, awaking,
Bears its fruits and flowers again.

Love divine has seen and counted
Every tear it caused to fall,
And the storm, which love appointed,
Has its choicest gift of all.

For the World's Crisis.

REPORT OF A PREACHING TOUR.

Bro. Grant:—Having lately been down to Page Co., in the southwest corner of this State, spending five Sundays, I thought it might be interesting to some to report the results of the effort somewhat, it being a new field.

I went there by request of Bro. D. Q. Kent, who had heard Advent preaching in Lowell some years ago. He made no profession of Advent sentiments publicly, nor of religion at that time, but the truths he heard were as "bread cast on the waters"—they now begin to come again after many days." The circumstance reminds me that we may be doing good often when we think we are laboring in vain because we see no immediate fruit. An observance of the fulfillment of prophecy saved him from scepticism, and growing in a knowledge of the things of God, he commenced three years ago or so, I think, to take an interest in the cause of God, and labored to save others from darkness. He labored as a private member, yet with a commendable zeal, to spread light on the signs of the times, and the coming of Christ. He has not labored in vain, for an interest has been awakened in the minds of the candid, and some are laboring now by his side in love for the same cause. Bro. Asher Chase has taken the Advent Herald for a number of years till within a few years past. He now takes the Crisis, advocating its doctrines on all occasions.

When I got there some interest had been awakened in the prophecies by Bro. Kent's speaking on them one Sunday, by request of those with whom he met for worship. This gave rise to a discourse from a Protestant Methodist preacher in that vicinity, designed evidently, according to his own public avowal, to dispel all fears of the Lord's coming soon. His appointment, made for two weeks, was to be filled one week after I got there, where Bro. Kent had spoken on the prophecies, and where I preached mostly while there. I attended the meeting, taking notes. The following are some of his statements, with brief corrections to some of them.

"The whole vision (of the image) affects this head of gold as the essential thing." "Geographically this image is confined to the limits of Babylon." This is not correct, for the Medo-Persian empire had considerable territory beyond the limits of the Babylonian, the Grecian still more, and the Roman nearly half of hers, while the seat and chief strength of the last was in Europe, territory never occupied by the kingdom of Babylon. We call the four empires universal empires; and so they were in the sense of extending their sway as far as civilization extended. And as the limits of civilization varied in succeeding ages, so the limits of the successive empires would conform to these changes.

"The vision of the image goes no further than 479" (476). "The stone smote the image before this date." "The stone smote the image on the feet." "The stone signifies the gospel of Christ." "Christ represents the stone." "Christ smote the image and it was made as the chaff, and carried to the four corners of the earth." As a basis for this conclusion he had said that "the iron age of Rome, represented by the legs of iron, commenced with the expulsion of Tarquin, and ended with Augustus Cæsar." Then it must have commenced before they made any conquests, and ended before they became universal, or at least before they finished their conquests. For Britain, Dacia, and all the territory they ever held east of the Euphrates was added after the days of Augustus. In keeping with the above remark, he stated that "the Roman empire began to decline with the reign of Augustus Cæsar." But Gibbon makes her most prosperous period begin at the same point and continue more than two hundred years. In her history after this, he points out "the circumstances which resulted" in the decline and fall of the empire. The Romans, the iron element, were not disturbed by the barbarians, the clay element, till near three hundred years after Christ, and were not mixed with them till a short period before the breaking up of the empire (476). But when the stone smites the image the mixed state is developed, and complete, which could not be while the iron was unmixed with clay, nor even while it maintained the supremacy. Hence all the claims put forth, that the stone smote the image (or the kingdom was set up) in the days of Christ, are assumed in spite of facts, to serve a theory.

"The ten horns," he says, "are not kingdoms," adding, "If any man says they are, he denies the Bible." Interrupting him, I asked, "Does not Adam Clarke say they are ten kingdoms?" He answered, "Yes." I then inquired, "Does he deny the Bible?" He answered, "Yes." I thought that would do, for ranking our infidelity with Adam Clarke's we would not think us very bad. He asks, "Where does the Bible say that horns represent kingdoms?" I would answer, In the eighth chapter of the same book, where we are assured that "the rough goat is the king of Grecia; and the great horn that is between his eyes is the first king. Now that being broken, whereas four (horns) stood up for it, four kingdoms shall stand up out of the nation."—Dan. 8: 21, 22. He says, "There never was a time when there were just ten kingdoms." But here he is mistaken, for this time did come, just as required in the prophecy. Daniel says of the fourth beast as he first saw it in vision, "It had ten horns." He then adds, "I considered the horns, and behold there came up among them another little horn." Thus the ten horns exist when the eleventh one comes up. A disregard for this fact has led to some variations in the enumerations of different writers on the prophecy. Some place them too early, and some too late, while others still trace out the ten principal kingdoms erected by the barbarians on the ruins of the empire during the period of its dissolution, embracing somewhat more than a century and a half.

Complaining that in these different enumerations he found "twenty-two different kingdoms," the preacher adds ten more, starting off on a new hypothesis. He claims that it originated with him, and I think it strikingly betrays its parentage. Insisting that the ten horns are ten kings,—not kingdoms,—he applies them to the ten Cæsars, commencing with Augustus, and ending with Titus. The eleventh horn which prevailed against the saints till the Ancient of days came, was Domitian! The Ancient of days was the church! The time, times, and the dividing of time, was literally taken, making three years and a half.

Thus the emperor Domitian must have commenced his reign while the preceding ten were reigning, though he sat on the same throne; for the other little horn came up among them, not after them! And he must "pluck up three of these first horns by the roots" after he commences his reign! In three years and a half only he will think to change times and laws, and shall wear out the saints of the Most High! A wonderful man this, whom Gibbon calls "the timid Domitian." But it seems very much like a human theory, and very much unlike Divine wisdom, to pass by Nero's persecution in silence, which was of longer duration, more extensive, and of greater intensity, happening but a few years previous, and notice this, as though it were sufficient to overshadow all others!

He trod lightly upon several of these points. He did not notice the plucking up the three horns nor the Ancient of days in his discourse. After he dismissed, I inquired what he would do with the three horns? how he would make it appear that Domitian plucked them up? He said, "That is all clear enough in history." I asked him how it could be? He answered, "Go to history." But says I, What shall I look for? Can I find that Domitian, after he commenced his reign, subdued three of the preceding emperors, who were dead? He still replied, "It's all clear enough in history." Then Bro. Kent gave him a difficulty about the little horn prevailing against the saints till the Ancient of days came. He desired to know how Domitian fulfilled that? But he got no satisfaction.

In about ten days afterward, the preacher made an appointment "to clear up the difficulties" presented to him on the occasion of the other discourse. This appointment was made in the neighborhood of his own church, about four miles or more from where he preached his first discourse. He sent word to Bro. Kent to attend, but I thought I would like to hear, too. Here he made the statement that the Ancient of days was the church, but instead of clearing up the difficulties, he laid them open to another audience, confessing that the plucking up the three horns was a difficulty, but adding, "There is no position without its difficulties." He also trod lightly again over the little horn prevailing against the saints till the Ancient of days came.

In both discourses he tried to discourage attention to the prophecies. He said they "would never lead a man to Christ," and that he "never would preach on them again on Sunday." (I understand that he does not lack a relish for politics in his Sunday discourses.) I asked him as he was going on treating the prophecies in this manner, "Do you indeed feel it your duty to apologize for preaching on the prophecies?" He answered, "I do." Such a treatment of the prophecies dissatisfied his own church, several of whom expressed their dissent.

I replied to him in both places, inasmuch as his effort was designed to suppress the interest growing out of Bro. Kent's discourse on the prophecies, and in both cases the hearers generally were persuaded in favor of the truth.

I preached thirty-six discourses while there, at four different places; and more on the prophecies than on any other subject. The people had never heard on the prophecies, and they listened with a hearty relish. They would come out in all weathers, night after night. The interest seemed to increase to the end, and they were hardly willing that I should go away without a promise of an early return. I have arranged to go down there again in June. The interest there is truly encouraging, and I am resolved to preach more on the prophecies in the future than I have done in the past.

Since I came back from there I have been preaching every night, when the weather will allow, except one evening in the week. I have found the weather pretty bad in these two weeks, but having appointments out for every night, I fill up every proper evening. When I get through this week, it will make nearly every evening for two months, preaching three discourses on Sundays.

HIGHLY COMPLIMENTARY.

Bro. Grant:—As I have seen no notice of our late excellent conference holden at Exeter, Me., the last month, I would say a few things in relation to it. There were present as preachers Brn. N. F. Nason, J. Morrill, I. Damman, N. G. Reed, C. H. Leverton, J. Carr, and Bro. Hanscomb. We had, as we supposed, a very good meeting. Every thing appeared to move in harmony and love; yet, as we claim not to be infallible in our judgments, I will proceed to notice the very charitable opinion of one whose account of the meeting is given in the Herald of Life, of June 22d, dated Corinna, Me. He says:—

"I had an opportunity of attending, the past week, a meeting of one and a half days, held and carried forward by a class of people the description of whom you can find in 2 Pet. 2: 22. (To save your readers the trouble of turning to the passages referred to by the writer, I will quote them in full:—"But it is happened unto them according to the true proverb: The dog is turned to his own vomit again; and the sow that was washed to her wallowing in the mire." The writer further says:—"While listening to what they had to say, I thought I saw the fulfillment of verse 19th of the same chapter, and Rom. 16: 17, 18. Also 2 Tim. 3: 1–9." The first verse referred to reads thus: "While they promise them liberty, they themselves are the servants of corruption: for of whom a man is overcome, of the same is he brought in bondage." He refers to Rom. 16: 17, 18,—"Now I beseech you, brethren, mark them which cause divisions and offences contrary to the doctrine which ye have learned; and avoid them. For they that are such serve not our Lord Jesus Christ, but their own belly; and by good words and fair speeches deceive the hearts of the simple."

The last and crowning reference to the people who attended this conference is as follows: 2 Tim. 3: 1–9,—"This know, also, that in the last days perilous times shall come. For men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, without natural affection, truce-breakers, false accusers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of those that are good, traitors, heady, high-minded, lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God; having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof; from such turn away. For of this last are they which creep into houses, and lead captive silly women laden with sins, led away with divers lusts, ever learning, and never able to come to the knowledge of the truth. Now as Jannes and Jambres withstood Moses, so do these also resist the truth, men of corrupt minds, reprobate concerning the faith; for their folly shall be manifest unto all men, as theirs also was."

This favorable notice of the conference exhibits a very great degree of the charity which hopeth all things, and we can but hope that, should he think it proper to issue a second edition, to have still further evidence of the charity that NEVER faileth.

Leaving for your readers to judge of the spirit by which men are actuated in these last days, I subscribe myself as one of the number thus highly complimented,

Thomas Smith.

CHEERING THOUGHTS FOR SAINTS.

There's rest for all the weary
Upon the other shore,
Where sin and care and sorrow
Oppress the soul no more.

There's life for all the dying,
And hope for all the dead;
"I AM THE RESURRECTION,"
The blessed Savior said.

There's joy for every mourner,
And wealth for all the poor,
If they but love the Savior,
And to the end endure.

O, glory be to Jesus,
Who died upon the tree,
To purchase life eternal
For wretched ones like me!

MY JOURNEYINGS.

Salem, Mass., March 24th. Have labored with the church in this city for ten weeks. Many of our meetings were very interesting. One fact was established, that it is possible for brethren and sisters holding different views to live together in peace. We had believers in "eternal torment," "destruction of the wicked," "non-resurrection of the ungodly," "resurrection of both the just and unjust," etc., etc. In the ten weeks of my labor in Salem, not a discordant voice was heard in any meeting, but all seemed interested in the one great object of the "salvation of sinners." It is sad to see so many of our little churches separated on account of differences of opinion on points of doctrine. If all possessed a fair degree of grace, we could live and thrive together, and instead of having the conference meeting turned into a "sparring room," we should have a place where the brethren would "exhort one another, and so much the more as they saw the day approaching."

Westboro', April 5th. Have had a heavenly season with the church here for twelve days. The household of faith in Westboro' have taken a new start for "the kingdom." Some have found "peace in believing," and one was baptized. The Lord has been blessing them greatly for the past two or three months.

Ashland, April 6th. This evening, met with a company of the saints at Bro. Chickering's, where we had a "feast of good things." "The kingdom of God" has some supporters in this place, who are waiting patiently for the King to appear.

Boston, April 13th. Attended the general conference in Boston, which has just ended. Was greatly blessed in hearing the testimonies of the brethren and sisters, who had come to the feast from the "regions beyond."

Portsmouth, N. H., April 26th. Found the church in this place in working order. Always have a good season here. Passed two Sundays, laboring "in word and doctrine." May the Lord multiply blessings on this company.

Exeter, April 28th. Visited several families who are "waiting for the kingdom."

Elliot, Me., May 2nd. Four days here. The little band in this place are "strong, giving glory to God." The converts are alive and growing in grace. This is one of the "bright spots" on this dark earth. May the Lord keep this company from "wolves who devour" and scatter, and give to them men who have "Christ formed within them, the hope of glory," who will feed and build up the church.

Kennebunkport, May 9th. Six days with God's servants in K. Held meetings five evenings, with an increasing interest. Left reluctantly for other fields of labor.

Worcester, Mass., May 16th. One Sunday with the disciples at Worcester. Was cordially received, and felt that it was good to be there. The Sunday School is in a thriving condition. A very important auxiliary in the proclamation of "the gospel of Christ."

Boston, May 17th. This evening spoke at the Lowell Street Chapel from the text:—"Who is on the Lord's side?"

Peacedale, R. I., May 20th. Two days here. On each evening spoke at the chapel on things pertaining to "the kingdom of God."

Newark, N. J., May 22nd. To-day met with the "believers" at the "Good Samaritan Hall," and endeavored to preach "Christ and him crucified." The company of "believers" are divided into four bands, all small, in point of numbers. "Points of doctrine" is the scattering element. One portion meet at Broad Street Hall, another on Banks Street, the third at "Good Samaritan Hall," and the fourth in another part of the city.

Hammonton, May 24th. Passed the evening with Bro. Lederer, at Bro. Willard's. Had a refreshing visit, and left feeling stronger in the Lord.

Philadelphia, June 1st. A week in Philadelphia. On Sunday afternoon spoke to brethren in the hall at the corner of Ninth and Spring Garden Streets, and in the afternoon and evening at Horticultural Hall. Had perfect liberty in declaring "the gospel," and feel already much attached to the saints in Philadelphia.

Newark, N. J., July 1st. Have labored here for the past month with an increasing interest. Sunday School established. Twenty members. In all these cities and towns have visited many families, and hope that much good will result.

Yours, looking for Christ,

F. H. Burbank.

MY WESTERN TOUR.—NO. 2.

Bro. Grant:—Since the date of my last I have in my westward journey passed over the great lakes, the natural thoroughfare of the great northwest; the extent and beauty of which must be seen to be appreciated. I took passage at Ogdensburgh, on "The City of Boston," a propeller of "The Northern Transportation Line," bound for Chicago, on Monday, June 27th, and arrived at Milwaukee, Wis., Monday morning, July 4th, the day that celebrates "national glory" in these "United States."

My trip through the lakes was interesting to me, and I trust profitable to the cause of truth, affording me a good opportunity to converse with many upon the striking features of our times of war, and fearfulness of heart among many, and also upon the distinguishing features of our faith and hope, which I improved to some purpose, I trust, for whenever I commenced a discussion I had a crowd of listeners, some of whom were professors of religion and candid hearers of the word. The weather was, generally speaking, fine, and the trip a pleasant one to most of those on board, with the exception of some wind, which though not sufficient to endanger our lives, was enough to sicken many; but I escaped, as always before.

Our only apparent danger was during an entire night of dense fog and pitchy darkness on Lake Huron, upon the pathway of all kinds of sailing crafts, bearing their precious burdens of excellent wheat from the "granary of the world," in connection with a brisk wind, when, so thick was the gloom, that as we passed steamers well lighted their lights could not be seen for more than four minutes, causing life and freight to be in great peril. But by the vigilance of our boat's competent and gentlemanly master, Capt. McHenry, and his subordinate officers, who kept a close "lookout" for passing vessels, together with the care of a faithful God, we escaped the danger unharmed; yet it was a night of some gloom and terror, for amid the dashing of the waves and rocking of our vessel as she bore on her way without light on her pathway, the unearthly screeches of her harsh whistle were heard at regular intervals of five minutes in length the whole live-long night, so "lone and dreary."

We were all glad to see the morning dawn; and it caused me to feel more deeply the truth that life here at best is a waste, a howling wilderness of woe to most, and at times to all, and make the day of full security and rest to be desired. Yet I have learned that sailors, who are constantly exposed to great danger, are nevertheless horridly profane, and not only they, but landsmen are so, becoming more grossly wicked, "evil men and seducers waxing worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived," while the church of Christ (shall I say?) are allowing their lamps to go out, the love of the greatest number waxes cold; thus perils increase.

Last Sabbath was a beautiful day on Lake Michigan, and by request of most of the passengers, and the cheerful permission of our captain, who was a candid listener, with several of his crew, I preached the word in the cabin, most of the passengers being present. I hope good was done. I am now in Winona, Minn.; expect to leave here to-morrow for the place of my appointment, to greet valued friends there.

To my eastern brethren and sisters, and to all the household of faith, I would say, Be holy, be faithful, look for Jesus and be ready for his return. "Pray for me." Your Bro., "in hope of life."

RUM'S DOINGS.

"Hath he not murdered our mothers—
Brought their gray locks to the tomb?
Hath he not murdered our brothers,
Yet in their manhood's bloom?
Hath he not coiled on our hearth-stones,
Hissing with Upas breath?
On! on to the warfare, brothers!
Nor cease till he writhes in death!"

THE AWFUL DOOM!

Distillers, grog-sellers, saloon keepers, and hotel keepers, will you read your awful doom in the Rum-seller's Dream?

"Well, wife, this is too horrid: I cannot continue this business any longer."

"Why, dear, what is the matter now?"

"O such a dream, such a rattling of dead men's bones, and such an army of starved mortals, so many murders, such cries and shrieks, and yells, and such horrid gnashing of teeth, and glaring eyes, and such a blazing fire, and such devils—oh! I cannot endure it. My hair stands on end, and I am so filled with horror I can scarcely speak. Oh, if I ever sell rum again!"

"My dear, you are frightened."

"Yes, indeed, I am; another such a night will I not pass for worlds."

"My dear, perhaps—"

"Oh, don't talk to me. I am determined to have nothing more to do with rum, anyhow. Don't you think Tom Wilson came to me with his throat cut from ear to ear, and such a horrible gash, and it was so hard for him to speak, and so much blood; and says he, 'See here, Joe, the result of rum-selling.' My blood chilled at the sight, and just then the house seemed to turn bottom up, the earth opened, and a little imp took me by the hand, saying, 'Follow me.' As I went, grim devils held out to me cups of liquid fire, saying, 'Drink this.' I dared not refuse. Every draught set me in a rage. Serpents hissed on each side, and from above reached down their heads and whispered, 'Rum-seller.' On and on, the imp led me through the narrow pass. All at once he paused and said, 'Are you dry?' 'Yes,' I replied. Then he struck a trap-door with his foot, and down, down we went, and legions of fiery serpents followed us, whispering, 'Drunkard, drunkard.' At length we stopped again, and the imp asked as before, 'Are you dry?' 'Yes,' I replied.

He then touched a spring, a door flew open, there were thousands of old worn out rum-drinkers, crying most piteously, 'Rum, rum, give me some rum.' When they saw me they stopped a moment to see who I was. Then the imp cried out, so as to make all shake again, 'Rum-seller,' and hurling me in, shut the door. For a moment they fixed their ferocious eyes upon me, and then uttered a united yell, Damn him,—which filled me with terror. I awoke. There, wife, dream or no dream, I will never sell another drop of the infernal stuff."

"Woe to him that buildeth his house by unrighteousness, and his chambers by wrong."

"The judgment throne was set. On either hand
All living mortals stood before the Judge.
There stood the drunkard—there his murderer!
'Ha!' cried the drunkard, 'art thou here at last?
I have been looking long to see thee here!'
The man of blood shrank back—
The hour of settlement has come—
Come to this bar, and we will close accounts—
The farm you robbed me of; how much for that?
My wife and children killed; how much for them?
My body crushed, my hopes; for them how much?
And how much for my soul, now doomed to hell?
Nay, start not back!"

Care for it?—Does the manufacturer and trafficker in alcoholic drinks care how much he helped

"The wife's fond heart to break,
And caused the children's tears to flow;
Helped this world a hell to make,
And fit men for a hell below?"

Behold the wretched, downcast look of the inebriate. Guilty? Verily the curse of God is upon him! "Wine is a mocker, strong drink is raging, and whosoever is deceived thereby is not wise." Prov. 20: 1 And yet, guilty as he is, he is innocent compared with him who deals out sparkling death and damnation for filthy lucre. "Wo to him that giveth his neighbor drink."

WONDERS, OR SIGNS.

"And I will show wonders in the heavens."—Joel 2: 30.

The following may be a fitting comment on the above passage, which I cull from the Portland Advertiser, of June 13, 1864.

"An Auspicious Omen.—A most singular and beautiful phenomenon, says the Pittsburg Gazette, was witnessed by scores of persons on Wednesday afternoon, which, if not a prophetic one, was truly a strange and wonderful work of chance. As the procession was slowly moving through the city to the Sanitary Fair opening exercises, the sun was buried behind a blood-red cloud in the Southern horizon, while far in the northern skies a beautiful silver cloud, forming upon a magnificent scale an exact resemblance to the American Eagle, slowly floated forward, presenting a majestic appearance, and retaining its singular shape for many minutes. This picture, formed by the great Penciler of heaven, was in every respect perfect, and the dullest eye could readily perceive in it the form of the American bird of liberty, soaring in the blue canopy of heaven.

Many who witnessed this work of chance, attach considerable importance to its interpretation. And be it a prophetic omen or not, it will long be remembered by those who had the fortune to view it as a most wonderful circumstance."

REJOICE EVERMORE.

This is both the privilege and the duty of every humble follower of Christ. Our Savior was rejected and persecuted, but we read that for the joy that was set before him, he despised the shame, endured the cross, and is now set down on the right hand of God.

To his followers he says, "Blessed are ye when men shall revile you, and persecute you, and shall say all manner of evil against you falsely, for my sake. Rejoice, and be exceeding glad; for great is your reward in heaven; for so persecuted they the prophets which were before you." "Lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world." "The eye of the Lord," says an apostle, "is over the righteous, and his ear is open to their prayers." Saith another, "All things work together for good to them that love God;" and again, "For he (the Lord) hath said, I will never leave thee nor forsake thee. So that we may boldly say, the Lord is my helper, and I will not fear what man shall do unto me."

Comrades, why be discouraged? Jesus is ever at our side, and is "greater than he that is in the world." In a short time we shall see him and be made like him. Having the blessed hope shall we not rejoice? "Rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory!" "For I reckon that the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us.

HOW MUCH WAS A PENNY A DAY?

Much better wages than it sounds to us. An agricultural paper says that, in the time of Christ, a penny was about equal to fifteen of our cents, and money was about ten times as valuable as now; the penny a day was as good as $2.00 of our money; so that he who worked in the vineyard for that got as good wages as good men generally have in harvest time.

The gift of the good Samaritan of two-pence to the landlord for the care of the man who fell among thieves, in addition to the raiment, the oil, and the wine, was equivalent to about four or five dollars of our money, which would probably pay for his board two weeks in a country tavern, where board was very cheap. —Selected.

FACTS FOR FARMERS.

All lands on which clover or the grasses are grown must have either lime in them naturally, or that mineral must be artificially supplied in the form of limestone, oyster shells, or marl.

All permanent improvements of land must look to lime as its basis.

Lands which have been long in culture will be benefited by the application of phosphate of lime, and it is important whether the deficiency be supplied in the form of bone-dust, guano, native phosphate of lime, or marl—the land needs lime also.

No land can be preserved in a high state of fertility unless clover and the grasses are cultivated in the course of rotation.

Mold is indispensable in every soil, and a healthy supply can only be preserved through the cultivation of clover and the grasses, the turning in of green crops, or by the application of composts rich in the elements of mold.

All highly concentrated animal manures are increased in value by admixture with plaster, salt, or by pulverized charcoal.

Deep plowing greatly improves the productive powers of every variety of soil that is not wet.

Subsoiling sound land, that is not wet, is also eminently conducive to increase production.

All wet lands should be drained.

All grain crops should be harvested before the grain is thoroughly ripe.

Clover, as well as the grasses, intended for hay, should be mowed when in blossom.

Sandy loams can be most effectually improved by clay. When such lands require liming or marling, the lime or marl is best applied when made into compost with clay. In slacking lime, salt water is better than fresh.

The chopping or grinding of grain to be fed to stock, operates as a saving of at least twenty-five per cent.

Draining of wet lands and marshes adds to their value by making them produce more, and by improving the health of neighborhoods.

By stabling and sheltering stock through the winter, one-fourth less food will answer than when the stock is exposed to inclement weather.

To manure and lime wet lands is to throw manure, lime, and labor away.

A bushel of plaster per acre, sown broadcast over clover, will add one hundred per cent. to its produce.

Periodical application of ashes tends to keep up integrity of soils, by supplying most, if not all, inorganic substances.

Potatoes are prevented from sprouting by placing them in brine for a few minutes.

Abundant crops cannot be grown for a succession of years, unless care is taken to provide an equivalent for the substances carried off the land in the products grown thereon.

To preserve meadows in their productiveness, it is necessary to harrow them every second autumn, amply top-dressing and rolling them.—American Artisan.

Preserving Butter.—To store away your sweet, common made butter for future use, after having thoroughly worked out all of its butter-milk, put a layer of dry salt in the bottom of your pot, then put in a layer or roll of your butter, smoothly and tightly packed down with a layer of dry salt on top of it, and so on, layer after layer of butter, and salt, until your pot is full, and then cap off the last layer of salt with a covering of fine charcoal of about one inch in thickness, and your butter will remain good and sweet for a year, or for years, if you wish it. So if your butter is packed away roll after roll, in very strong salt water pickle that covers the whole of your butter nicely, and is topped off with a layer of salt and covered with a clean cloth tied tightly over the head of your pot or vessel, it will also keep good and sweet equally as well.—Maine Farmer.

Lice on Calves.—Nature is the best teacher. When cattle are pastured they will paw dirt upon their backs, and rub their heads and necks against banks of earth, for the purpose of destroying lice. Moved by this suggestion, after having bought a new milch cow which was lousy, I dried some dirt under the stove, pulverized and rubbed on the neck, head, and such parts as were most affected by the lice, which subdued them. Two or three applications should be made and again repeated after the nits or eggs are hatched, as the dirt does not destroy the eggs or nits.

Try if your calves or cattle are lousy. It costs nothing, and has no injurious effects like poisonous applications which are most in use. Dry dust in the road we presume will answer just as well.

☞ A dairy-man writes to the Genesee Farmer his experience, as follows: When cows are feeding on dry feed, the milk is thicker or richer than when feeding on juicy grasses. Then add warm water, when setting the milk, in quantities sufficient to make it as the milk from ordinary cows in May or June. The milk from some cows in Spring and Summer months is very thick or rich; then add cold water if the weather be hot. I have practiced the above, and it has increased the quantity from one to three pounds per cow each week.

INDIAN REMEDY FOR SMALL POX.

Sarcenia Purpurea, or Pitcher Plant.

By Dr. Herbert Miles, Surgeon in the British Army.

(Republished by request.)

Capt. Hardy of the Royal Artillery, an accomplished and intelligent officer, who has for years been among the Indians, says that this remedy "had long been known to them as an infallible cure for small pox," and that "the Indians believed it to be successful in every case." From the information gathered from among the Indians, the following observations have been carefully sifted:

1. In the case of an individual suspected to be under the influence of small pox, but with no distinct eruption upon them, a large wineglass full of an infusion of the root of the plant Sarcenia Purpurea, or pitcher plant, is to be taken. The effect of this dose is to bring out the eruption. After a second and third dose, given at intervals of from four to six hours, the pustules subside, apparently losing their vitality. The patient feels better at the end of each dose, and, in the graphic expression of the Micmac, "knows there is a great change in him at once."

2. In a subject already covered with the eruption of small pox, in the early stage, a dose or two will dissipate the pustules and subdue the febrile symptoms. The urine, from being scanty and high colored, becomes pale and abundant, while from the first dose, the patient's feelings assure him that "the medicine is killing the disease." Under the influence of the remedy, in three or four days the prominent symptoms of the constitutional disturbance subside, although as a precautionary measure, the sick person is kept in the camp till the ninth day. No marks of the eruption (as regards pitting, etc.,) have been left in cases examined, if treated by the remedy.

3. With regard to the medicine acting, (as believed by the Indians,) in the way of a preventive, in those exposed to the infection, it is curious to note, that in camps, where the remedy is used, the people keep a weak infusion of the plant prepared, and take a dose occasionally through the day, so as to "keep the antidote in the blood."—Druggist's Circular.

Frederick W. Morris, M. D., resident physician of the Halifax Visiting Dispensary, in a letter sent to the editor of the American Medical Journal, says:

"You have probably heard something of an extraordinary discovery for the cure of small pox, by the use of Saracenia Purpurea, or Indian cap, (or pitcher plant) a native of Nova Scotia. I would beg you, however, to give full publicity to the astonishing fact, that this same humble bog plant is the remedy for small pox, in all its forms, in twelve hours after the patient has taken the medicine. It is also as curious, as it is wonderful, that however alarming and numerous the eruptions, or confluent or frightful they may be, the peculiar action of the medicine is such, that very seldom is a scar left to tell the story of the disease.

I will not enter upon a physiological analysis now; it will be sufficient for my purpose to state, that it cures the disease as no other medicine does, not by stimulating functional teagency, but by actual contact with the virus in the blood, rendering it inert and painless; and this I gather from the fact that if either vaccine or virilous matter be washed with the infusion of the Saracenia, it is deprived of its contagious property.

The dose of the medicine—the powdered root, is about a dessert spoonful simmered in a pint of water down to half a pint; this is divided into two doses, one taken immediately, the other in six hours—no sugar should be given with it. The Saracenia, I have reason to believe to be a powerful antidote for all contagious diseases—febra, plague, measles, contagious typhus and syphilis, also a remedy for jaundice." [illegible]

DON'T ROCK THE BABY.

If all the ultimate consequences of one's acts are to be laid to his charge, the man who invented rocking cradles for children, rests under a fearful load of responsibility. The down-right murder of tens of thousands of infants, and the weakened brains of hundreds of thousands of adults, are undoubted results of his invention. To rock a child in a cradle, or to swing him in a crib, amounts to just this: the rapid motion disturbs the natural flow of the blood, and produces stupor or drowsiness. Can any one suppose for a moment that such an operation is a healthful one? Every one knows the dizzy and often sickening effect of moving rapidly in a swing; yet wherein does this differ from the motion a child receives when rocked in a cradle. It is equivalent to lying in a ship berth during a violent storm, and that sickens nine people out of ten. A very gentle, slow motion may sometimes be soothing, though always of doubtful expediency; but to move a cradle as rapidly as the swing of a pendulum three feet long—that is, once in a second—is positive cruelty. We always feel like grasping and staying the arm of the mother or nurse who, to secure quietude, swings the cradle or crib with a rapidity equal to that of a pendulum a foot long. If any mother is disposed to laugh at our suggestions, or consider them whimsical, we beg her to have a bed or cot hung on cords, then lie down in it herself, and have some one swing it with the same rapidity that she allows the cradle to be rocked. What she will experience in both head and stomach is just what the infant experiences.

We insist that the rocking of children is a useless habit. If not accustomed to rocking, they will go to sleep quite as well when lying quietly as when shaken in a cradle. If they do not there is trouble from sickness or hunger, or more likely from an overloaded stomach; and though the rocking may produce a temporary stupor, the trouble is made worse thereafter by the unnatural means taken to produce quiet for the time being.

CHECKING PERSPIRATION.

A merchant, in "lending a hand" on board of one of his ships on a windy day, found himself, at the end of an hour and a half, pretty well exhausted and perspiring freely. He sat down to rest. The cool wind from the sea was delightful, and, engaging in conversation, time passed faster than he was aware of. In attempting to rise he found he was unable to do so without assistance. He was taken home and put to bed, where he remained for two years; and for a long time afterwards could only hobble about with the aid of a crutch. Less exposures than this have, in constitutions not so vigorous, resulted in inflammation of the lungs, "pneumonia," ending in death in less than a week, or causing tedious rheumatisms, to be a source of torture for a lifetime. Multitudes of lives would be saved every year, and an incalculable amount of human suffering would be prevented, if parents would begin to explain to their children, at the age of three or four years, the danger which attends cooling off too quickly after exercise, and the importance of not standing still after exercise, or work, or play, or of remaining exposed to a wind, or of sitting at an open window or door, or of pulling off any garment, even the hat or bonnet, while in a heat. It should be remembered by all that a cold never comes without a cause, and that, in four times out of five, it is the result of leaving off exercise too suddenly, or of remaining still in the wind, or in a cooler atmosphere than that in which the exercise has been taken.—Edinburg Paper.

GET ENOUGH SLEEP.

We have often heard young men remark that four or five hours was all they wanted, and all that the human system required. The habit of going without sufficient sleep is very injurious. Thousands, no doubt, permanently injure their health in this way. We live in a fast age, when everybody seems to be trying to pervert the order of nature. If folks will persist in turning day into night, it is not to be wondered at that few last out the allotted term of life. No matter what a man's occupation, physical or mental, or, like Othello's, "gone," and living in idleness—the constitution cannot stand it without a sufficiency of regular and refreshing sleep. John Hunter, the great surgeon, died suddenly of spasmodic affection of the heart, a disease greatly encouraged by want of sleep. In a volume just published by a medical man, there is one great lesson that may be learned by hard students and literary men, and that is, that Hunter probably killed himself by too little sleep. Four hours rest at night and one after dinner cannot be deemed sufficient to recruit the exhausted powers of body and mind. If men will insist on cheating sleep, her "twin sister death" will avenge the insult.—Home Journal.

Scalds and Burns.—If the scald or burn is not severe, an ointment made of sulphur, with lard enough to make it spread stiffly on a linen rag, will be effectual. As this ointment is very healing and soothing in the troublesome excoriations of children, it would be well for families to keep it on hand.

DISCIPLINE.

Tremble not, though darkly gather
Clouds and tempests o'er thy sky,
Still believe thy Heavenly Father
Loves thee best when storms are nigh.

When the sun of fortune shineth
Long and brightly on the heart,
Soon its fruitfulness declineth,
Parched and dry in every part.

Then the plants of grace have faded
In the dry and burning soil;
Thorns and briars their growth have shaded—
Earthly cares and earthly toil.

But the clouds are seen ascending;
Soon the heavens are overcast;
And the weary heart is bending
'Neath affliction's stormy blast.

Yet the Lord, on high presiding,
Rules the storm with powerful hand;
He the shower of grace is guiding
To the dry and barren land.

See, at length the clouds are breaking—
Tempests have not passed in vain;
For the soul, revived, awaking,
Bears its fruits and flowers again.

Love divine has seen and counted
Every tear it caused to fall,
And the storm, which love appointed,
Has its choicest gift of all.

REPORT OF A PREACHING TOUR.

Bro. Grant:—Having lately been down to Page Co., in the southwest corner of this State, spending five Sundays, I thought it might be interesting to some to report the results of the effort somewhat, it being a new field.

I went there by request of Bro. D. Q. Kent, who had heard Advent preaching in Lowell some years ago. He made no profession of Advent sentiments publicly, nor of religion at that time, but the truths he heard were as "bread cast on the waters"—they now begin to return again after many days." The circumstance reminds me that we may be doing good often when we think we are laboring in vain because we see no immediate fruit. An observance of the fulfillment of prophecy saved him from scepticism, and growing in a knowledge of the things of God, he commenced three years ago or so, I think, to take an interest in the cause of God, and labored to save others from darkness. He labored as a private member, yet with a commendable zeal, to spread light on the signs of the times, and the coming of Christ. He has not labored in vain, for an interest has been awakened in the minds of the candid, and some are laboring now by his side in love for the same cause. Bro. Asher Chase has taken the Advent Herald for a number of years till within a few years past. He now takes the Crisis, advocating its doctrines on all occasions.

When I got there some interest had been awakened in the prophecies by Bro. Kent's speaking on them one Sunday, by request of those with whom he met for worship. This gave rise to a discourse from a Protestant Methodist preacher in that vicinity, designed evidently, according to his own public avowal, to dispel all fears of the Lord's coming soon. His appointment, made for two weeks, was to be filled one week after I got there, where Bro. Kent had spoken on the prophecies, and where I preached mostly while there. I attended the meeting, taking notes. The following are some of his statements, with brief corrections to some of them.

"The whole vision (of the image) affects this head of gold as the essential thing." "Geographically this image is confined to the limits of Babylon." This is not correct, for the Medo-Persian empire had considerable territory beyond the limits of the Babylonian, the Grecian still more, and the Roman nearly half of hers, while the seat and chief strength of the last was in Europe, territory never occupied by the kingdom of Babylon. We call the four empires universal empires; and so they were in the sense of extending their sway as far as civilization extended. And as the limits of civilization varied in succeeding ages, so the limits of the successive empires would conform to these changes.

"The vision of the image goes no further than 479" (476). "The stone smote the image before this date." "The stone smote the image on the feet." "The stone signifies the gospel of Christ." "Christ represents the stone." "Christ smote the image and it was made as the chaff, and carried to the four corners of the earth." As a basis for this conclusion he had said that "the iron age of Rome, represented by the legs of iron, commenced with the expulsion of Tarquin, and ended with Augustus Cæsar." Then it must have commenced before they made any conquests, and ended before they became universal, or at least before they finished their conquests. For Britain, Dacia, and all the territory they ever held east of the Euphrates was added after the days of Augustus. In keeping with the above remark, he stated that "the Roman empire began to decline with the reign of Augustus Cæsar." But Gibbon makes her most prosperous period begin at the same point and continue more than two hundred years. In her history after this, he points out "the circumstances which resulted" in the decline and fall of the empire. The Romans, the iron element, were not disturbed by the barbarians, the clay element, till near three hundred years after Christ, and were not mixed with them till a short period before the breaking up of the empire (476). But when the stone smites the image the mixed state is developed, and complete, which could not be while the iron was unmixed with clay, nor even while it maintained the supremacy. Hence all the claims put forth, that the stone smote the image (or the kingdom was set up) in the days of Christ, are assumed in spite of facts, to serve a theory.

"The ten horns," he says, "are not kingdoms," adding, "If any man says they are, he denies the Bible." Interrupting him, I asked, "Does not Adam Clarke say they are ten kingdoms?" He answered, "Yes." I then inquired, "Does he deny the Bible?" He answered, "Yes." I thought that would do, for ranking our infidelity with Adam Clarke's he would not think us very bad. He asks, "Where does the Bible say that horns represent kingdoms?" I would answer, In the eighth chapter of the same book, where we are assured that "the rough goat is the king of Grecia: and the great horn that is between his eyes is the first king. Now that being broken, whereas four (horns) stood up for it, four kingdoms shall stand up out of the nation."—Dan. 8: 21, 22. He says, "There never was a time when there were just ten kingdoms." But here he is mistaken, for this time did come just as required in the prophecy. Daniel says of the fourth beast as he first saw it in vision, "It had ten horns." He then adds, "I considered the horns, and behold there came up among them another little horn." Thus the ten horns exist when the eleventh one comes up. A disregard for this fact has led to some variations in the enumerations of different writers on the prophecy. Some place them too early, and some too late, while others still trace out the ten principal kingdoms erected by the barbarians on the ruins of the empire during the period of its dissolution, embracing somewhat more than a century and a half.

Complaining that in these different enumerations he found "twenty-two different kingdoms," the preacher adds ten more, starting off on a new hypothesis. He claims that it originated with him, and I think it strikingly betrays its parentage. Insisting that the ten horns are ten kings,—not kingdoms,—he applies them to the ten Cæsars, commencing with Augustus, and ending with Titus. The eleventh horn which prevailed against the saints till the Ancient of days came, was Domitian! The Ancient of days was the church! The time, times, and the dividing of time, was literally taken, making three years and a half.

Thus the emperor Domitian must have commenced his reign while the preceding ten were reigning, though he sat on the same throne; for the other little horn came up among them, not after them! And he must "pluck up three of these first horns by the roots" after he commences his reign! In three years and a half only he will think to change times and and laws, and shall wear out the saints of the Most High! A wonderful man this, whom Gibbon calls "the timid Domitian." But it seems very much like a human theory, and very much unlike Divine wisdom, to pass by Nero's persecution in silence, which was of longer duration, more extensive, and of greater intensity, happening but a few years previous, and notice this, as though it were sufficient to overshadow all others!

He trod lightly upon several of these points. He did not notice the plucking up the three horns nor the Ancient of days in his discourse. After he dismissed, I inquired what he would do with the three horns? how he would make it appear that Domitian plucked them up? He said, "That is all clear enough in history." I asked him how it could be? He answered, "Go to history." But says I, What shall I look for? Can I find that Domitian, after he commenced his reign, subdued three of the preceding emperors, who were dead? He still replied, "It's all clear enough in history." Then Bro. Kent gave him a difficulty about the little horn prevailing against the saints till the Ancient of days came. He desired to know how Domitian fulfilled that? But he got no satisfaction.

In about ten days afterward, the preacher made an appointment "to clear up the difficulties" presented to him on the occasion of the other discourse. This appointment was made in the neighborhood of his own church, about four miles or more from where he preached his first discourse. He sent word to Bro. Kent to attend, but I thought I would like to hear, too. Here he made the statement that the Ancient of days was the church, but instead of clearing up the difficulties, he laid them open to another audience, confessing that the plucking up the three horns was a difficulty, but adding, "There is no position without its difficulties." He also trod lightly again over the little horn prevailing against the saints till the Ancient of days came.

In both discourses he tried to discourage attention to the prophecies. He said they "would never lead a man to Christ," and that he "never would preach on them again on Sunday." (I understand that he does not lack a relish for politics in his Sunday discourses.) I asked him as he was going on treating the prophecies in this manner, "Do you indeed feel it your duty to apologize for preaching on the prophecies?" He answered, "I do." Such a treatment of the prophecies dissatisfied his own church, several of whom expressed their dissent.

I replied to him in both places, inasmuch as his effort was designed to suppress the interest growing out of Bro. Kent's discourse on the prophecies, and in both cases the hearers generally were persuaded in favor of the truth.

I preached thirty-six discourses while there, at four different places; and more on the prophecies than on any other subject. The people had never heard on the prophecies, and they listened with a hearty relish. They would come out in all weathers, night after night. The interest seemed to increase to the end, and they were hardly willing that I should go away without a promise of an early return. I have arranged to go down there again in June. The interest there is truly encouraging, and I am resolved to preach more on the prophecies in the future than I have done in the past.

Since I came back from there I have been preaching every night, when the weather will allow, except one evening in the week. I have found the weather pretty bad in these two weeks, but having appointments out for every night, I fill up every proper evening. When I get through this week, it will make nearly every evening for two months, preaching three discourses on Sundays.

HIGHLY COMPLIMENTARY.

Bro. Grant:—As I have seen no notice of our late excellent conference holden at Exeter, Me., the last month, I would say a few things in relation to it. There were present as preachers Brn. N. F. Nason, J. Morrill, I. Damman, N. G. Reed, C. H. Leverton, J. Carr, and Bro. Hanscomb. We had, as we supposed, a very good meeting. Every thing appeared to move in harmony and love; yet, as we claim not to be infallible in our judgments, I will proceed to notice the very charitable opinion of one whose account of the meeting is given in the Herald of Life, of June 22d, dated Corinna, Me. He says:—

"I had an opportunity of attending, the past week, a meeting of one and a half days, held and carried forward by a class of people the description of whom you can find in 2 Pet. 2: 22." (To save your readers the trouble of turning to the passages referred to by the writer, I will quote them in full:—"But it is happened unto them according to the true proverb: The dog is turned to his own vomit again; and the sow that was washed to her wallowing in the mire." The writer further says:—"While listening to what they had to say, I thought I saw the fulfillment of verse 19th of the same chapter, and Rom. 16: 17, 18. Also 2 Tim. 3: 1-9." The first verse referred to reads thus: "While they promise them liberty, they themselves are the servants of corruption: for of whom a man is overcome, of the same is he brought in bondage." He refers to Rom. 16: 17, 18,—"Now I beseech you, brethren, mark them which cause divisions and offences contrary to the doctrine which ye have learned; and avoid them. For they that are such serve not our Lord Jesus Christ, but their own belly; and by good words and fair speeches deceive the hearts of the simple."

The last and crowning reference to the people who attended this conference is as follows: 2 Tim. 3: 1-9,—"This know, also, that in the last days perilous times shall come. For men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, without natural affection, truce-breakers, false accusers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of those that are good, traitors, heady, high-minded, lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God; having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof; from such turn away. For of this last are they which creep into houses, and lead captive silly women laden with sins, led away with divers lusts, ever learning, and never able to come to the knowledge of the truth. Now as Jannes and Jambres withstood Moses, so do these also resist the truth, men of corrupt minds, reprobate concerning the faith; for their folly shall be manifest unto all men, as theirs also was."

This favorable notice of the conference exhibits a very great degree of the charity which hopeth all things, and we can but hope that, should he think it proper to issue a second edition, to have still further evidence of the charity that NEVER faileth.

Leaving for your readers to judge of the spirit by which men are actuated in these last days, I subscribe myself as one of the number thus highly complimented,

Thomas Smith.

CHEERING THOUGHTS FOR SAINTS.

There's rest for all the weary
Upon the other shore,
Where sin and care and sorrow
Oppress the soul no more.

There's life for all the dying,
And hope for all the dead;
"I am the Resurrection,"
The blessed Savior said.

There's joy for every mourner,
And wealth for all the poor,
If they but love the Savior,
And to the end endure.

O, glory be to Jesus,
Who died upon the tree,
To purchase life eternal
For wretched ones like me!

MY JOURNEYINGS.

Salem, Mass., March 24th. Have labored with the church in this city for ten weeks. Many of our meetings were very interesting. One fact was established, that it is possible for brethren and sisters holding different views to live together in peace. We had believers in "eternal torment," "destruction of the wicked," "non-resurrection of the ungodly," "resurrection of both the just and unjust," etc., etc. In the ten weeks of my labor in Salem, not a discordant voice was heard in any meeting, but all seemed interested in the one great object of the "salvation of sinners." It is sad to see so many of our little churches separated on account of differences of opinion on points of doctrine. If all possessed a fair degree of grace, we could live and thrive together, and instead of having the conference meeting turned into a "sparring room," we should have a place where the brethren would "exhort one another, and so much the more as they saw the day approaching."

Westboro', April 5th. Have had a heavenly season with the church here for twelve days. The household of faith in Westboro' have taken a new start for "the kingdom." Some have found "peace in believing," and one was baptized. The Lord has been blessing them greatly for the past two or three months.

Ashland, April 6th. This evening, met with a company of the saints at Bro. Chickering's, where we had a "feast of good things." "The kingdom of God" has some supporters in this place, who are waiting patiently for the King to appear.

Boston, April 13th. Attended the general conference in Boston, which has just ended. Was greatly blessed in hearing the testimonies of the brethren and sisters, who had come to the feast from the "regions beyond."

Portsmouth, N. H., April 26th. Found the church in this place in working order. Always have a good season here. Passed two Sundays, laboring "in word and doctrine." May the Lord multiply blessings on this company.

Exeter, April 28th. Visited several families who are "waiting for the kingdom."

Elliot, Me., May 2nd. Four days here. The little band in this place are "strong, giving glory to God." The converts are alive and growing in grace. This is one of the "bright spots" on this dark earth. May the Lord keep this company from "wolves who devour" and scatter, and give to them men who have "Christ formed within them, the hope of glory," who will feed and build up the church.

Kennebunkport, May 9th. Six days with God's servants in K. Held meetings five evenings, with an increasing interest. Left reluctantly for other fields of labor.

Worcester, Mass., May 16th. One Sunday with the disciples at Worcester. Was cordially received, and felt that it was good to be there. The Sunday School is in a thriving condition. A very important auxiliary in the proclamation of "the gospel of Christ."

Boston, May 17th. This evening spoke at the Lowell Street Chapel from the text:—"Who is on the Lord's side?"

Peacedale, R. I., May 20th. Two days here. On each evening spoke at the chapel on things pertaining to "the kingdom of God."

Newark, N. J., May 22nd. To-day met with the "believers" at the "Good Samaritan Hall," and endeavored to preach "Christ and him crucified." The company of "believers" are divided into four bands, all small, in point of numbers. "Points of doctrine" is the scattering element. One portion meet at Broad Street Hall, another on Banks Street, the third at "Good Samaritan Hall," and the fourth in another part of the city.

Hammonton, May 24th. Passed the evening with Bro. Lederer, at Bro. Willard's. Had a refreshing visit, and left feeling stronger in the Lord.

Philadelphia, June 1st. A week in Philadelphia. On Sunday afternoon spoke to brethren in the hall at the corner of Ninth and Spring Garden Streets, and in the afternoon and evening at Horticultural Hall. Had perfect liberty in declaring "the gospel," and feel already much attached to the saints in Philadelphia.

Newark, N. J., July 1st. Have labored here for the past month with an increasing interest. Sunday School established. Twenty members. In all these cities and towns have visited many families, and hope that much good will result.

Yours looking for Christ,

F. H. Burbank.

MY WESTERN TOUR.—NO. 2.

Bro. Grant:—Since the date of my last I have in my westward journey passed over the great lakes, the natural thoroughfare of the great northwest; the extent and beauty of which must be seen to be appreciated. I took passage at Ogdensburgh, on "The City of Boston," a propeller of "The Northern Transportation Line," bound for Chicago, on Monday, June 27th, and arrived at Milwaukee, Wis., Monday morning, July 4th, the day that celebrates "national glory" in these "United States."

My trip through the lakes was interesting to me, and I trust profitable to the cause of truth, affording me a good opportunity to converse with many upon the striking features of our times of war, and fearfulness of heart among many, and also upon the distinguishing features of our faith and hope, which I improved to some purpose, I trust, for whenever I commenced a discussion I had a crowd of listeners, some of whom were professors of religion and candid hearers of the word. The weather was, generally speaking, fine, and the trip a pleasant one to most of those on board, with the exception of some wind, which though not sufficient to endanger our lives, was enough to sicken many; but I escaped, as always before.

Our only apparent danger was during an entire night of dense fog and pitchy darkness on Lake Huron, upon the pathway of all kinds of sailing crafts, bearing their precious burdens of excellent wheat from the "granary of the world," in connection with a brisk wind, when, so thick was the gloom, that as we passed steamers well lighted their lights could not be seen for more than four minutes, causing life and freight to be in great peril. But by the vigilance of our boat's competent and gentlemanly master, Capt. McHenry, and his subordinate officers, who kept a close "lookout" for passing vessels, together with the care of a faithful God, we escaped the danger unharmed; yet it was a night of some gloom and terror, for amid the dashing of the waves and rocking of our vessel as she bore on her way without light on her pathway, the unearthly screeches of her harsh whistle were heard at regular intervals of five minutes in length the whole live-long night, so "lone and dreary."

We were all glad to see the morning dawn; and it caused me to feel more deeply the truth that life here at best is a waste, a howling wilderness of woe to most, and at times to all, and make the day of full security and rest to be desired. Yet I have learned that sailors, who are constantly exposed to great danger, are nevertheless horridly profane, and not only they, but landsmen are so, becoming more grossly wicked, "evil men and seducers waxing worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived," while the church of Christ (shall I say?) are allowing their lamps to go out, the love of the greatest number waxes cold; thus perils increase.

Last Sabbath was a beautiful day on Lake Michigan, and by request of most of the passengers, and the cheerful permission of our captain, who was a candid listener, with several of his crew, I preached the word in the cabin, most of the passengers being present. I hope good was done. I am now in Winona, Minn.; expect to leave here to-morrow for the place of my appointment, to greet valued friends there.

To my eastern brethren and sisters, and to all the household of faith, I would say, Be holy, be faithful, look for Jesus and be ready for his return. "Pray for me." Your Bro., "in hope of life."

RUM'S DOINGS.

"Hath he not murdered our mothers—
Brought their gray locks to the tomb?
Hath he not murdered our brothers,
Yet in their manhood's bloom?
Hath he not coiled on our hearth-stones,
Hissing with Upas breath?
On! on to the warfare, brothers!
Nor cease till he writhes in death!"

THE AWFUL DOOM!

Distillers, grog-sellers, saloon keepers, and hotel keepers, will you read your awful doom in the Rum-seller's Dream?

"Well, wife, this is too horrid; I cannot continue this business any longer."

"Why, dear, what is the matter now?"

"O such a dream, such a rattling of dead men's bones, and such an army of starved mortals, so many murders, such cries and shrieks, and yells, and such horrid gnashing of teeth, and glaring eyes, and such a blazing fire, and such devils—oh! I cannot endure it. My hair stands on end, and I am so filled with horror I can scarcely speak. Oh, if I ever sell rum again!"

"My dear, you are frightened."

"Yes, indeed, I am; another such a night will I not pass for worlds."

"My dear, perhaps—"

"Oh, don't talk to me. I am determined to have nothing more to do with rum, anyhow. Don't you think Tom Wilson came to me with his throat cut from ear to ear, and such a horrible gash, and it was so hard for him to speak, and so much blood; and says he, 'See here, Joe, the result of rum-selling.' My blood chilled at the sight, and just then the house seemed to turn bottom up, the earth opened, and a little imp took me by the hand, saying, 'Follow me.' As I went, grim devils held out to me cups of liquid fire, saying, 'Drink this.' I dared not refuse. Every draught set me in a rage. Serpents hissed on each side, and from above reached down their heads and whispered, 'Rum-seller.' On and on, the imp led me through the narrow pass. All at once he paused and said, 'Are you dry?' 'Yes,' I replied. Then he struck a trap-door with his foot, and down, down we went, and legions of fiery serpents followed us, whispering, 'Drunkard, drunkard.' At length we stopped again, and the imp asked as before, 'Are you dry?' 'Yes,' I replied.

He then touched a spring, a door flew open, there were thousands of old worn out rum-drinkers, crying most piteously, 'Rum, rum, give me some rum.' When they saw me they stopped a moment to see who I was. Then the imp cried out, so as to make all shake again, 'Rum-seller;' and hurling me in, shut the door. For a moment they fixed their ferocious eyes upon me, and then uttered a united yell, Damn him,—which filled me with terror. I awoke. There, wife, dream or no dream, I will never sell another drop of the infernal stuff."

"Woe to him that buildeth his house by unrighteousness, and his chambers by wrong."

"The judgment throne was set. On either hand
All living mortals stood before the Judge.
There stood the drunkard—there his murderer!
'Ha!' cried the drunkard, 'art thou here at last?
I have been looking long to see thee here!'
The man of blood shrank back—
The hour of settlement has come—
Come to this bar, and we will close accounts—
The farm you robbed me of; how much for that?
My wife and children killed; how much for them?
My body crushed, my hopes; for them how much?
And how much for my soul, now doomed to hell?
Nay, start not back!'"

Care for it?—Does the manufacturer and trafficker in alcoholic drinks care how much he helped

"The wife's fond heart to break,
And caused the children's tears to flow;
Helped this world a hell to make,
And fit men for a hell below?"

Behold the wretched, downcast look of the inebriate. Guilty? Verily the curse of God is upon him! "Wine is a mocker, strong drink is raging, and whosoever is deceived thereby is not wise." Prov. 20: 1 And yet, guilty as he is, he is innocent compared with him who deals out sparkling death and damnation for filthy lucre. "Wo to him that giveth his neighbor drink."

WONDERS, OR SIGNS.

"And I will show wonders in the heavens."—Joel 2: 30.

The following may be a fitting comment on the above passage, which I cull from the Portland Advertiser, of June 13, 1864.

"An Auspicious Omen.—A most singular and beautiful phenomenon, says the Pittsburg Gazette, was witnessed by scores of persons on Wednesday afternoon, which, if not a prophetic one, was truly a strange and wonderful work of chance. As the procession was slowly moving through the city to the Sanitary Fair opening exercises, the sun was buried behind a blood-red cloud in the Southern horizon, while far in the northern skies a beautiful silver cloud, forming upon a magnificent scale an exact resemblance to the American Eagle, slowly floated forward, presenting a majestic appearance, and retaining its singular shape for many minutes. This picture, formed by the great Penciler of heaven, was in every respect perfect, and the dullest eye could readily perceive in it the form of the American bird of liberty, soaring in the blue canopy of heaven. Many who witnessed this work of chance, attach considerable importance to its interpretation. And be it a prophetic omen or not, it will long be remembered by those who had the fortune to view it as a most wonderful circumstance."

REJOICE EVERMORE.

This is both the privilege and the duty of every humble follower of Christ. Our Savior was rejected and persecuted, but we read that for the joy that was set before him, he despised the shame, endured the cross, and is now set down on the right hand of God.

To his followers he says, "Blessed are ye when men shall revile you, and persecute you, and shall say all manner of evil against you falsely, for my sake. Rejoice, and be exceeding glad; for great is your reward in heaven; for so persecuted they the prophets which were before you." "Lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world." "The eye of the Lord," says an apostle, "is over the righteous, and his ear is open to their prayers." Saith another, "All things work together for good to them that love God;" and again, "For he (the Lord) hath said, I will never leave thee nor forsake thee. So that we may boldly say, the Lord is my helper, and I will not fear what man shall do unto me."

Comrades, why be discouraged? Jesus is ever at our side, and is "greater than he that is in the world." In a short time we shall see him and be made like him. Having the blessed hope shall we not rejoice? "Rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory!" "For I reckon that the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us.

HOW MUCH WAS A PENNY A DAY?

Much better wages than it sounds to us. An agricultural paper says that, in the time of Christ, a penny was about equal to fifteen of our cents, and money was about ten times as valuable as now; the penny a day was as good as $2.00 of our money; so that he who worked in the vineyard for that got as good wages as good men generally have in harvest time.

The gift of the good Samaritan of two-pence to the landlord for the care of the man who fell among thieves, in addition to the raiment, the oil, and the wine, was equivalent to about four or five dollars of our money, which would probably pay for his board two weeks in a country tavern, where board was very cheap. —Selected.

FACTS FOR FARMERS.

All lands on which clover or the grasses are grown must have either lime in them naturally, or that mineral must be artificially supplied in the form of limestone, oyster shells, or marl.

All permanent improvements of land must look to lime as its basis.

Lands which have been long in culture will be benefited by the application of phosphate of lime, and it is important whether the deficiency be supplied in the form of bone-dust, guano, native phosphate of lime, or marl—the land needs lime also.

No land can be preserved in a high state of fertility unless clover and the grasses are cultivated in the course of rotation.

Mold is indispensable in every soil, and a healthy supply can only be preserved through the cultivation of clover and the grasses, the turning in of green crops, or by the application of composts rich in the elements of mold.

All highly concentrated animal manures are increased in value by admixture with plaster, salt, or by pulverized charcoal.

Deep plowing greatly improves the productive powers of every variety of soil that is not wet.

Subsoiling sound land, that is not wet, is also eminently conducive to increase production.

All wet lands should be drained.

All grain crops should be harvested before the grain is thoroughly ripe.

Clover, as well as the grasses, intended for hay, should be mowed when in blossom.

Sandy loams can be most effectually improved by clay. When such lands require liming or marling, the lime or marl is best applied when made into compost with clay. In slacking lime, salt water is better than fresh.

The chopping or grinding of grain to be fed to stock, operates as a saving of at least twenty-five per cent.

Draining of wet lands and marshes adds to their value by making them produce more, and by improving the health of neighborhoods.

By stabling and sheltering stock through the winter, one-fourth less food will answer than when the stock is exposed to inclement weather.

To manure and lime wet lands is to throw manure, lime, and labor away.

A bushel of plaster per acre, sown broadcast over clover, will add one hundred per cent. to its produce.

Periodical application of ashes tends to keep up integrity of soils, by supplying most, if not all, inorganic substances.

Thorough preparation of land is absolutely necessary to the successful growth of crops.

Abundant crops cannot be grown for a succession of years, unless care is taken to provide an equivalent for the substances carried off the land in the products grown thereon.

To preserve meadows in their productiveness, it is necessary to harrow them every second autumn, amply top-dressing and rolling them.—American Artisan.

Preserving Butter.—To store away your sweet, common made butter for future use, after having thoroughly worked out all of its butter-milk, put a layer of dry salt in the bottom of your pot, then put in a layer or roll of your butter, smoothly and tightly packed down with a layer of dry salt on top of it, and so on, layer after layer of butter, and salt, until your pot is full, and then cap off the last layer of salt with a covering of fine charcoal of about one inch in thickness, and your butter will remain good and sweet for a year, or for years, if you wish it. So if your butter is packed away roll after roll, in very strong salt water pickle that covers the whole of your butter nicely, and is topped off with a layer of salt and covered with a clean cloth tied tightly over the head of your pot or vessel, it will also keep good and sweet equally as well.—Maine Farmer.

Lice on Calves.—Nature is the best teacher. When cattle are pastured they will paw dirt upon their backs, and rub their heads and necks against banks of earth, for the purpose of destroying lice. Moved by this suggestion, after having bought a new milch cow which was lousy, I dried some dirt under the stove, pulverized and rubbed on the neck, head, and such parts as were most affected by the lice, which subdued them. Two or three applications should be made and again repeated after the nits or eggs are hatched, as the dirt does not destroy the eggs or nits.

Try if your calves or cattle are lousy. It costs nothing, and has no injurious effects like poisonous applications which are most in use. Dry dust in the road we presume will answer just as well.

☞ A dairy-man writes to the Genesee Farmer his experience, as follows: When cows are feeding on dry feed, the milk is thicker or richer than when feeding on juicy grasses. Then add warm water, when setting the milk, in quantities sufficient to make it as the milk from ordinary cows in May or June. The milk from some cows in Spring and Summer months is very thick or rich; then add cold water if the weather be hot. I have practiced the above, and it has increased the quantity from one to three pounds per cow each week.

INDIAN REMEDY FOR SMALL POX.

Sarcenia Purpurea, or Pitcher Plant.

By Dr. Herbert Miles, Surgeon in the British Army.

(Republished by request.)

Capt. Hardy of the Royal Artillery, an accomplished and intelligent officer, who has for years been among the Indians, says that this remedy "had long been known to them as an infallible cure for small pox," and that "the Indians believed it to be successful in every case." From the information gathered from among the Indians, the following observations have been carefully sifted:

1. In the case of an individual suspected to be under the influence of small pox, but with no distinct eruption upon them, a large wineglass full of an infusion of the root of the plant Sarcenia Purpurea, or pitcher plant, is to be taken. The effect of this dose is to bring out the eruption. After a second and third dose, given at intervals of from four to six hours, the pustules subside, apparently losing their vitality. The patient feels better at the end of each dose, and, in the graphic expression of the Micmac, "knows there is a great change in him at once."

2. In a subject already covered with the eruption of small pox, in the early stage, a dose or two will dissipate the pustules and subdue the febrile symptoms. The urine, from being scanty and high colored, becomes pale and abundant, while from the first dose, the patient's feelings assure him that "the medicine is killing the disease." Under the influence of the remedy, in three or four days the prominent symptoms of the constitutional disturbance subside, although as a precautionary measure, the sick person is kept in the camp till the ninth day. No marks of the eruption (as regards pitting, etc.,) have been left in cases examined, if treated by the remedy.

3. With regard to the medicine acting, (as believed by the Indians,) in the way of a preventive, in those exposed to the infection, it is curious to note, that in camps, where the remedy is used, the people keep a weak infusion of the plant prepared, and take a dose occasionally through the day, so as to "keep the antidote in the blood."—Druggist's Circular.

Frederick W. Morris, M. D., resident physician of the Halifax Visiting Dispensary, in a letter sent to the editor of the American Medical Journal, says:

"You have probably heard something of an extraordinary discovery for the cure of small pox, by the use of Saracenia Purpurea, or Indian cap, (or pitcher plant) a native of Nova Scotia. I would beg you, however, to give full publicity to the astonishing fact, that this same humble bog plant is the remedy for small pox, in all its forms, in twelve hours after the patient has taken the medicine. It is also as curious, as it is wonderful, that however alarming and numerous the eruptions, or confluent or frightful they may be, the peculiar action of the medicine is such, that very seldom is a scar left to tell the story of the disease.

I will not enter upon a physiological analysis now; it will be sufficient for my purpose to state, that it cures the disease as no other medicine does, not by stimulating functional reagency, but by actual contact with the virus in the blood, rendering it inert and painless; and this I gather from the fact that if either vaccine or virilous matter be washed with the infusion of the Saracenia, it is deprived of its contagious property.

The dose of the medicine—the powdered root, is about a dessert spoonful simmered in a pint of water down to half a pint; this is divided into two doses, one taken immediately, the other in six hours—no sugar should be given with it. The Saracenia, I have reason to believe to be a powerful antidote for all contagious diseases—cholera, plague, measles, contagious typhus and syphilis, also a remedy for jaundice."—Ex.

DON'T ROCK THE BABY.

If all the ultimate consequences of one's acts are to be laid to his charge, the man who invented rocking cradles for children, rests under a fearful load of responsibility. The down-right murder of tens of thousands of infants, and the weakened brains of hundreds of thousands of adults, are undoubted results of his invention. To rock a child in a cradle, or to swing him in a crib, amounts to just this: the rapid motion disturbs the natural flow of the blood, and produces stupor or drowsiness. Can any one suppose for a moment that such an operation is a healthful one? Every one knows the dizzy and often sickening effect of moving rapidly in a swing; yet wherein does this differ from the motion a child receives when rocked in a cradle. It is equivalent to lying in a ship berth during a violent storm, and that sickens nine people out of ten. A very gentle, slow motion may sometimes be soothing, though always of doubtful expediency; but to move a cradle as rapidly as the swing of a pendulum three feet long—that is, once in a second—is positive cruelty. We always feel like grasping and staying the arm of the mother or nurse who, to secure quietude, swings the cradle or crib with a rapidity equal to that of a pendulum a foot long. If any mother is disposed to laugh at our suggestions, or consider them whimsical, we beg her to have a bed or cot hung on cords, then lie down in it herself, and have some one swing it with the same rapidity that she allows the cradle to be rocked. What she will experience in both head and stomach is just what the infant experiences.

We insist that the rocking of children is a useless habit. If not accustomed to rocking, they will go to sleep quite as well when lying quietly as when shaken in a cradle. If they do not there is trouble from sickness or hunger, or more likely from an overloaded stomach; and though the rocking may produce a temporary stupor, the trouble is made worse thereafter by the unnatural means taken to produce quiet for the time being.

CHECKING PERSPIRATION.

A merchant, in "lending a hand" on board of one of his ships on a windy day, found himself, at the end of an hour and a half, pretty well exhausted and perspiring freely. He sat down to rest. The cool wind from the sea was delightful, and, engaging in conversation, time passed faster than he was aware of. In attempting to rise he found he was unable to do so without assistance. He was taken home and put to bed, where he remained for two years; and for a long time afterwards could only hobble about with the aid of a crutch. Less exposures than this have, in constitutions not so vigorous, resulted in inflammation of the lungs, "pneumonia," ending in death in less than a week, or causing tedious rheumatisms, to be a source of torture for a lifetime. Multitudes of lives would be saved every year, and an incalculable amount of human suffering would be prevented, if parents would begin to explain to their children, at the age of three or four years, the danger which attends cooling off too quickly after exercise, and the importance of not standing still after exercise, or work, or play, or of remaining exposed to a wind, or of sitting at an open window or door, or of pulling off any garment, even the hat or bonnet, while in a heat. It should be remembered by all that a cold never comes without a cause, and that, in four times out of five, it is the result of leaving off exercise too suddenly, or of remaining still in the wind, or in a cooler atmosphere than that in which the exercise has been taken.—Edinburg Paper.

GET ENOUGH SLEEP.

We have often heard young men remark that four or five hours was all they wanted, and all that the human system required. The habit of going without sufficient sleep is very injurious. Thousands, no doubt, permanently injure their health in this way. We live in a fast age, when everybody seems to be trying to pervert the order of nature. If folks will persist in turning day into night, it is not to be wondered at that few last out the allotted term of life. No matter what a man's occupation, physical or mental, or, like Othello's, "gone," and living in idleness—the constitution cannot stand it without a sufficiency of regular and refreshing sleep. John Hunter, the great surgeon, died suddenly of spasmodic affection of the heart, a disease greatly encouraged by want of sleep. In a volume just published by a medical man, there is one great lesson that may be learned by hard students and literary men, and that is, that Hunter probably killed himself by too little sleep. Four hours rest at night and one after dinner cannot be deemed sufficient to recruit the exhausted powers of body and mind. If men will insist on cheating sleep, her "twin sister death" will avenge the insult.—Home Journal.

Scalds and Burns.—If the scald or burn is not severe, an ointment made of sulphur, with lard enough to make it spread stiffly on a linen rag, will be effectual. As this ointment is very healing and soothing in the troublesome excoriations of children, it would be well for families to keep it on hand.

CONFIDENCE.

I trust thee, O Father, though rough be the way,
Thy rod and thy staff are my strength and my stay;
Thou knowest the dangers that lie before me,
And every event of my life thou canst see.

O Father in heaven, most blessed of all,
How oft hast thou kept me when ready to fall;
How oft 'mid the darkness of this dreary land
I've had thy dear presence—felt led by thy hand;

And oft when high billows would furiously roll,
And lightnings be flashing from pole unto pole,—
How oft when my heart was all faint and dismayed,
Thou'st whispered, "'Tis I, child, O, be not afraid!"

Dear Jesus, how precious thou art unto me;
O may I not wander, dear Savior, from thee;
But let me still be by thy gentle hand led,
And may thy rich grace in my soul e'er be shed.

And when the last trumpet shall peal its last sound,
May I with the ransomed immortal be found;
O! bring me to see thee in Paradise then,
To dwell in thy presence forever, Amen.

MAN AS HE WAS, IS, AND IS TO BE.

BY JOHN F. BELT.

NUMBER SIX.

IMMORTALITY AND INCORRUPTIBILITY

The terms "immortal and incorruptible" are opposed to mortal and corruptible, and are to be understood in the sense of a state or condition which is the opposite, the one to the other. When Adam lost the right to the tree of life, and the "flaming sword" was placed so as to prevent access to its fruit, he and his posterity became mortal, and consequently were corruptible and thereby subjected to death from natural causes. But when "all things are made new" the mortal things will cease to be. "And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes, and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain; for the former things are passed away." Rev. 21: 4. Then as the human family become mortal and corruptible by reason of the lost access to the right of way, all who are counted worthy to regain access to its healing fruits will become immortal and live forever. "Blessed are they who do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city." Rev. 22: 14. Therefore, as God alone hath immortality in himself, and hath given to the Son to have life in himself, immortality or eternal life is the free gift of the Father, which will only be obtained through Jesus Christ; consequently no one can have absolute immortality independent of the healing tree. Hence the Revelator showed to John "A pure river of water of life, clear as crystal, proceding out of the throne of God and of the Lamb. In the midst of the street of it and on either side of the river, was there the tree of life, which bare twelve manner of fruits, and yielded her fruit every month; and the leaves of the tree were for the healing of the nations." Rev. 22: 1, 2.

The first two chapters in the book of Genesis are in perfect contrast with the last two chapters of Revelation. Moses records the history of man's creation in the beginning, when the material universe was made, together with the ruin of the race by reason of disobeying the commandment of God by Adam, the head and representative of the human family, whose sin brought them into a state of mortality and corruptibility. John records what is to be in the regenesis and the future life, when what was lost in Adam will be restored by Jesus Christ. Therefore, as the nations of the earth from the beginning to the end of the world were subjected to all the evils of mortality in the constitution of their bodies and minds, the effects of the corrupted blood which sustained the life they all derived from the parent stock, the cure must come through Christ, who is the second Adam, who "was made a quickening spirit:" hence he has said, "To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the tree of life, which is in the midst of the paradise of God." Rev. 2: 7. Then as the tree of life is in the midst of the street of the great city where the throne of God and of the Lamb is to be, from which throne proceeds the river of the water of life, none of the ruined nations will be healed but those out of every nation, kindred and tongue who have kept his commandments, which will then constitute "the nations" of them which are saved." And since no sickness nor pain will enter there, the healing must refer to a change of this mortal to the immortal state, when they will be made to conserve their lives forever by virtue of the leaves, or fruit, of the tree of life. Then this mortal shall have put on immortality, and the things of this earthly house which are temporal, shall have been dissolved and passed away, having been superceded by the heavenly house, which are the things eternal.

The commonly received view that the righteous dead are immortal the very moment they are raised from the grave is inadmissible. They are raised incorruptible in the sense that they are no more to return to the grave. But they will not put on immortality until "all things are made new," and the temporal things are superceded by the things which are eternal. The apostle says "we shall all be changed." The earthly life was derived from and sustained by the blood which flowed from Adam's veins and was corruptible. But in the resurrection they will be born from the dead by the quickening Spirit of God, which also raised the body of Christ from the tomb.

Then as Jesus did not enter into his glory with the Father until many days had expired, so will it be with his covenant people, their bodies will not be glorified and made immortal until "the tabernacle of God is with men." Otherwise, how can this body be changed unless "this mortal puts on immortality," which Paul declares will be brought to pass when "death is swallowed up in victory"?

It was to this end that it was said to John on Patmos, "Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection, on such the second death hath no power; but they shall be priests of God and of Christ, and shall reign with him a thousand years." And as the time is the intervening space between the resurrection of "those who are Christ's at his coming" and the rest of the dead who are to live again when "the thousand years are ended," they must reign with him in his pavilion "on the sea of glass," for it is not stated anywhere in the Bible that the saints are to reign on the earth for one thousand years; but it is repeatedly declared that when they do reign on the earth, it will be when they are to possess it forever.

It was the first Adam that broke creation into fragments and ruined the human race. It is the second Adam that is to restore creation in all its parts and make it one again. That restitution begins with the resurrection of the just, when all the saints are caught up to meet him in the air. It is in that pavilion where the marriage-table will be spread, and the bride will take her place of honor. The chosen ones will then be at rest in the ark which soars above the fiery deluge, where the song of deliverance will be sung. Standing there on the sea of glass, they will behold the righteous judgment of God made manifest over all the earth. And being there acknowledged and confessed before the Father's face, and before the holy angels, they will form his retinue when he comes to execute judgment on the host of the wicked "Gog" that the devil leads against him.

This will all take place in the period which Peter calls "the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men." It is when the earth will be dissolved and the elements melt with fervent heat. It is to the end that the wicked may be destroyed, and the earth be renewed by fire, that the saints are caught up into the air. When the Old World was destroyed by the flood, righteous Noah and his family were first placed in the ark before the rain descended upon the doomed ones. So was Lot aud his family removed from Sodom, before the deluge of fire consumed the wicked people in it. The reason assigned by the angel was, "I cannot do any thing till thou be come thither." In every instance when the wicked were destroyed, God first removed his people from the reach of the evil to come. And he was not slack concerning his promise, but was long-suffering, not willing that any should perish, but that they should come to repentance.

During those periods of extended mercy "one day with the Lord was as a thousand years, and a thousand years as one day." Nevertheless "the day of the Lord will come as a thief in the night." Therefore, the time for repentance and seeking salvation is during the periods which preceded the second coming of Christ, "even as Paul in all his epistles, speaking in them of these things, in which are some things hard to be understood, which they that are unlearned and unstable wrest, as they do also the other Scriptures, unto their own destruction." The foundation of all the perverted views of the one thousand years' reign in Rev. 20, is the confounding of that period and its events with the reign of Christ on David's throne.

But it is not my purpose in this article to examine the Scriptures which refer to Christ on the throne of his father David, as I intend on a future occasion to show from abundant scriptural testimony, that the reign of Christ on David's throne commenced with the first advent and was to continue through the gospel dispensation, which was the setting up of the tabernacle of David which had fallen down, from which time the twelve apostles were the judges of the twelve tribes. If this is not so, then the whole gospel plan must be in the future, and Jesus of Nazareth died upon the cross in vain. I heartily recommend the perusal of a small pamphlet, now in press and for sale at the Crisis office, on the "Kingdom and throne of Christ," by S. S. Brewer, which is a very timely production in this hour of temptation, when the great adversary by his subtle devices is drawing so many precious souls down to perdition by causing them to believe that "they are apostles, but are not and are found to be liars," and who is causing men to "call them of the synagogue of Satan, which say they are Jews, and are not" the children of the promise.

KIND WORDS.—There is such a rush of all other kind of words in our day, that it seems desirable to give kind words a chance among them. There are vain, idle, silly, hasty, spiteful, empty, profane, boisterous, warlike words. Kind words produce their own image on men's souls, and a beautiful image it is. They soothe, and quiet, and comfort the hearer. We have not yet begun to use kind words in such abundance as they ought to be used. Though they do not cost much, yet they accomplish much. Soft words soften our [illegible]. Angry words are fuel to the flame of wrath, and make it burn more fiercely. Cold words freeze people, hot words scorch them; bitter words make them bitter, and wrathful words make them wrathful.

For the World's Crisis.

THE RESTITUTION.

The glorious kingdom, created from the foundation of the world for man, was the earth. It was made beautiful and lovely in all its parts. Every thing was pronounced good. The sun with its golden beams, the moon with its silvery rays, the twinkling stars, all shone forth the praise of their Creator. The earth brought forth good things spontaneously, every herb bearing seed, every variety of grain; the tree yielding its fruit all for the use of man. The animals were all harmless, and all lived on herbage. God gave them every green herb for food, and "it was so." This was the way they lived; hence being perfectly herbiverous, they were perfectly harmless. He made man in his "image," but little lower than the angels; crowned him with glory and honor, and he was on terms of intimacy with his King,—could walk and talk with him, and did do so. This was the original kingdom prepared for man "from the foundation of the world."

This kingdom was perverted, tarnished, ruined, by the fall of man in his disobedience to God's law; and the sentence of death pronounced on man, and a curse on the earth, with briars, thorns and evil weeds, was the consequence. The animals became fierce, ferocious, carniverous, and began to devour each other, and man lost his original dominion over them.

God in his great mercy laid a plan to restore man. The plan was infinitely wise, and yet very simple. It was this: that another should come and step into the place of Adam, and obey the law, justify and honor it, and then suffer the penalty due to the sinner. A Savior was promised, and in due time he came according to the promise, was born, lived, died, was buried, and rose from the dead a specimen or a first fruit of the resurrection; ascended on high, and there sits as a mediator between God and man.

He will come again by and by, and restore the ruins made by the first Adam. He will raise the dead from their graves, and change the righteous living, and gather them to Mount Zion, the cleansed sanctuary, the mountain of his holiness; and then set up his kingdom. He will restore the earth to its original state of beauty, fertility and loveliness; the tree will yield its fruit, the field its herbs, bearing seed, for the use of man; there will be no briars, thorns or evil weeds; no devouring insects, consuming the fruits of the earth; no sickness, sorrow, pain or death.

The animals will all be harmless, all living on herbage. There will be the wolf and lamb feeding and dwelling together; the lion will be there, feeding as does the ox, living on herbage, straw, hay, grass; there the shepherd will be lying down with the little harmless kid, the calf and fatling and young lion together, the cow and bear will be there, feeding side by side; while the calf and cub will be playing, or lying down together; and a little child shall lead them. Yes, a child shall lead the lion, just as we now see the little boy lead the horse. Being herbiverous, he will of course be harmless, tame, tractable. Thus all the animals will live together in harmony; and there will be nothing to molest or make afraid, in all the new earth. Thus the ruins of Adam will be restored, and God's original plan carried out, and the kingdom prepared, being restored, will abide for ever. The new Jerusalem will become the metropolis of the kingdom of heaven. O! I hope to be a subject of the restored kingdom. Let this kingdom come, is the prayer of

BROTHERLY LOVE.

Saith the apostle, "Let brotherly love continue." Again we are told to "love one another with pure hearts, fervently." There is nothing that draws mankind to God like LOVE. The fact that "GOD IS LOVE," melts the sinner's heart as no other truth will. You may speak of his threatenings, his "fierce anger," his "wrath" and retribution, and it may terrify; but speak of his exceeding love, the gift of his only begotten Son, the death on Calvary, and oh, how wooing to the hardest heart. Mount Sinai's thunders of wrath do not lead men to honor God as the simple tale concerning the life and death of Jesus the Nazarene, and the love he bore for sinners when he bled upon the cross.

"LOVE is the golden chain that binds
Our hearts to God above;
And he's an heir of heaven that finds
His bosom glad with love."

It is natural for us to love those that love us. But Christ and christians love all classes. True, we are not to love the unlovable with the same degree that we love the pure and lovely. And not till a man becomes renewed by the Spirit of God, is it possible for him to love his enemies. The Savior says, "Love your enemies." This is an express command from the Captain of our salvation. Again he says, "Pray for them which despitefully use you and persecute you." The natural man cannot render "good for evil."

There are some professed christians who mix in human love with the divine, so that they love only those who agree with them on peculiar points in theory, overlooking the great principle of love which teaches them to have "fervent charity," wanting which, their understanding "all mysteries" is but as the meaningless sound of tinkling brass. The gospel does not allow us to cover corruption or fellowship robbers; but it certainly teaches us to condemn no one without a hearing. Those who love with "pure hearts" will not be ready to surmise evil, nor believe false reports concerning the household of faith.

The man that can love only those who believe as he does is a bigot. Bigotry is hateful [illegible]. We are not all important in this world. God sends [illegible]

a few others outside of "our" family. God's children have not all the same name, no more than my mother's children were all called John. He loves every one of his children, whether they belong to "our church" or not. The best church is the church of Christ, and the best name is CHRISTIAN. The best "church book" to write one's name on is "the Lamb's book of life." O how much better to stand on the sure rock, than to lean on an arm of flesh. The God of Israel never slumbers nor sleeps, and if we are his children, no harm can befall us. Foes cannot turn him away. His love is everlasting, deep, high, broad, never-failing. May we all continue in his love.

SYMPATHY.

A single tear with feeling shed
O'er sorrow and distress,
Throws sunshine round the aching head,
To cheer, revive, and bless.

One tear,—who has it not to spare?
It is a little thing,
"Yet lifts the soul above despair"
On a bright seraph's wing.

Deem it not vain—a silent tear—
But let it kindly fall;
'T will be a gem to deck your bier
When death's shrill voice shall call.

PRAYER.

"I exhort, therefore, that first of all, supplications, prayers, intercession, and giving of thanks, be made for all men."—PAUL.

To every believer in divine revelation, it must be plainly obvious that it is the duty of all men every where to pray, and more especially the followers of the Lord Jesus Christ. We are not of those, however, who suppose prayer will make our Heavenly Father more kind, or that it will change any thing in the counsels and purposes of God. No; we believe that the benefit resulting from prayer is the salutary and sanctifying influence which it exerts upon those who perform this duty. It serves to remind us of our dependence upon and obligation to God,—to draw out the best affections of the heart in love and gratitude to him,—to elevate our affections and desires; to soften the asperities of our natures, and lead us to set a watch upon our actions, to resist temptation and to encourage and cheer us onward in the performance of those duties which God requires.

We aver that we have never seen any person who faithfully performed this duty of prayer led to commit great crimes, or seldom led into temptation, or ever filled with doubts and fears,—never cast down, discouraged and dejected,—never dishonest, unkind or uncharitable; but they live as it were in the very vestibule of heaven; at all times receiving the smiles and blessings of God with gratitude; dispensing joy and gladness to all around them, and enjoying, ever, a foretaste of happiness and bliss which is reserved in heaven for all God's prayerful and submissive children.

How important it is, then, that the duty of prayer be performed by all who have named the name of Christ. How many blessings are secured by the performance of this duty! And yet how many there are from whom we have a right to expect better things, who appear to consider prayer as altogether a useless and unmeaning ceremony! And thus they live on, week after week, month after month, year after year, and never appear to think of praying in their families or their closets, or of lifting up their voices in thanksgiving to God, although He is constantly watching over them, and showering upon them and spreading out around them his choicest blessings.

My brethren, these things ought not so to be. The records of truth inform us that David, Solomon, the prophets, Jesus Christ, and all the apostles, frequently and fervently prayed,—and the great apostle of the Gentiles, in the passage which heads this article, speaks of prayer as one of the first duties of the christian. If, therefore, we claim to be the disciples of Christ, let us imitate his example.

If there ever was a time for solemn and earnest prayer, it is at the present day. We stand in the midst of dangers, the dire extent of which can surely be conceived. We should exercise the spirit of prayer in our churches, in our closets and around our family altars, beseeching God to turn the tide of this outrageous rebellion. We should beseech God daily to give us the victory over all evil, and that Christ, our deliverer, may soon come and cleanse the earth from all its pollution. God will bless our efforts, and soon deliver his weary Bride from all those grievances her enemies would heap upon her.

HUMBUG.

I was thinking over in my own mind, not long since, what was the definition of the word "humbug"; for I had heard it applied to modern Spiritualism. I got my dictionary to see what Webster had to say about it, and found that he called it an "imposition," "deception"; and I thought that it would apply very appropriately to modern Spiritualism; for of all the impositions that were ever put upon human beings, modern Spiritualism is one of the greatest.

What was the word "humbug" taken from? Is it not a figure of speech, taken from a large sized bug that flies through the air in the darkness of night, and makes a humming noise? They are a very hateful creature, especially those that have horns in front of their eyes; and if a person happens to walk out into the darkness, first he will know, one of those creatures will strike him in the face with those horns, and make a bad sore; for the horns are poisonous. Dear reader, I hope and pray that our loving Redeemer will so enlighten our minds, that you and I may not happen out into moral darkness, so as to permit that dreadful "humbug,"—modern Spiritualism—with its poisonous horns to strike us in the brain, and affect our hearts with its moral poison.

I have seen persons who once were considered as humble, faithful followers of that dear and lovely Savior, who have turned from them, and fully denied him, and adopted Spiritualism. I was once urged very hard by a female Spiritualist to examine the doctrine of Spiritualism; and to reason the case, and see if it would not be safer to trust in communications from the spirit-world, through mediums, than to trust in the Bible, which was written by men. I told her that I should never yield to modern Spiritualism, as long as I could find a Bible that exactly pointed out and described the dreadful delusion, as in the following passages:—"Now the Spirit speaketh expressly, that, in the latter times, some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits and doctrines of devils, speaking lies in hypocrisy," etc. 1 Tim. 4: 1–3.

Now it is a fact that the leaders in modern Spiritualism must adopt two very great errors, and maintain them with all the cunning arguments that they can possibly command, in order that their dreadfully wicked system may have an existence; and one of them is Satan's lie to Eve in the garden; and the other is a positive denial of the Bible.

Let us examine a few more passages. In Rev. 16: 14, we read of "three unclean spirits," that came out of the mouth of the dragon and beast and false prophet; and it is a remarkable fact that these "three unclean spirits" agree in one very important point, for the benefit of their own prosperity; and that is, they all hold that the soul will never die, but lives as a separate entity from the dead body; and as they are declared to be the spirits of devils working miracles, I suppose they all took their doctrine from the head one, who conversed with Eve, and persuaded her that she would live forever, if she did disobey God. I think that modern Spiritualism—the last day humbug—is a prominent work of those unclean spirits; for they work miracles. Now please turn to 2 Peter 2: 1–3, and tell me if he does not exactly describe the sentiments of and the course taken by modern Spiritualists? Do they not deny the Lord that bought them? Do they not speak evil of the way of truth? Do they not try to make merchandise of you? and do not their fruits show that their ways are pernicious?

We will now refer you to the following Scriptures, and close this article: Deut. 18: 10, 11; Isa. 8: 19, 20; Lev. 20: 6; 1 Chron. 10: 13; Lev. 19: 31; Isa. 29: 4. Dear brethren and sisters, let us keep away from every particle of the influence of Spiritualism. Touch not, handle not; and may the good Lord keep us from falling, till Jesus comes.

OLD PAPERS.

I mean those that have been printed in defense of our faith. I love to look them over, they are such good records of our history, beginning back at the times when the brethren were awakened to the evidences of the Lord's coming, and tracing out the "movements" since. I remember the '43 times, and what people said about "Old Miller" and his coadjutors, and their remarks treasured in my memory have been reviewed and their misconceptions and misrepresentations examined. I was but a child then, but I remember how frightened I was sometimes when the people said they talked about the "end of the world" coming.

When the '54 movement was inaugurated, I was just commencing to follow the faint, dim light I could get, and happened to be among those who had intimate relations in the faith, but who were opposed to it, although the thought that the Lord might come (for I was not a post-millenarian) made me tremble in consideration of the possibility of such an event being so near.

But now that I have got the light, and it shines so brightly and beautifully, I am refreshed and instructed by conning over those "old papers," and getting more and more into the spirit of the providential character of the movements that have characterized us as a body. Here they are, some of them discolored by time, and others more bright and fresh. Here is the old "Signs of the Times," containing Father Miller's letters and addresses, and its successor the "Advent Herald," and "Morning Watch," the "Midnight Cry," and our own "Crisis," published in Lowell, edited by Bro. Merr[illegible] circulated every where, without money[illegible].

I used to see the Crisis in those days. I was all "immortal soul," and was shocked at the sacrilegious daring of the friends of the paper when they denied it. I had taken that dogma for granted as much as the existence of a God; but those warm-hearted, earnest letters were always read. (I am making my confession now.)

I did not read the arguments on the "gospel hope" of immortality through Christ alone. In the course of time I did hear them from oral sources, and got my foundation shaken some, but not enough to prevent me going forward in my preparation for the ministry as I had felt it duty to do.

I am glad these old papers have been preserved. I found them with a watching Bro. who has been looking for the Lord these twenty years, and is not tired of waiting yet, but rejoicing that the end is getting nearer every day. Bless God, there are many such who have laid away the "old papers," so full of words of warning, of counsel and comfort. Surely God's "waiting people" have a history that is individualized more than that of the most prosperous [illegible], because all through these times they have been in God's order, working in harmony with the "midnight cry" and "angel's message."

Oh! how often I have longed for the privilege of having been identified with this people through the years that I stood aside and looked on, or acted in a sort of half-hearted way, not bigoted, but willing to recognize all who loved Jesus as christians, whether they believed as I did or not. I might have had the [illegible] and The Crisis kindly sent me years ago, and here is an old paper in which one of my "Methodist" articles is published, when I, like Nicodemus, wrote secretly and only signed the articles "Ho Tis." But my brethren were patient with me, else I should not have been in the faith to-day. I have to thank God for the light I now have, and for the aid of the dear brethren and the "old papers" that helped me to see the present truth.

I wonder, as I look the silent messengers over, at the dealings of God in the matter; for how sublime, how much like God's work with his servants throughout Bible history when special truths have been proclaimed, is all this work. It is not a history of sectarianism. It has been laughed at, called "fanaticism," "Millerism," "Grant-ism," "infidelity," "blasphemy," and almost everything else. We have had clubs thrown through the windows where we held meetings. Bro. Himes has had bottles of ink thrown at his charts. Bro. Grant has been pelted with stones and filthy tobacco quids. We have been derided for venturing out and being "mistaken," "deluded"; but those old papers tell how well the brethren who had the cause at heart stood up for its defense, and now they are encouraged more than ever; for while the black cloud of national calamity grows blacker and fiercer, and the hearts of men are failing for fear, the prospects of the waiting ones are brighter than ever. The "light" of prophecy "shines in a dark place," and soon the "day will dawn and the day-star arise."

We will keep publishing the papers, tracts and books, and preaching, even not counting our lives dear unto ourselves that we may finish our course with joy.

HOLINESS TO THE LORD.

YOU PROFESS IT; DO YOU LIVE IT?

When a weary pilgrim here."

You profess holiness, do you live holiness?—Here lies the test. You tell us you are holy, enjoy the blessing of perfect love; do you practice holiness, live it out? Do you exhibit the fruits of holiness in your family, in your daily and hourly deportment? Is your temper sweet, modest, submissive, Christ-like? Is your walk and conversation such as becometh this high and holy calling? do they bear a living witness to the fact? Do your friends and companions see "holiness to the Lord" beaming forth brightly in every look, every smile, every word, every moving muscle? Do your little ones see this, your husbands, your wives, your neighbors? Do you exhibit the fruits of the inner life in training your children for the Lord, in the way they should go? How is it also in your dietetic habits, your dress, your furniture, your out-goes and in-comes?—in all your business transactions? Does the world take knowledge of your holiness, in providing things honest in the sight of all men? Do you owe any man any thing but love? Are you strictly temperate in eating, drinking, sleeping, in the use of all God's gifts? Is your conversation chaste, meek, modest, benevolent, heavenly? Do you exhibit the fruits of holiness in regard to the poor, the sick, the afflicted, the oppressed? Do you, as Christ commands, remember those in bonds, as bound with them? Are you always ready to open your lips, "defend the poor and fatherless," do justice to the afflicted and needy, rid them out of the hand of the wicked, seek judgment, relieve the oppressed, judge the fatherless, plead for the widows? Do you every where bear testimony against novel readings and novel puffings, intemperance in the use of strong drink and tobacco in every form, the sin of oppression, the spirit of caste, the pride of aristocracy, and every secret abomination? These are test questions, standing out in bold relief, and cannot be lightly passed over, especially by those who profess the higher walks. The eye of God is upon us, the eyes of angels, of the just made perfect, the world's eagle eye also, and its gainsayings.

GOLD.

Wear gold. Does he? Not a particle. He laid it aside for conscience' sake. How could he consistently reprove others for disobeying God, when at the same time he gratified a false taste in ornamentals? How can any minister rebuke sin lawfully who lives in sin? "Physician, heal thyself!" How can that man stand before his audience boldly against all fashionable folly, who, meanwhile, wears a gold breast-pin, hangs out his dazzling watch-chain, seal and key, to look pretty? How can that woman tipped off in gewgaws, gay ornamentals, gold, pearls and costly array,—directly in opposition to the Holy Spirit dictation, honor the Savior, who says, "Be not conformed to this world"?

Adorning self with so much art
Is but a savage skill;
Or like the poisoning of a dart,
Too apt before to kill.

What saith the Bible? "Whose adorning, let it not be that outward adorning of . . . wearing of gold, or of putting on of apparel; but let it be the hidden man of the heart, in that which is not corruptible, even the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit, which is in the sight of God of great price."—*Selected by H. TESTIMONY.

"And they overcame him by the blood of the Lamb, and by the word of their testimony."—Rev. 12: 11.

Nothing is so convincing as testimony when believed; nothing so indelible as experience. Therefore let us have testimony from experience in our papers, in our meetings, and every where; even upon doctrine, let the testimony flow from the well-spring of experience,—I believed, therefore have I spoken,—and the influence will be felt. Testimony is what comes from the heart; and what comes from the heart reaches the heart. Amen.

After writing the above, and while before the precious family altar, a testimony was brought to my mind that caused the suppressed shout—Glory to God! I am pressed in spirit to present it here.

"He clasped his hands, and looking upward—Yes, I love Him. I love every body—and war."

These are the dying words of Edward J. Tibbets, youngest son of Samuel and Mary J. Tibbetts, who fell mortally wounded at Ringgold, and died four days after, Mar. 1st, '64. He was a youth of scarce eighteen summers, and tenderly reared for God. Had been for several years an active member of College Hill Baptist church, Jefferson Co., Ind.

When expostulated with by his parents that he was too young—that he could not endure the hardships of a soldier's life three months, he replied,

"If I knew I could not endure it three weeks, I feel that I must go: my name must be in this struggle. Should I stay at home to enjoy its comforts I could have no countenance to meet my associates when they return to share the liberties so nobly fought for." And, strange to record, in just three weeks from the time of his arrival at the fort, he was called into action, and fell!

His mother was to me, in my early christian life, what Jonathan was to David. I loved her as my own soul. And now, after these many years of separation, comes this note of lamentation from this weeping Rachel; and my soul is stirred within me. I am moved to ask, Why this bereavement? To ask, Who is this wicked Herod who decrees such bloody sacrifices for the mothers of Israel? I am constrained to testify against him as the Juggernaut of modern Christendom. Is this christianity that thus calls upon her sons to prostrate themselves before her car and be crushed? This is christianity, but I testify against it that

It is not the christianity of the Bible. It is not the christianity that gushed from the lips of the dying boy—"No war, no rebels. I love every body." Precious testimony! worthy to be in everlasting remembrance. May it be inscribed upon his tombstone.

This is Bible christianity—universal love. "Love your enemies, do good to them which hate you, bless them that curse you, and pray for them which despitefully use you." "And unto him that smiteth thee on the one cheek offer also the other; and him that taketh away thy cloak forbid not to take thy coat also. Give to every man that asketh of thee; and of him that taketh away thy goods ask them not again." "And as ye would that men should do to you, do ye also to them likewise." Glory be to Jesus for such a religion, sealed with his blood! And he says to each of his followers, "Go thou and do likewise."

Were these sacred principles taught from the "sacred desk," should we have such weeping Rachels, such mourning Jacobs? Had this bone and sinew entered into its teachings, what a phalanx of young men, immolated upon this modern Moloch, might now have been wielding the weapons of our warfare which are not carnal, but mighty through God to the pulling down of strong holds, and gaining many a victory for the Prince of peace in saving men's lives instead of destroying them; and at the same time have been rewarding the labor of their pious parents, and been their stay in their declining years.

My soul is pierced for you, but my God gives me a cup of consolation even for you. "Even the youths shall faint and be weary, and the young men shall utterly fall: but they that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength; they shall mount up with wings as eagles; they shall run and not be weary; they shall walk and not faint."—Isa. 40: 30, 31.

Must utterly fail the proud flag to sustain,
And the cup of God's fury in war's desolation
Must humble all kingdoms ere Jesus [illegible]."

"For our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory."—2 Cor. 4: 17. Then, dear friends, take the cup of salvation and call upon the Lord. Pay your vows unto the Lord now in the presence of all his people. "Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints."—Ps. 116: 13–15.

Jesus touched the servant of the high priest, and healed his ear; and how much more will he, as the Good Samaritan, heal the wounds which the sword has made in the hearts of his dear children. Look to him. He will give you a name, and a place in his house and within his walls better than that of sons and of daughters here, even an everlasting name that shall not be cut off. (Isa. 56: 5.) And them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him. 1 Thess. 4: 14. Amen. Glory to God. "There is hope in thine end, saith the Lord, that thy children shall come again to their own border."—Jer. 31: 17. "Thus saith the Lord; Refrain thy voice from weeping, and thine eyes from tears: for thy work shall be rewarded, saith the Lord; and they shall come again from the land of the enemy." [illegible] drawing nigh. Wherefore comfort one another with these words.

Your Sister in the same blessed hope,

CONFIDENCE.

I trust thee, O Father, though rough be the way,
Thy rod and thy staff are my strength and my stay;
Thou knowest the dangers that lie before me,
And every event of my life thou canst see.

O Father in heaven, most blessed of all,
How oft hast thou kept me when ready to fall;
How oft 'mid the darkness of this dreary land
I've had thy dear presence—felt led by thy hand;

And oft when high billows would furiously roll,
And lightnings be flashing from pole unto pole,—
How oft when my heart was all faint and dismayed,
Thou'st whispered, "'Tis I, child, O, be not afraid!"

Dear Jesus, how precious thou art unto me;
O may I not wander, dear Savior, from thee;
But let me still be by thy gentle hand led,
And may thy rich grace in my soul e'er be shed.

And when the last trumpet shall peal its last sound,
May I with the ransomed immortal be found;
O! bring me to see thee in Paradise then,
To dwell in thy presence forever, Amen.

MAN AS HE WAS, IS, AND IS TO BE.

BY JOHN F. BELT.

NUMBER SIX.

IMMORTALITY AND INCORRUPTIBILITY

The terms "immortal and incorruptible" are opposed to mortal and corruptible, and are to be understood in the sense of a state or condition which is the opposite, the one to the other. When Adam lost the right to the tree of life, and the "flaming sword" was placed so as to prevent access to its fruit, he and his posterity became mortal, and consequently were corruptible and thereby subjected to death from natural causes. But when "all things are made new" the mortal things will cease to be. "And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes, and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain; for the former things are passed away." Rev. 21: 4. Then as the human family become mortal and corruptible by reason of the lost access to the right of way, all who are counted worthy to regain access to its healing fruits will become immortal and live forever. "Blessed are they who do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city." Rev. 22: 14. Therefore, as God alone hath immortality in himself, and hath given to the Son to have life in himself, immortality or eternal life is the free gift of the Father, which will only be obtained through Jesus Christ; consequently no one can have absolute immortality independent of the healing tree. Hence the Revelator showed to John "A pure river of water of life, clear as crystal, proceeding out of the throne of God and of the Lamb. In the midst of the street of it and on either side of the river, was there the tree of life, which bare twelve manner of fruits, and yielded her fruit every month; and the leaves of the tree were for the healing of the nations." Rev. 22: 1, 2.

The first two chapters in the book of Genesis are in perfect contrast with the last two chapters of Revelation. Moses records the history of man's creation in the beginning, when the material universe was made, together with the ruin of the race by reason of disobeying the commandment of God by Adam, the head and representative of the human family, whose sin brought them into a state of mortality and corruptibility. John records what is to be in the regenesis and the future life, when what was lost in Adam will be restored by Jesus Christ. Therefore, as the nations of the earth from the beginning to the end of the world were subjected to all the evils of mortality in the constitution of their bodies and minds, the effects of the corrupted blood which sustained the life they all derived from the parent stock, the cure must come through Christ, who is the second Adam, who "was made a quickening spirit:" hence he has said, "To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the tree of life, which is in the midst of the paradise of God." Rev. 2: 7. Then as the tree of life is in the midst of the street of the great city where the throne of God and of the Lamb is to be, from which throne proceeds the river of the water of life, none of the ruined nations will be healed but those out of every nation, kindred and tongue who have kept his commandments, which will then constitute "the nations" of them which are saved." And since no sickness nor pain will enter there, the healing must refer to a change of this mortal to the immortal state, when they will be made to conserve their lives forever by virtue of the leaves, or fruit, of the tree of life. Then this mortal shall have put on immortality, and the things of this earthly house which are temporal, shall have been dissolved and passed away, having been superseded by the heavenly house, which are the things eternal.

The commonly received view, that the righteous [illegible]

grave. But they will not put on immortality until "all things are made new," and the temporal things are superceded by the things which are eternal. The apostle says "we shall all be changed." The earthly life was derived from and sustained by the blood which flowed from Adam's veins and was corruptible. But in the resurrection they will be born from the dead by the quickening Spirit of God, which also raised the body of Christ from the tomb.

Then as Jesus did not enter into his glory with the Father until many days had expired, so will it be with his covenant people, their bodies will not be glorified and made immortal until "the tabernacle of God is with men." Otherwise, how can this body be changed unless "this mortal puts on immortality," which Paul declares will be brought to pass when "death is swallowed up in victory"?

It was to this end that it was said to John on Patmos, "Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection, on such the second death hath no power; but they shall be priests of God and of Christ, and shall reign with him a thousand years." And as the time is the intervening space between the resurrection of "those who are Christ's at his coming" and the rest of the dead who are to live again when "the thousand years are ended," they must reign with him in his pavilion "on the sea of glass," for it is not stated anywhere in the Bible that the saints are to reign on the earth for one thousand years; but it is repeatedly declared that when they do reign on the earth, it will be when they are to possess it forever.

It was the first Adam that broke creation into fragments and ruined the human race. It is the second Adam that is to restore creation in all its parts and make it one again. That restitution begins with the resurrection of the just, when all the saints are caught up to meet him in the air. It is in that pavilion where the marriage-table will be spread, and the bride will take her place of honor. The chosen ones will then be at rest in the ark which soars above the fiery deluge, where the song of deliverance will be sung. Standing there on the sea of glass, they will behold the righteous judgment of God made manifest over all the earth. And being there acknowledged and confessed before the Father's face, and before the holy angels, they will form his retinue when he comes to execute judgment on the host of the wicked "Gog" that the devil leads against him.

This will all take place in the period which Peter calls "the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men." It is when the earth will be dissolved and the elements melt with fervent heat. It is to the end that the wicked may be destroyed, and the earth be renewed by fire, that the saints are caught up into the air. When the Old World was destroyed by the flood, righteous Noah and his family were first placed in the ark before the rain descended upon the doomed ones. So was Lot and his family removed from Sodom, before the deluge of fire consumed the wicked people in it. The reason assigned by the angel was, "I cannot do any thing till thou be come thither." In every instance when the wicked were destroyed, God first removed his people from the reach of the evil to come. And he was not slack concerning his promise, but was long-suffering, not willing that any should perish, but that they should come to repentance.

During those periods of extended mercy "one day with the Lord was as a thousand years, and a thousand years as one day." Nevertheless "the day of the Lord will come as a thief in the night." Therefore, the time for repentance and seeking salvation is during the periods which preceded the second coming of Christ, "even as Paul in all his epistles, speaking in them of these things, in which are some things hard to be understood, which they that are unlearned and unstable wrest, as they do also the other Scriptures, unto their own destruction." The foundation of all the perverted views of the one thousand years' reign in Rev. 20, is the confounding of that period and its events with the reign of Christ on David's throne.

But it is not my purpose in this article to examine the Scriptures which refer to Christ on the throne of his father David, as I intend on a future occasion to show from abundant scriptural testimony, that the reign of Christ on David's throne commenced with the first advent and was to continue through the gospel dispensation, which was the setting up of the tabernacle of David which had fallen down, from which time the twelve apostles were the judges of the twelve tribes. If this is not so, then the whole gospel plan must be in the future, and Jesus of Nazareth died upon the cross in vain. I heartily recommend the perusal of a small pamphlet, now in press and for sale at the Crisis office, on the "Kingdom and throne of Christ," by S. S. Brewer, which is a very timely production in this hour of temptation, when the great adversary by his subtle devices is drawing so many precious souls down to perdition by causing them to believe that they are apostles, but are not and are found to be liars, and who is causing men to call them of the synagogue of Satan, which say they are Jews, and are not" the children of the promise.

KIND WORDS.—There is such a rush of all other kind of words in our day, that it seems desirable to give kind words a chance among them. There are vain, idle, silly, hasty, spiteful, empty, profane, boisterous, warlike words. Kind words produce their own image on men's souls, and a beautiful image it is. They soothe, and quiet, and comfort the hearer. We have not yet begun to use kind words in such abundance as they ought to be used. Though they do not cost much, yet they accomplish much. THE RESTITUTION.

The glorious kingdom, created from the foundation of the world for man, was the earth. It was made beautiful and lovely in all its parts. Every thing was pronounced good. The sun with its golden beams, the moon with its silvery rays, the twinkling stars, all shone forth the praise of their Creator. The earth brought forth good things spontaneously, every herb bearing seed, every variety of grain; the tree yielding its fruit, all for the use of man. The animals were all harmless, and all lived on herbage. God gave them every green herb for food, and "it was so." This was the way they lived; hence being perfectly herbiverous, they were perfectly harmless. He made man in his "image," but little lower than the angels; crowned him with glory and honor, and he was on terms of intimacy with his King,—could walk and talk with him, and did do so. This was the original kingdom prepared for man "from the foundation of the world."

This kingdom was perverted, tarnished, ruined, by the fall of man in his disobedience to God's law; and the sentence of death pronounced on man, and a curse on the earth, with briars, thorns and evil weeds, was the consequence. The animals became fierce, ferocious, carniverous, and began to devour each other, and man lost his original dominion over them.

God in his great mercy laid a plan to restore man. The plan was infinitely wise, and yet very simple. It was this: that another should come and step into the place of Adam, and obey the law, justify and honor it, and then suffer the penalty due to the sinner. A Savior was promised, and in due time he came according to the promise, was born, lived, died, was buried, and rose from the dead a specimen or a first fruit of the resurrection; ascended on high, and there sits as a mediator between God and man.

He will come again by and by, and restore the ruins made by the first Adam. He will raise the dead from their graves, and change the righteous living, and gather them to Mount Zion, the cleansed sanctuary, the mountain of his holiness; and then set up his kingdom. He will restore the earth to its original state of beauty, fertility and loveliness; the tree will yield its fruit, the field its herbs, bearing seed, for the use of man; there will be no briars, thorns or evil weeds; no devouring insects, consuming the fruits of the earth; no sickness, sorrow, pain or death.

The animals will all be harmless, all living on herbage. There will be the wolf and lamb feeding and dwelling together; the lion will be there, feeding as does the ox, living on herbage, straw, hay, grass; there the shepherd will be lying down with the little harmless kid, the calf and fatling and young lion together, the cow and bear will be there, feeding side by side; while the calf and cub will be playing, or lying down together; and a little child shall lead them. Yes, a child shall lead the lion, just as we now see the little boy lead the horse. Being herbiverous, he will of course be harmless, tame, tractable. Thus all the animals will live together in harmony; and there will be nothing to molest or make afraid, in all the new earth. Thus the ruins of Adam will be restored, and God's original plan carried out, and the kingdom prepared, being restored, will abide for ever. The new Jerusalem will become the metropolis of the kingdom of heaven. O! I hope to be a subject of the restored kingdom. Let this kingdom come, is the prayer of

BROTHERLY LOVE.

Saith the apostle, "Let brotherly love continue." Again we are told to "love one another with pure hearts, fervently." There is nothing that draws mankind to God like LOVE. The fact that "GOD IS LOVE," melts the sinner's heart as no other truth will. You may speak of his threatenings, his "fierce anger," his "wrath" and retribution, and it may terrify; but speak of his exceeding love, the gift of his only begotten Son, the death on Calvary, and oh, how wooing to the hardest heart. Mount Sinai's thunders of wrath do not lead men to honor God as the simple tale concerning the life and death of Jesus the Nazarene, and the love he bore for sinners when he bled upon the cross.

"Love is the golden chain that binds
Our hearts to God above;
And he's an heir of heaven that finds
His bosom glad with love."

It is natural for us to love those that love us. But Christ and christians love all classes. True, we are not to love the unlovable with the same degree that we love the pure and lovely. And not till a man becomes renewed by the Spirit of God, is it possible for him to love his enemies. The Savior says, "Love your enemies." This is an express command from the Captain of our salvation. Again he says, "Pray for them which despitefully use you and persecute you." The natural man cannot render "good for evil."

There are some professed christians who mix in human love with the divine, so that they love only those who agree with them on peculiar points in theory, overlooking the great principle of love which teaches them to have "fervent charity," wanting which, their understanding "all mysteries" is but as the meaningless sound of tinkling brass. The gospel does not allow us to cover corruption or fellowship robbers; but it certainly teaches us to condemn no one without a hearing. Those who love with "pure hearts" will not be ready to surmise evil, nor believe false reports [illegible]

a few others outside of "our" family. God's children have not all the same name, no more than my mother's children were all called John. He loves every one of his children, whether they belong to "our church" or not. The best church is the church of Christ, and the best name is CHRISTIAN. The best "church book" to write one's name on is "the Lamb's book of life." O how much better to stand on the sure rock, than to lean on an arm of flesh. The God of Israel never slumbers nor sleeps, and if we are his children, no harm can befall us. Foes cannot turn him away. His love is everlasting, deep, high, broad, never-failing. May we all continue in his love.

SYMPATHY.

A single tear with feeling shed
O'er sorrow and distress,
Throws sunshine round the aching head,
To cheer, revive, and bless.

One tear,—who has it not to spare?
It is a little thing,
"Yet lifts the soul above despair"
On a bright seraph's wing.

Deem it not vain—a silent tear—
But let it kindly fall;
'T will be a gem to deck your bier
When death's shrill voice shall call.

PRAYER.

"I exhort, therefore, that first of all, supplications, prayers, intercession, and giving of thanks, be made for all men."—PAUL.

To every believer in divine revelation, it must be plainly obvious that it is the duty of all men every where to pray, and more especially the followers of the Lord Jesus Christ. We are not of those, however, who suppose prayer will make our Heavenly Father more kind, or that it will change any thing in the counsels and purposes of God. No; we believe that the benefit resulting from prayer is the salutary and sanctifying influence which it exerts upon those who perform this duty. It serves to remind us of our dependence upon and obligation to God,—to draw out the best affections of the heart in love and gratitude to him,—to elevate our affections and desires; to soften the asperities of our natures, and lead us to set a watch upon our actions, to resist temptation and to encourage and cheer us onward in the performance of those duties which God requires.

We aver that we have never seen any person who faithfully performed this duty of prayer led to commit great crimes, or seldom led into temptation, or ever filled with doubts and fears,—never cast down, discouraged and dejected,—never dishonest, unkind or uncharitable; but they live as it were in the very vestibule of heaven; at all times receiving the smiles and blessings of God with gratitude; dispensing joy and gladness to all around them, and enjoying, ever, a foretaste of happiness and bliss which is reserved in heaven for all God's prayerful and submissive children.

How important it is, then, that the duty of prayer be performed by all who have named the name of Christ. How many blessings are secured by the performance of this duty! And yet how many there are from whom we have a right to expect better things, who appear to consider prayer as altogether a useless and unmeaning ceremony! And thus they live on, week after week, month after month, year after year, and never appear to think of praying in their families or their closets, or of lifting up their voices in thanksgiving to God, although He is constantly watching over them, and showering upon them and spreading out around them his choicest blessings.

My brethren, these things ought not so to be. The records of truth inform us that David, Solomon, the prophets, Jesus Christ, and all the apostles, frequently and fervently prayed,—and the great apostle of the Gentiles, in the passage which heads this article, speaks of prayer as one of the first duties of the christian. If, therefore, we claim to be the disciples of Christ, let us imitate his example.

If there ever was a time for solemn and earnest prayer, it is at the present day. We stand in the midst of dangers, the dire extent of which can surely be conceived. We should exercise the spirit of prayer in our churches, in our closets and around our family altars, beseeching God to turn the tide of this outrageous rebellion. We should beseech God daily to give us the victory over all evil, and that Christ, our deliverer, may soon come and cleanse the earth from all its pollution. God will bless our efforts, and soon deliver his weary Bride from all those grievances her enemies would heap upon her. J. ELKINS.

HUMBUG.

I was thinking over in my own mind, not long since, what was the definition of the word "humbug"; for I had heard it applied to modern Spiritualism. I got my dictionary to see what Webster had to say about it, and found that he called it an "imposition," "deception"; and I thought that it would apply very appropriately to modern Spiritualism; for of all the impositions that were ever put upon human beings, modern Spiritualism is one of the greatest.

What was the word "humbug" taken from? Is it not a figure of speech, taken from a large sized bug that flies through the air in the darkness of night, and makes a humming noise? They are a very hateful creature, especially those that have horns in front of their eyes; and if a person happens to walk out into the darkness, [illegible] will know, one of [illegible] lighten our minds, that you and I may not happen out into moral darkness, so as to permit that dreadful "humbug,"—modern Spiritualism—with its poisonous horns to strike us in the brain, and affect our hearts with its moral poison.

I have seen persons who once were considered as humble, faithful followers of that dear and lovely Savior, who have turned from them, and fully denied him, and adopted Spiritualism. I was once urged very hard by a female Spiritualist to examine the doctrine of Spiritualism; and to reason the case, and see if it would not be safer to trust in communications from the spirit-world, through mediums, than to trust in the Bible, which was written by men. I told her that I should never yield to modern Spiritualism, as long as I could find a Bible that exactly pointed out and described the dreadful delusion, as in the following passages:—"Now the Spirit speaketh expressly, that, in the latter times, some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits and doctrines of devils, speaking lies in hypocrisy," etc. 1 Tim. 4: 1–3.

Now it is a fact that the leaders in modern Spiritualism must adopt two very great errors, and maintain them with all the cunning arguments that they can possibly command, in order that their dreadfully wicked system may have an existence; and one of them is Satan's lie to Eve in the garden; and the other is a positive denial of the Bible.

Let us examine a few more passages. In Rev. 16: 14, we read of "three unclean spirits," that came out of the mouth of the dragon and beast and false prophet; and it is a remarkable fact that these "three unclean spirits" agree in one very important point, for the benefit of their own prosperity; and that is, they all hold that the soul will never die, but lives as a separate entity from the dead body; and as they are declared to be the spirits of devils working miracles, I suppose they all took their doctrine from the head one, who conversed with Eve, and persuaded her that she would live forever, if she did disobey God. I think that modern Spiritualism—the last day humbug—is a prominent work of those unclean spirits; for they work miracles. Now please turn to 2 Peter 2: 1–3, and tell me if he does not exactly describe the sentiments of and the course taken by modern Spiritualists? Do they not deny the Lord that bought them? Do they not speak evil of the way of truth? Do they not try to make merchandise of you? and do not their fruits show that their ways are pernicious?

We will now refer you to the following Scriptures, and close this article: Deut. 18: 10, 11; Isa. 8: 19, 20; Lev. 20: 6; 1 Chron. 10: 13; Lev. 19: 31; Isa. 29: 4. Dear brethren and sisters, let us keep away from every particle of the influence of Spiritualism. Touch not, handle not; and may the good Lord keep us from falling, till Jesus comes.

OLD PAPERS.

I mean those that have been printed in defense of our faith. I love to look them over, they are such good records of our history, beginning back at the times when the brethren were awakened to the evidences of the Lord's coming, and tracing out the "movements" since. I remember the '43 times, and what people said about "Old Miller" and his coadjutors, and their remarks treasured in my memory have been reviewed and their misconceptions and misrepresentations examined. I was but a child then, but I remember how frightened I was sometimes when the people said they talked about the "end of the world" coming.

When the '54 movement was inaugurated, I was just commencing to follow the faint, dim light I could get, and happened to be among those who had intimate relations in the faith, but who were opposed to it, although the thought that the Lord might come (for I was not a post-millenarian) made me tremble in consideration of the possibility of such an event being so near.

But now that I have got the light, and it shines so brightly and beautifully, I am refreshed and instructed by conning over those "old papers," and getting more and more into the spirit of the providential character of the movements that have characterized us as a body. Here they are, some of them discolored by time, and others more bright and fresh. Here is the old "Signs of the Times," containing Father Miller's letters and addresses, and its successor the "Advent Herald," and "Morning Watch," the "Midnight Cry," and our own "Crisis" published in Lowell, edited by Bro. [illegible] circulated every where, without money [illegible].

I used to see the Crisis in those days. I was all "immortal soul," and was shocked at the sacrilegious daring of the friends of the paper when they denied it. I had taken that dogma for granted as much as the existence of a God; but those warm-hearted, earnest letters were always read. (I am making my confession now.)

I did not read the arguments on the "gospel hope" of immortality through Christ alone. In the course of time I did hear them from oral sources, and got my foundation shaken some, but not enough to prevent me going forward in my preparation for the ministry as I had felt it duty to do.

I am glad these old papers have been preserved. I found them with a watching Bro., who has been looking for the Lord these twenty years, and is not tired of waiting, only has rejoicing that the end is getting nearer every day. [illegible]

[illegible] times they have been in God's order, working in harmony with the "midnight cry" and "gospel message."

Oh! how often I have longed for the privilege of having been identified with this people through the years that I stood aside and looked on, or acted in a sort of half-hearted way, not bigoted, but willing to recognize all who loved Jesus as christians, whether they believed as I did or not. I might have had the [illegible] and The Crisis [illegible] years ago, and here is an old paper in which one of my "Methodist" articles is published, when I, like Nicodemus, wrote secretly and only signed the articles "Ho Tis." But my brethren were patient with me, else I should not have been in the faith to-day. I have to thank God for the light I now have, and for the aid of the dear brethren and the "old papers" that helped me to see the present truth.

I wonder, as I look the silent messengers over, at the dealings of God in the matter; for how sublime, how much like God's work with his servants throughout Bible history when special truths have been proclaimed, is all this work. It is not a history of sectarianism. It has been laughed at, called "fanaticism," "Millerism," "Grant-ism," "infidelity," "blasphemy," and almost everything else. We have had clubs thrown through the windows where we held meetings. Bro. Himes has had bottles of ink thrown at his charts. Bro. Grant has been pelted with stones and filthy tobacco quids. We have been derided for venturing out and being "mistaken," "deluded"; but those old papers tell how well the brethren who had the cause at heart stood up for its defense, and now they are encouraged more than ever; for while the black cloud of national calamity grows blacker and fiercer, and the hearts of men are failing for fear, the prospects of the waiting ones are brighter than ever. The "light" of prophecy "shines in a dark place," and soon the "day will dawn and the day-star arise."

We will keep publishing the papers, tracts and books, and preaching, even not counting our lives dear unto ourselves that we may finish our course with joy.

HOLINESS TO THE LORD.

YOU PROFESS IT; DO YOU LIVE IT?

When a weary pilgrim here."

You profess holiness, do you live holiness?—Here lies the test. You tell us you are holy, enjoy the blessing of perfect love; do you practice holiness, live it out? Do you exhibit the fruits of holiness in your family, in your daily and hourly deportment? Is your temper sweet, modest, submissive, Christ-like? Is your walk and conversation such as becometh this high and holy calling? do they bear a living witness to the fact? Do your friends and companions see "holiness to the Lord" beaming forth brightly in every look, every smile, every word, every moving muscle? Do your little ones see this, your husbands, your wives, your neighbors? Do you exhibit the fruits of the inner life in training your children for the Lord, in the way they should go? How is it also in your dietetic habits, your dress, your furniture, your out-goes and in-comes?—in all your business transactions? Does the world take knowledge of your holiness, in providing things honest in the sight of all men? Do you owe any man any thing but love? Are you strictly temperate in eating, drinking, sleeping, in the use of all God's gifts? Is your conversation chaste, meek, modest, benevolent, heavenly? Do you exhibit the fruits of holiness in regard to the poor, the sick, the afflicted, the oppressed? Do you, as Christ commands, remember those in bonds, as bound with them? Are you always ready to open your lips, "defend the poor and fatherless," do justice to the afflicted and needy, rid them out of the hand of the wicked, seek judgment, relieve the oppressed, judge the fatherless, plead for the widows? Do you every where bear testimony against novel readings and novel puffings, intemperance in the use of strong drink and tobacco in every form, the sin of oppression, the spirit of caste, the pride of aristocracy, and every secret abomination? These are test questions, standing out in bold relief, and cannot be lightly passed over, especially by those who profess the higher walks. The eye of God is upon us, the eyes of angels, of the just made perfect, the world's eagle eye also, and its gainsayings.

GOLD.

Wear gold. Does he? Not a particle. He laid it aside for conscience' sake. How could he consistently reprove others for disobeying God, when at the same time he gratified a false taste in ornamentals? How can any minister rebuke sin lawfully who lives in sin? "Physician, heal thyself!" How can that man stand before his audience boldly against all fashionable folly, who, meanwhile, wears a gold breast-pin, hangs out his dazzling watch-chain, seal and key, to look pretty? How can that woman tipped off in gewgaws, gay ornamentals, gold, pearls and costly array,—directly in opposition to the Holy Spirit dictation, honor the Savior, who says, "Be not conformed to this world"?

When expostulated with by his parents that he was too young—that he could not endure the hardships of a soldier's life three years, he replied,

"If I knew I could not endure it three months, I feel that I must go: my name must be in this struggle. Should I stay at home to enjoy its comforts I could have no confidence to meet my associates when they return to enjoy the liberties so nobly fought for." And, strange to record, in just three weeks from the time of his arrival at the fort, he was called into action, and fell.

His mother was to me, in my early christian life, what Jonathan was to David. I loved her as my own soul. And now, after these many years of separation, comes this note of lamentation from this weeping Rachel; and my soul is stirred within me. I am moved to ask, Why this bereavement? I ask, Who is this wicked Herod who demands such bloody sacrifices for the mothers of Israel? I am constrained to testify against him as the Juggernaut of modern Christendom. Is this christianity that thus calls upon her sons to prostrate themselves before her car, and be crushed? This is christianity, but I testify against it that [illegible]

It is not the christianity of the Bible. It is not the christianity that gushed from the lips of the dying boy—"No war, no rebels,—I love every body." Precious testimony! worthy to be in everlasting remembrance. May it be inscribed upon his tombstone.

This is Bible christianity—universal love. "Love your enemies, do good to them which hate you, bless them that curse you, and pray for them which despitefully use you." "And unto him that smiteth thee on the one cheek offer also the other; and him that taketh away thy cloak forbid not to take thy coat also. Give to every man that asketh of thee; and of him that taketh away thy goods ask them not again." "And as ye would that men should do to you, do ye also to them likewise." Glory be to Jesus for such a religion, sealed with his blood! And he says to each of his followers, "Go thou and do likewise."

Were these sacred principles taught from the "sacred desk," should we have such weeping Rachels, such mourning Jacobs? Had this bone and sinew entered into its teachings, what a phalanx of young men, invulnerable upon this modern Moloch, might now have been wielding the weapons of our warfare which are not carnal, but mighty through God to the pulling down of strong holds, and gaining many a victory for the Prince of peace, in saving men's lives instead of destroying them; and at the same time, have been promoting the labor of their [illegible] their stay in their declining years [illegible].

PIONEERING.—NO. 5.

June 9th. Started for the discussion at Floyd; preached Saturday and Sunday to an attentive congregation who were looking forward with great anxiety to the coming contest, which commenced on Tuesday, June 14th.

The discussion was held in a comfortable Methodist meeting-house. The house was well seated, some coming fifteen miles and returning each day. The numbers increased until the gallery and every place was crowded full. And I must say a more respectable and well behaved audience I never had before me in a debate. There were but few of our ministers present. Bro. Hough was so engaged in a meeting about thirty miles off that he could not be there. But the Lord was with us in answer to prayer. I never felt more sustained in my life; and besides those of like precious faith, there was many a cheering word dropped in my ear by the unconverted. God bless them, and lead them to the rock that is higher than we. I was repeatedly called infidel, a gambler, and accused of using trickery, etc., etc. And as one-half of the time was not enough for them, they put up one of their preachers to preach at night, by whom many things were said. He told them if he was one of these sugar-coated infidels, he would get down on all fours, lop his ears and go to the woods, and seek a lower race of animals. Are they not "fierce despisers"? Lord, pity them. I stayed over the next Lord's day, and did all the preaching. But the Lord gave me favor with the people. There were three baptized and ten taken into the church.

I believe more fully than ever that the "dead know not any thing," and by the grace of God I shall proclaim it as long as it is in my power. I formed some acquaintances by this opportunity that will not soon be forgotten. Eld. Cary, of the Disciple church, was present. If desired, the debate on the "Kingdom," can be published in full.

I would say that the brethren and friends helped me well as God had prospered them. We arrived home the 23d of June, since which time we have been scarcely three days without rain, and crops are looking good, except those hurt by the bugs.

CONFERENCE AT HOLLISTON, MS.

The conference at Holliston commenced Saturday morning, July 9th, and continued over Sabbath. There were brethren and sisters from Ashland, Framingham, Natick, and Dover, most of whom came on the first train Saturday morning and remained with us over the Lord's day.

We had an excellent meeting, characterized throughout with christian love and union. There was not a prayer made, a hymn sung, nor a word of exhortation given, which did not appear to be in perfect union with the word and Spirit of God. No strife about words to no profit, no doting about questions whereof cometh envy and perverse disputings, but perfect harmony reigned throughout the meeting.

The prayer and conference meetings, which were continued from an hour to an hour and a half preceding the preaching in the morning, P. M., and evening, were exceedingly interesting and profitable. It was really a feast of fat things to the church at Holliston to meet so many of like precious faith from the adjoining towns, who were of the same mind, and all looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ. All seemed to be impressed with the idea that it was the Lord's meeting, in which all had something to do. We all felt that we were encouraged, strengthened, and blessed, in our endeavors to do the will of the Lord.

Bro. H. L. Hastings preached to us five times during the conference, upon subjects that were both interesting and instructive. The church have purchased a family Bible, in which each brother and sister writes their own name in the family record; thus disposing with all written covenants, creeds, resolves, and rules of discipline for church government, except what they find in the pure word of testimony, believing that the word of God alone is sufficient "for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness, that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works." And in accordance with that word, there was an ordination during the afternoon service of Sunday, when Bro. J. N. Sherman was set apart and ordained as their Elder, and Bro. James Sherman was ordained as their deacon; also Bro. G. A. Cole, who has preached some four or five years, and who has recently moved into this place from Boston, was ordained as an Evangelist. After the afternoon service, the death and sufferings of our Redeemer were commemorated by the observance of the Lord's passover. The religious interest for the salvation of sinners from death still continues. The prayer and conference meeting last Saturday evening was very interesting. One rose for prayers. May the Lord still bless, and many more be added to their number. H. K. FLAGG.

WILBRAHAM.

Remember the campmeeting at Wilbraham is appointed to begin Aug. 22nd, and close Aug. 29th. Are you going? Don't say, "I can't leave my business." Where can you better spend your week of vacation? Don't say, "It will cost too much." You may obtain that which will be of more real value to you than all the treasures of the world.

Get ready,—be there from its commencement to its close. Try to get others to go with you. "Come thou with us, and we will do thee good."

TO WHOM IT MAY CONCERN.

We sometimes have crossing duties to perform. We have one now: it is to say that we must again send bills to all who are owing two dollars and over for the Crisis. We should like to get along without doing this. But our bills must be paid; and we are dependent on friends, to whom we send "our paper," for the means with which to do it. As money is quite plenty now, we think our patrons will find it a favorable time to pay what is now due us. We have endeavored to wait on all patiently, and have no disposition to oppress any one; but if those who are owing the office money will make a little extra effort at this time to pay a part or all, it will be very thankfully received. Do not forget this request, or be offended because we have made it.

We are aware it is a common custom among business men not to pay debts till a bill is presented; but we really think it is pleasanter for both parties to have no occasion for the bills.

We suppose many of our readers would prefer to have bills sent, whenever they are owing for six-months' subscription; but others sometimes feel grieved when a bill is sent them; while others are much perplexed, because they cannot send the money at once. Now the best way is to keep paid in advance. It is much more pleasant for all. No doubt, some to whom we send bills cannot pay at once, but can in a few weeks, or months at most. To such we would say, please sit down at once and write us a few words and let us know the facts in the case. If you wish the paper continued, and cannot pay at present, we think we are not asking too much to request a short letter from you, that we may know you are still pleased with our visits, which we shall try to make as pleasant and profitable as we can. We know you do not wish us to pay our own expenses for a long time; and yet we are willing to be very friendly and forbearing in the matter. There are some six or seven hundred poor families, to whom we cheerfully pay weekly visits, at our own expense. We should feel very sorry to be compelled to pass by one of them; and we shall not be obliged to, if we receive such a hearty response from our bills as we expect.

Perhaps "our paper" was never needed, or appreciated, more than at the present time, judging from the letters we receive. Many new ones are becoming interested, and "our paper" is doing much to awaken a wider interest in the prophecies relating to the coming of the Lord, and the other great truths of the Bible.

We still feel assured that the Lord is pleased with our efforts to scatter light by the means we are employing. Brn. and Srs., do not let the great work flag for the want of what you can do. If each should say, "what I owe will not make much difference among so many"; you can see at once we should soon be obliged to stop. Come, do not send us away empty this time, will you?

We purpose to send bills next week.

ANOTHER DRAFT.

It will be seen by a notice in another column, that the President has issued a proclamation for another draft of five hundred thousand men to take place next September 5th. The thought of this is enough to make one shudder. It seems awful to compel men to fight. When men fight voluntarily, the sight is shocking to all refined feelings, and entirely unchristian; but when professed christian nations oblige men to go and slaughter one another with all the barbarity of the heathen, requiring members of the same family to butcher each other in cool blood, we think something must be wrong. Shall we partake of it?

WHAT AM I DOING?

We think the question should be asked daily, "What am I doing for the Lord?" We all know he is doing great things for us, and we are anxious to have him continue his favors; but what are we doing for him? Let us come right to the point. Have you done any thing for the Lord to-day? Have you done a single act for the purpose of glorifying him? Did that motive actuate you in the performance of the deed? Or, like every thing been done with a selfish end in view? Have you spoken one word directly calculated to lead any one to seek the Savior, or to encourage a desponding [illegible] to the duty? In a word, we inquire, have you done any thing for the Lord to-day [illegible]

[illegible] of the one to come, should [illegible] its close? The enemies [illegible] Lord are earnestly employed night and day, sparing no effort calculated to fit men for destruction. Shall we not be as active to save them, as Satan and his followers are to destroy them? When we became the followers of Jesus, his word taught us to go and work in his vineyard. We can be his disciples on no other principle. Satan may keep one silent till it becomes a very heavy cross to speak for Jesus; but we know of no way to enjoy the continued smiles of our Lord but to do all to his glory. We have but little time left. Shall it be improved?

"MILES GRANT AND CHRIST."

The above is the heading of an article in the Banner of Light, May 21st, 1864. The writer says:—"The strength of Miles Grant's position in attacking Spiritualism lies in the fact of his assumption that the whole Bible is an infallible record. But this 'strength' is but weakness."

The writer then endeavors to show that Christ does not agree with Miles Grant's position relative to the Bible; therefore Miles should not endeavor to sustain his arguments any longer on the ground that the Bible is an infallible record. We still think it best to endorse the words of Jesus, who said of the "record"—"Thy word is truth." When our Spiritualist friends can show us something more reliable than the word of the Lord, it will be soon enough to give up our "position," that Spiritualism is of the Devil, and that all the spirits who claim to be departed human ones are liars like their leader.

SAVING THE SMOKE.

We think the following facts are worth knowing. We would recommend others to make the same experiment, and trust they will not be disappointed in the result:—

"A workman, writing to the editor of the British Workman, says: 'Since I gave up smoking, I have put into a box the amount that I formerly spent every week in tobacco. At the end of the year, on opening the box, I have counted out a sum of money sufficient to provide myself with periodicals and newspapers for the year, which sum I called 'solid smoke.'"

A PROPHECY.

In the New England Spiritualist, of June 21st, 1856, we find a prophecy given to H. Hugunin, editor of the North Western Orient. It is a sample of a large number of prophecies purporting to come from the "spirit world." It is as follows:—"The autumn of '56 will afford the last President that will be elected under the Constitution, and he will not fulfill his term."

LAST-DAY SIGNS.

We learn from the prophet Joel, that, "before the great and terrible day of the Lord come," he "will show wonders in the heavens." Among the wonders he mentions "blood, and fire, and pillars of smoke."

The following from the Troy Daily Times of 1860, is an interesting item on this subject:—

AURORA.—Gentlemen of steady habits and benevolent dispositions, returning to their anxious wives from attendance upon sick friends,—guardians of the public peace and dignity,—and others who were round about at any period between one and two o'clock this morning, were treated to a sight of the most magnificent auroral display that has been seen for a number of years. The entire Northern belt of the heavens was most brilliantly illuminated,—so much so as to enable from the light thus afforded the reading of coarse print out of doors. At the northeast, apparently as a base of the columns of light which were shooting up to every segment of the circle, was a flood of crimson light, of the deepest hue, which looked like a sea of blood, and to the northeast, apparently suspended from the sky by a knot of fire, along which the flashes of light were playing, was a monstrous sword of fire, the hilt of which dropped down to the horizon, while the point curved far up to the zenith, a "trenchant blade" indeed, and most distinctly defined upon the background of the sky in the form of a Turkish scimetar. Between the two points, the ordinary electrical flashes, as a fire-works manufacturer would say, mutated with the most agreeable and dazzling effect. The exhibition lasted some two hours, and won the entire approbation of the select audience by whom it was witnessed. Whether the sword phenomenon presages war in Europe; a conquest by the National Union party; or—as was suggested by a police-man while looking at it—a knock down and drag-out at Charleston, remains to be seen. It is very evident that such a strange token cannot be entirely destitute of meaning."

HIGH PRICES.

The high prices of printing paper have compelled nearly all, who publish either daily, weekly or monthly periodicals, to advance the price of their papers from 20 to 50 per cent. A meeting of publishers was held in Mercantile Hall, Boston, on Tuesday afternoon, July 18th, 1864, for the purpose of deciding what to do in view of the pr[illegible] of things. The following is a brief [illegible] of the result, as published in the Boston Journal:—

"MEETING OF NEWSPAPER PUBLISHERS. A meeting of the representatives of the weekly press was held in Mercantile Hall yesterday afternoon, at which Mr. O. M. Brewer, the chairman, made some remarks, giving estimates of the comparative expenses of 1860 and 1864, showing that while all expenses, and especially those incurred in the publication of weekly newspapers, had advanced from twenty to two hundred and fifty per cent., the prices of these papers generally remained at the old and now ruinous rates.

On an informal motion of Mr. Haber that it is expedient to raise the prices of weekly papers,' the Rev. R. A. Ballou made a forcible speech in its favor, and was followed in the same vein by Messrs. [illegible] [illegible] of the [illegible] religious, literary [illegible] and political [illegible] [illegible] that the subscribers agree to [illegible]

[illegible] The 10th [illegible] "the [illegible] to persons conscientiously opposed to bearing arms." What is the existing law?

H. W. DANN.

The law referred to we understand to be the following:

"Members of religious denominations, who shall by oath or affirmation declare that they are conscientiously opposed to the bearing of arms, and who are prohibited from doing so by the rules and articles of faith and practice of such religious denomination, shall, when drafted into the military service, be considered non-combatants, and shall be assigned by the Secretary of War to duty in the hospitals, or to the care of freedmen, or shall pay the sum of three hundred dollars, to be applied to the benefit of the sick and wounded soldiers; provided, no person shall be entitled to the benefit of this section, unless his declaration of conscientious scruples against bearing arms shall be supported by satisfactory evidence that his deportment has been uniformly consistent with such declaration."

THE DROUTH.

The drouth in our land is becoming quite distressing in many places, to both man and beast. As the result, the crops will be very short in many localities,—not enough to pay for harvesting.

J. W. Clark, a correspondent of the Prairie Farmer, writes from Green Lake Co., Wis., June 26th, and says:—

There will be no wheat to sell in several counties round about here, next fall; and one-third of those who work land to get a living, will have to buy wheat, or its equivalent for their own consumption. There is also much difficulty in finding feed for stock. For instance, I have been compelled to graze my best mowing meadow to prevent starvation. But in many districts, there is much more difficulty of this sort, because they are much drier. The drouth has now prevailed about six weeks, with only one or two slight showers. Beans and potatoes, to a large extent, not yet up for want of moisture. Apples all gone with frost and drouth together. And in addition to this array of disasters, we have the plague in the shape of the seventeen year locust or cicada. They have been out of the ground about five weeks. The surface of the soil is riddled with the holes. The orchards are badly damaged by them; and hickory and burr oak trees are dead or dying by the score, from having their juices and life sucked out by them. And then the continual 'noise' and consequent confusion of the noisome pests. As to garden vegetables and the other little etceteras, that contribute to one's sustenance no less than the pleasure they afford, they are not to be found, and altogether things are so confounded, that to derive either profit or pleasure, we shall have to 'wait (at least) a little longer.'"

INFIDELITY.

It is very evident that infidelity is rapidly advancing, and we see no indications that its progress will be stayed. The churches appear to be fast asleep morally, but wide awake for fun, frolic, and war. Of course, such conduct will only serve to make infidels instead of christians. These are times when the friends of Jesus may well mourn and weep, fast and pray.

Says the Editor of the Montreal Witness:—

"It is a lamentable fact that scientific men in Britain, of the best stamp, are using their influence against the divine authority of the Scriptures."

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

I have no time to keep accounts, and hence must request persons sending for the books to send the pay. I have printed some six thousand copies of these books, with numerous pamphlets, notwithstanding prices were very high, and persons could not be found who would agree to take one fiftieth part of the number. After long delays to hear from those interested, delays which have only resulted in an advance of about one third in the prices of manufacturing, I have concluded that if any thing was to be done I must go at it and do it, as it was quite plain no one else would. I have accordingly raised and borrowed the means, and have bought the paper and printed the books. I have got some of them bound; the rest I am not able to get bound at present. I hope to raise money enough from sales to pay what I have borrowed, and to pay for binding the rest, and to pay the government tax, and then I can sell or give the rest away as the Lord may open opportunities.

The money I have invested I had much rather would be given away in books than to be hoarded up till the Lord comes, when the discount on greenbacks will be greater than it is now, and there will be no premium on gold either.

The prices at which I sell these books forbid all ideas of profit or speculation. No books of any private publisher in the market are sold at such low rates, so far as I know. Probably it may not be possible to replace them at these rates, as expenses are increasing and prices are advancing all the time. I propose however to give the castles of error one more shelling before I spike the guns. Who will help scatter these books? Let us hear from you at once. Address H. L. HASTINGS, 167 Hanover St., Boston, Mass.

For the World's Crisis.

NEW WORKS TO BE ISSUED SOON.

1. ON THE SUBJECT OF THE SABBATH.

And I wish to say to those who have written to me about my work on the subject of the Sabbath, and to others also who are interested, that I hope they will be patient, as I am now engaged in reviewing the Editor of the seventh-day Sabbath paper, published at Battle Creek, Mich., who has made a very lengthy reply to my articles, recently published in the Crisis.

I shall get the work ready for the press as soon as practicable; but, as I am not skimming on the surface of this question, it may be some weeks before the work will be finished. I propose to give, in the first place, my own work on the question, as recently published in the Crisis, a careful revision, and thus materially improve it. Then, in a supplement, I intend to present a review of the arguments opposed to the first-day Sabbath.

My reviewer says in his reply to me: "The prospect before the Sabbath cause was never [illegible] ing prostrate [illegible] perfect victory [illegible] quire more [illegible] He will need to send forth publications which can cope with such works as the History of the Sabbath by J. N. Andrews, which not only has not been answered, but remains to be ever attacked. We would not, however, counsel him (Preble) to any such effort," etc.

If the Lord is pleased to spare my life and health, with his blessing, such language as the above will not be used by the opposers of the first-day Sabbath, in a few months from this, with quite so good cheer. Let every lover of truth pray that the Lord will help to bring out the light on this long controverted subject, so that God's people may "rejoice in the truth."

2. "THE SECOND DEATH."

This work will embrace the late discussion between Dr. J. Litch and myself, as commenced in the Advent Herald, but not ended there. After publishing and replying to seven numbers from my pen, all at once the Dr. became silent, and after remaining thus for some four months, my articles "No. 8," and "No. 9," were returned to me unanswered. This work is designed to embrace the discussion as it appeared in the Herald, and also my full reply to Dr. Litch, together with the introductory and closing correspondence, etc.

3. THE WICKED DEAD WILL LIVE AGAIN.

This is to be a small Tract on the subject of the resurrection of the wicked. It will embrace the discussion between Geo. Storrs and myself, as published—the first part—in the late Bible Examiner, and the latter part in the Herald of Life, excepting my last article, which remains till now unanswered. The private correspondence will also be added, etc.

4. THE GOSPEL WEB.

This work will be based upon the three promises made to Abraham, as the warp; and other scriptures will be used as the woof, or filling, from which I intend, by the Lord's help, to weave a web which will trouble Judaizers to break.

If it had not been for the sickness and death in my family for the year past, the three works last named would have been issued before this time. T. M. PREBLE.

Correspondence.

From Sr. N. Colburn.

DEAR BRETHREN AND SISTERS:—It is now about ten years since I have been a believer in the speedy coming and personal reign of Christ on the earth, and I still hold these views sacred and dear. I believe Jesus will soon come and give his people rest. I know it has been a long time since we have been earnestly desiring to see the King in his beauty. Yes, the night has been long, and some of us have begun to grow weary, and, I fear, have well nigh fallen asleep. Dear brethren and sisters, let us awake; "for now is our salvation nearer than when we believed." Yes, "the night is far spent, the day is at hand;" then "let us not sleep as do others;" no, let us watch for the morning. For although our hope has long been deferred, we still believe the Judge standeth at the door. Then let us wait patiently, and soon Jesus will greet us with a smile, and give us a hearty welcome to all the joys of a paradise restored. This is what we want, but we must wait for it.

But dear brethren and sisters, are we ready? Let us look about ourselves, and see if we have on the wedding garment. If we have, we are ready to meet the heavenly Bridegroom. Then we can wait. But we must not get weary, and lay off our wedding apparel; no, for then we should not be ready. If we are sure we have on the wedding garment, let us keep it on; and let us be careful that we do not engage in any worldly business, which will be likely to soil our garment, and thereby unfit us to join with the company of the redeemed at "the marriage supper of the Lamb." Let us wait and watch till the Bridegroom cometh; then all will be well. Praise the Lord. Yes, all will be well when we are home at last, seated at Father's table, partaking of that rich fruit, plucked from "the tree of life," which God has promised to give to his children, when the supper is made ready. There will be no scoffers in that happy company; and those cold-hearted professors we so often hear saying, "my Lord delayeth his coming," who have begun "to eat and drink with the drunken," they will not be there. No, none but the pure in heart, and those who love the appearing of Jesus, will ever enter the pearly gates of the new Jerusalem, and sit down to the table in the kingdom.

Brother, sister, friend, shall we be there? Well, we hope to be there; but we have a fierce enemy to contend with, one that desires our eternal ruin, and will, if possible, turn our feet from the right path, and lead us down to death and destruction. But while we walk with God, we need not fear; for Satan dares not approach the place where God dwelleth. O how thankful we ought to be that we have such a friend to go with us. One who has promised never to leave nor forsake us. One that is stronger than all the hosts of hell combined. One who will, in his own good time, destroy Satan and all his works, and give his people a peaceable home on the earth renewed.

Let us live to God and abstain from all appearance of evil. "Let all bitterness and wrath and anger, and clamor and evil-speaking, be put away from" us, "with all malice;" and let us be "kind one to another, tender-hearted, forgiving one another, even as God for Christ's sake hath forgiven" us. The Lord help us to live in love and union, strive to do each other good, and when Jesus comes, may we sit down together at the table in the kingdom, where we can all speak face to face, and where all will be love. Pray for your unworthy and afflicted sister,

Magog, C. E., NAOMI COLBURN.

BRO. GRANT:—Thank the good Lord I still live and my life is crowned with God's goodness. My tour through Connecticut has been a pleasant one, and I trust profitable. I have enjoyed the hospitality of our friends in that State exceedingly, and they have helped me on my journey after a godly sort. Praise the Lord. [illegible] and sisters [illegible] [illegible] from the Publication Society. I feel grateful for the favors which have thus been bestowed upon me. It is a great help to me in introducing myself and the subject to strangers, where I travel; indeed, I do not see how I could get along without. The tracts and papers have generally been bestowed on those outside of the Advent ranks, and I trust good will be done. Light will increase. Yes, light does increase very rapidly too. Truth is omnipotent; it must, it will prevail.

The greatest obstacle that I have found in the way is the worldly-mindedness of the people. Business is very brisk in all the manufacturing districts in Connecticut, and every body is in a hurry. Brethren need to heed the caution of Jesus, to not be overcharged with business and cares. I rejoice to see the "World's Crisis" is being taken so generally, and the "Little Pilgrim" is fast becoming popular. O may these increase and abound more and more, is my prayer. I am about to return home, to spend a few weeks, and Chelmsford, Mass. will be my post-office address for six weeks to come.

B. SPAULDING.

Pleasant Valley, Ct., June 25th, 1864.

From Bro. Geo. Dillabaugh.

BRO. GRANT:—It has been some time since I have written for the "Crisis," and some may be ready to inquire where I am, and if I, like many others, am getting more in love with the present fleeting things of earth, than the greatest and most important of all questions revealed by the pen of inspiration; viz., the coming of our blessed Lord to restore all things spoken of by the holy prophets. The latter is my choice. I choose rather to have my name cast out, and spoken evil of, for truth's sake; to be numbered among the few who are in truth and righteousness, looking for the coming of the just one, than to be walking with the multitude, who profess to be the disciples of Christ.

The day of retribution is at hand. The vision will not much longer tarry. Soon, very soon, He, who has promised to come, will come, and speak peace to these warring elements. But who believes it? Who believes that we may be within two or three years of that time? Do all who profess to be looking for that day believe it? If you do, then we beseech you to prepare yourselves to appear before him with the garment of righteousness on. The King will not admit you into the marriage supper, unless you have the wedding dress on which has been kept UNSPOTTED amidst all the filth and pollution of the world.

O what a world of strife, war and bloodshed. How blessed it is to keep free from its spirit. Thank the good Lord, I am where I can breathe free air. I am free from strife and contention. Those who wish to contend about all doctrine and no practice, to the dividing and scattering of the little flock who ought to have one fold and one shepherd, (Christ,) can go on in their work, free from my company. I have made choice of a better way and better work. Where is the church now shining forth like a city built upon a hill? Echo answers, where? O may the Lord hasten the day when all the scattered jewels, which are now almost lost sight of, will be gathered where they will shine forth in beauty like the sun forever. Ye loved ones, do not let the world charm you. Stand ready. Keep free from strife and contention, if you stand alone. Better be like a Noah or a Lot, than to be swept away with the multitude.

Yours, striving to be ready to meet my soon coming Lord with joy and gladness. Isa. 25: 9; 1 John 4: 17-19. G. DILLABAUGH.

Seneca Falls, June 5th, 1864.

From Bro. Isaac Tice.

BRO. GRANT:—I am now in my sixty-ninth year. I have been waiting for the coming of the Lord since 1842. I was then a member of the Presbyterian church in Albany. I was cited before the session for what they called covenant-breaking and adhering to that strange doctrine called Millerism. The session charged me with absenting myself from the church and breaking the vows I had made to sustain and to unite and support in all cases. These charges I frankly acknowledged, and was glad that I had an opportunity to speak for myself. On the above grounds I was suspended for the present, hoping that I might see my error and come back. I was often solicited to give up my delusion and come back, but this I never found repentance for. But I took my bark and sailed, leaving the big ship, with a few good sailors called "Millerites." I have been on the voyage over twenty years, standing stout to the helm and not in the least discouraged. Methinks I almost see land. My course is onward and upward. I stand as firm as when I first embarked. My hope grows brighter and brighter. O! how it makes this pulse beat when I think of the coming of Jesus, and his setting up his everlasting kingdom, superceding all these broken and destructive governments. I pray "Thy kingdom come!" I think the "time of trouble" has fully commenced, and hope Michael will soon stand up and deliver his people. I have often been taunted with,—"Brother, when are you going up?" but nothing can move me. I am on a rock and there I stand. Let the storm rage; my bark is strong; it cannot wreck.

My wife and self are alone here. We read the Crisis and the Bible, and have sweet comfort, believing that the terminus is near. I would like to see some good Advent brother come this way. We wish to be baptized, believing this to be of divine command. We have been sprinkled, but we want to be buried in the likeness of our Savior. Bro. Dow is coming west. I would like to have him stop. If I could get a line from him I would meet him at Dowagiac depot, and constrain him to come and give some lectures to this people. I could not promise much money, but he should have something to eat and a bed to sleep on, and I will pay his expenses while here. ISAAC TICE.

BRO. GRANT:—I closed business last spring to go west for my health, and have devoted all my time since then (so far as my health would permit) to preaching the everlasting gospel. PIONEERING.—NO. 5.

June 9th. Started for the discussion at Floyd; preached Saturday and Sunday to an attentive congregation who were looking forward with great anxiety to the coming contest, which commenced on Tuesday, June 14th.

The discussion was held in a comfortable Methodist meeting-house. The house was well seated, some coming fifteen miles and returning each day. The numbers increased until the gallery and every place was crowded full. And I must say a more respectable and well-behaved audience I never had before me in a debate. There were but few of our ministers present. Bro. Hough was so engaged in a meeting about thirty miles off that he could not be there. But the Lord was with us in answer to prayer. I never felt more sustained in my life; and besides those of like precious faith, there was many a cheering word dropped in my ear by the unconverted. God bless them, and lead them to the rock that is higher than we. I was repeatedly called infidel, a gambler, and accused of using trickery, etc., etc. And as one-half of the time was not enough for them, they put up one of their preachers to preach at night, by whom many things were said. He told them if he was one of these sugar-coated infidels, he would get down on all fours, lop his ears and go to the woods, and seek a lower race of animals. Are they not "fierce despisers"? Lord, pity them. I stayed over the next Lord's day, and did all the preaching. But the Lord gave me favor with the people. There were three baptized and ten taken into the church.

I believe more fully than ever that the "dead know not any thing," and by the grace of God I shall proclaim it as long as it is in my power. I formed some acquaintances by this opportunity that will not soon be forgotten. Eld. Cory, of the Disciple church, was present. If desired, the debate on the "Kingdom," can be published in full.

I would say that the brethren and friends helped me well as God had prospered them. We arrived home the 23d of June, since which time we have been scarcely three days without rain, and crops are looking good, except those hurt by the bugs.

CONFERENCE AT HOLLISTON, MS.

The conference at Holliston commenced Saturday morning, July 9th, and continued over Sabbath. There were brethren and sisters from Ashland, Framingham, Natick, and Dover, most of whom came on the first train Saturday morning and remained with us over the Lord's day.

We had an excellent meeting, characterized throughout with christian love and union. There was not a prayer made, a hymn sung, nor a word of exhortation given, which did not appear to be in perfect union with the word and Spirit of God. No strife about words to no profit, no doting about questions whereof cometh envy and perverse disputings, but perfect harmony reigned throughout the meeting.

The prayer and conference meetings, which were continued from an hour to an hour and a half preceding the preaching in the morning, P. M., and evening, were exceedingly interesting and profitable. It was really a feast of fat things to the church at Holliston to meet so many of like precious faith from the adjoining towns, who were of the same mind, and all looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ. All seemed to be impressed with the idea that it was the Lord's meeting, in which all had something to do. We all felt that we were encouraged, strengthened, and blessed, in our endeavors to do the will of the Lord.

Bro. H. L. Hastings preached to us five times during the conference, upon subjects that were both interesting and instructive. The church have purchased a family Bible, in which each brother and sister writes their own name in the family record; thus dispensing with all written covenants, creeds, resolves, and rules of discipline for church government, except what they find in the pure word of testimony, believing that the word of God alone is sufficient "for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness, that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works." And in accordance with that word, there was an ordination during the afternoon service of Sunday, when Bro. J. N. Sherman was set apart and ordained as their Elder, and Bro. James Sherman was ordained as their deacon; also Bro. G. A. Cole, who has preached some four or five years, and who has recently moved into this place from Boston, was ordained as an Evangelist. After the afternoon service, the death and sufferings of our Redeemer were commemorated by the observance of the Lord's passover. The religious interest for the salvation of sinners from death still continues. The prayer and conference meeting last Saturday evening was very interesting. One rose for prayers. May the Lord still bless, and many more be added to their number. H. K. FLAGG.

ECONOMY.—The general apprehension that a commercial revulsion or "crash" is in reserve for us may with incidental causes, operated to bring business down upon a cash basis. The process of the change is thus sketched by a leading business organ, the New York Economist:

"The importer refuses to sell his goods except for cash, which he can immediately turn into exchange; the manufacturer declines to take in payment of his productions a fixed amount of money in six months, which on the day he receives it may not represent half the amount of property it did on that on which he sold his wares. The wholesale dealer cannot under such circumstances afford to give credit to his customers, even if he thought proper to speculate upon the future chances of the market [illegible] ... [illegible]

☞ NOTICE.

All orders and monies for the World's Crisis, or for Books and Tracts for sale at this Office, and all matters pertaining to the business of the Office, must be addressed to the Business Agent,

MILES GRANT, Crisis Box, Boston.

WILBRAHAM.

Remember the campmeeting at Wilbraham is appointed to begin Aug. 22nd, and close Aug. 29th. Are you going? Don't say, "I can't leave my business." Where can you better spend your week of vacation? Don't say, "It will cost too much." You may obtain that which will be of more real value to you than all the treasures of the world.

Get ready,—be there from its commencement to its close. Try to get others to go with you. "Come thou with us, and we will do thee good."

TO WHOM IT MAY CONCERN.

We sometimes have crossing duties to perform. We have one now; it is to say that we must again send bills to all who are owing two dollars and over for the Crisis. We should like to get along without doing this. But our bills must be paid; and we are dependent on friends, to whom we send "our paper," for the means with which to do it. As money is quite plenty now, we think our patrons will find it a favorable time to pay what is now due us. We have endeavored to wait on all patiently, and have no disposition to oppress any one; but if those who are owing the office money will make a little extra effort at this time to pay a part or all, it will be very thankfully received. Do not forget this request, or be offended because we have made it.

We are aware it is a common custom among business men not to pay debts till a bill is presented; but we really think it is pleasanter for both parties to have no occasion for the bills.

We suppose many of our readers would prefer to have bills sent, whenever they are owing for six-months' subscription; but others sometimes feel grieved when a bill is sent them; while others are much perplexed, because they cannot send the money at once. Now the best way is to keep paid in advance. It is much more pleasant for all. No doubt, some to whom we send bills cannot pay at once, but can in a few weeks, or months at most. To such we would say, please sit down at once and write us a few words and let us know the facts in the case. If you wish the paper continued, and cannot pay at present, we think we are not asking too much to request a short letter from you, that we may know you are still pleased with our visits, which we shall try to make as pleasant and profitable as we can. We know you do not wish us to pay our own expenses for a long time; and yet we are willing to be very friendly and forbearing in the matter. There are some six or seven hundred poor families, to whom we cheerfully pay weekly visits, at our own expense. We should feel very sorry to be compelled to pass by one of them; and we shall not be obliged to, if we receive such a hearty response from our bills as we expect.

Perhaps "our paper" was never needed, or appreciated, more than at the present time, judging from the letters we receive. Many new ones are becoming interested, and "our paper" is doing much to awaken a wider interest in the prophecies relating to the coming of the Lord, and the other great truths of the Bible.

We still feel assured that the Lord is pleased with our efforts to scatter light by the means we are employing. Brn. and Srs., do not let the great work flag for the want of what you can do. If each should say, "what I owe will not make much difference among so many"; you can see at once we should soon be obliged to stop. Come, do not send us away empty this time, will you?

We purpose to send bills next week.

ANOTHER DRAFT.

It will be seen by a notice in another column, that the President has issued a proclamation for another draft of five hundred thousand men to take place next September 5th. The thought of this is enough to make one shudder. It seems awful to compel men to fight. When men fight voluntarily, the sight is shocking to all refined feelings, and entirely unchristian; but when professed christian nations oblige men to go and slaughter one another with all the barbarity of the heathen, requiring members of the same family to butcher each other in cool blood, we think something must be wrong. Shall we partake of it?

WHAT AM I DOING?

We think the question should be asked daily, "What am I doing for the Lord?" We all know he is doing great things for us, and we are anxious to have him continue his favors; but what are we doing for him? Let us come right to the point. Have you done any thing for the Lord to-day? Have you done a single act for the purpose of glorifying him? Did that motive actuate you in the performance of the deed? Or has every thing been done with a selfish end in view? Have you spoken one word directly calculated to lead any one to seek the Savior, or to encourage a desponding one to endure to the end? In a word, we inquire, have you done any thing for the Lord to-day, in word or deed? Did you yesterday? Have you within a week? Will Jesus say "Well done" to such as you? [illegible] ... Is it not time to think seriously about these things? If you have done nothing for the Savior for the last week, will you be obliged [illegible] to say the name of the one to come, should you live to see its close? The enemies of our Lord are earnestly employed night and day, sparing no effort calculated to fit men for destruction. Shall we not be as active to save men, as Satan and his followers are to destroy them? When we became the followers of Jesus, his word taught us to go and work in his vineyard. We can be his disciples on no other principle. Satan may keep one silent till it becomes a very heavy cross to speak for Jesus; but we know of no way to enjoy the continued smiles of our Lord but to do all to his glory. We have but little time left. Shall it be improved?

"MILES GRANT AND CHRIST."

The above is the heading of an article in the Banner of Light, May 21st, 1864. The writer says:—"The strength of Miles Grant's position in attacking Spiritualism lies in the fact of his assumption that the whole Bible is an infallible record. But this 'strength' is but weakness."

The writer then endeavors to show that Christ does not agree with Miles Grant's position relative to the Bible; therefore Miles should not endeavor to sustain his arguments any longer on the ground that the Bible is an infallible record. We still think it best to endorse the words of Jesus, who said of the "record"—"Thy word is truth." When our Spiritualist friends can show us something more reliable than the word of the Lord, it will be soon enough to give up our "position," that Spiritualism is of the Devil, and that all the spirits who claim to be departed human ones are liars like their leader.

SAVING THE SMOKE.

We think the following facts are worth knowing. We would recommend others to make the same experiment, and trust they will not be disappointed in the result:—"A workman, writing to the editor of the British Workman, says: 'Since I gave up smoking, I have put into a box the amount that I formerly spent every week in tobacco. At the end of the year, on opening the box, I have counted out a sum of money sufficient to provide myself with periodicals and newspapers for the year, which sum I called 'solid smoke.'"

A PROPHECY.

In the New England Spiritualist, of June 21st, 1856, we find a prophecy given to H. Huguniu, editor of the North Western Orient. It is a sample of a large number of prophecies purporting to come from the "spirit world." It is as follows:—"The autumn of '56 will afford the last President that will be elected under the Constitution, and he will not fulfill his term."

LAST-DAY SIGNS.

We learn from the prophet Joel, that, "before the great and terrible day of the Lord come," he "will show wonders in the heavens." Among the wonders he mentions "blood, and fire, and pillars of smoke."

The following from the Troy Daily Times of 1860, is an interesting item on this subject:—

AURORA.—Gentlemen of steady habits and benevolent dispositions, returning to their anxious wives from attendance upon sick friends,—guardians of the public peace and dignity,—and others who were round about at any period between one and two o'clock this morning, were treated to a sight of the most magnificent auroral display that has been seen for a number of years. The entire Northern belt of the heavens was most brilliantly illuminated,—so much so as to enable from the light thus afforded the reading of coarse print out of doors. At the northeast, apparently as a base of the columns of light which were shooting up to every segment of the circle, was a flood of crimson light, of the deepest hue, which looked like a sea of blood, and to the northeast, apparently suspended from the sky by a knot of fire, along which the flashes of light were playing, was a monstrous sword of fire, the hilt of which dropped down to the horizon, while the point curved far up to the zenith, a "trenchant blade" indeed, and most distinctly defined upon the background of the sky in the form of a Turkish scimetar. Between the two points, the ordinary electrical flashes, as a fire-works manufacturer would say, mutated with the most agreeable and dazzling effect. The exhibition lasted some two hours, and won the entire approbation of the select audience by whom it was witnessed. Whether the sword phenomenon presages war in Europe; a conquest by the National Union party; or—as was suggested by a police-man while looking at it—a knock down and drag-out at Charleston, remains to be seen. It is very evident that such a strange token cannot be entirely destitute of meaning."

HIGH PRICES.

The high prices of printing paper have compelled nearly all, who publish either daily, weekly or monthly periodicals, to advance the price of their papers from 20 to 50 per cent. A meeting of publishers was held in Mercantile Hall, Boston, on Tuesday afternoon, July 18th, 1864, for the purpose of deciding what to do in view of the pr[illegible]te of things. The following is a brief [illegible] of the result, as published in the Boston Journal:—

"MEETING OF NEWSPAPER PUBLISHERS. A meeting of the representatives of the weekly press was held in Mercantile Hall yesterday afternoon, at which Mr. O. M. Brewer, the chairman, made some remarks, giving estimates of the comparative expenses of 1860 and 1864, showing that while all expenses, and especially those incurred in the publication of weekly newspapers, had advanced from twenty to two hundred and fifty per cent, the prices of these papers generally remained at the old and now ruinous peace rates.

On an informal motion of Mr. Usher that it is expedient to raise the prices of weekly papers, the Rev. R. A. Ballou made a forcible speech in its favor, and was followed in the same vein by Messrs. J. R. Elliot, secretary, and Guild of the Bulletin, and others, representing the religious, literary, agricultural, commercial and political presses. In conclusion the meeting unanimously

Resolved, That the subscribers agree to advance the terms of subscription to our respective journals from 20 to 50 per cent., by [illegible] ... their rates of advertising from 20 to 50 per cent."

THE ENROLLMENT LAW.

The 10th [illegible] of the Enrollment Law says "the enrollment ... [illegible] respect to persons conscientiously opposed to bearing arms." What is the existing law?

H. W. DANN.

The law referred to we understand to be the following:—

"Members of religious denominations, who shall by oath or affirmation declare that they are conscientiously opposed to the bearing of arms, and who are prohibited from doing so by the rules and articles of faith and practice of such religious denomination, shall, when drafted into the military service, be considered non-combatants, and shall be assigned by the Secretary of War to duty in the hospitals, or to the care of freedmen, or shall pay the sum of three hundred dollars, to be applied to the benefit of the sick and wounded soldiers; provided, no person shall be entitled to the benefit of this section, unless his declaration of conscientious scruples against bearing arms shall be supported by satisfactory evidence that his deportment has been uniformly consistent with such declaration."

THE DROUTH.

The drouth in our land is becoming quite distressing in many places, to both man and beast. As the result, the crops will be very short in many localities,—not enough to pay for harvesting.

J. W. Clark, a correspondent of the Prairie Farmer, writes from Green Lake Co., Wis., June 26th, and says:—

There will be no wheat to sell in several counties round about here, next fall; and one-third of those who work land to get a living, will have to buy wheat, or its equivalent for their own consumption. There is also much difficulty in finding feed for stock. For instance, I have been compelled to graze my best mowing meadow to prevent starvation. But in many districts, there is much more difficulty of this sort, because they are much drier. The drouth has now prevailed about six weeks, with only one or two slight showers. Beans and potatoes, to a large extent, not yet up for want of moisture. Apples all gone with frost and drouth together. And in addition to this array of disasters, we have the plague in the shape of the seventeen year locust or cicada. They have been out of the ground about five weeks. The surface of the soil is riddled with the holes. The orchards are badly damaged by them; and hickory and burr oak trees are dead or dying by the score, from having their juices and life sucked out by them. And then the continual 'noise' and consequent confusion of the noisome pests. As to garden vegetables and the other little etceteras, that contribute to one's sustenance no less than the pleasure they afford, they are not to be found, and altogether things are so confounded, that to derive either profit or pleasure, we shall have to 'wait (at least) a little longer.'"

INFIDELITY.

It is very evident that infidelity is rapidly advancing, and we see no indications that its progress will be stayed. The churches appear to be fast asleep morally, but wide awake for fun, frolic, and war. Of course, such conduct will only serve to make infidels instead of christians. These are times when the friends of Jesus may well mourn and weep, fast and pray.

Says the Editor of the Montreal Witness:—

"It is a lamentable fact that scientific men in Britain, of the best stamp, are using their influence against the divine authority of the Scriptures."

H. L. HASTINGS,

June, 1864. 107 Hanover St., Boston.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

I have no time to keep accounts, and hence must request persons sending for the books to send the pay. I have printed some six thousand copies of these books, with numerous pamphlets, notwithstanding prices were very high, and persons could not be found who would agree to take one fiftieth part of the number. After long delays to hear from those interested, delays which have only resulted in an advance of about one third in the prices of manufacturing, I have concluded that if any thing was to be done I must go at it and do it, as it was quite plain no one else would. I have accordingly raised and borrowed the means, and have bought the paper and printed the books. I have got some of them bound; the rest I am not able to get bound at present. I hope to raise money enough from sales to pay what I have borrowed, and to pay for binding the rest, and to pay the government tax, and then I can sell or give the rest away as the Lord may open opportunities.

The money I have invested I had much rather would be given away in books than to be hoarded up till the Lord comes, when the discount on greenbacks will be greater than it is now, and there will be no premium on gold either.

The prices at which I sell these books forbid all ideas of profit or speculation. No books of any private publisher in the market are sold at such low rates, so far as I know. Probably it may not be possible to replace them at these rates, as expenses are increasing and prices are advancing all the time. I propose however to give the castles of error one more shelling before I spike the guns. Who will help scatter these books? Let us hear from you at once. Address H. L. HASTINGS, 167 Hanover St., Boston, Mass.

For the World's Crisis.

NEW WORKS TO BE ISSUED SOON.

1. ON THE SUBJECT OF THE SABBATH.

And I wish to say to those who have written to me about my work on the subject of the Sabbath, and to others also who are interested, that I hope they will be patient, as I am now engaged in reviewing the Editor of the seventh-day Sabbath paper, published at Battle Creek, Mich., who has made a very lengthy reply to my articles, recently published in the Crisis.

I shall get the work ready for the press as soon as practicable; but, as I am not skimming on the surface of this question, it may be some weeks before the work will be finished. I propose to give, in the first place, my own work on the question, as recently published in the Crisis, a careful revision, and thus materially improve it. Then, in a supplement, I intend to present a review of the arguments opposed to the first-day Sabbath.

My reviewer says in his reply to me: "The prospect before the Sabbath cause was never more encouraging, nor the halo of light that encompasses the subject more bright and glorious. The ball has been set in motion; and it bids fair to ere long, like the barley loaf that tumbled into the camp of the Midianites, laying prostrate their tents and leading on to perfect victory. To prevent this work will require more than his ... present ... He will need to send forth publications which can cope with such works as the History of the Sabbath by J. N. Andrews, which not only has not been answered, but remains to be even attacked. We would not, however, counsel him (Preble) to any such effort," etc.

If the Lord is pleased to spare my life and health, with his blessing, such language as the above will not be used by the opposers of the first-day Sabbath, in a few months from this, with quite so good cheer. Let every lover of truth pray that the Lord will help to bring out the light on this long controverted subject, so that God's people may "rejoice in the truth."

2. "THE SECOND DEATH."

This work will embrace the late discussion between Dr. J. Litch and myself, as commenced in the Advent Herald, but not ended there. After publishing and replying to seven numbers from my pen, all at once the Dr. became silent, and after remaining thus for some four months, my articles "No. 8," and "No. 9," were returned to me unanswered. This work is designed to embrace the discussion as it appeared in the Herald, and also my full reply to Dr. Litch, together with the introductory and closing correspondence, etc.

3. THE WICKED DEAD WILL LIVE AGAIN.

This is to be a small Tract on the subject of the resurrection of the wicked. It will embrace the discussion between Geo. Storrs and myself, as published—the first part—in the late Bible Examiner, and the latter part in the Herald of Life, excepting my last article, which remains till now unanswered. The private correspondence will also be added, etc.

4. THE GOSPEL WEB.

This work will be based upon the three promises made to Abraham, as the warp; and other scriptures will be used as the woof, or filling, from which I intend, by the Lord's help, to weave a web which will trouble Judaizers to break.

If it had not been for the sickness and death in my family for the year past, the three works last named would have been issued before this time. T. M. PREBLE.

Correspondence.

From Sr. N. Colburn.

DEAR BRETHREN AND SISTERS:—It is now about ten years since I have been a believer in the speedy coming and personal reign of Christ on the earth, and I still hold these views sacred and dear. I believe Jesus will soon come and give his people rest. I know it has been a long time since we have been earnestly desiring to see the King in his beauty. Yes, the night has been long, and some of us have begun to grow weary, and, I fear, have well nigh fallen asleep. Dear brethren and sisters, let us awake; "for now is our salvation nearer than when we believed." Yes, "the night is far spent, the day is at hand;" then "let us not sleep as do others;" no, let us watch for the morning. For although our hope has long been deferred, we still believe the Judge standeth at the door. Then let us wait patiently, and soon Jesus will greet us with a smile, and give us a hearty welcome to all the joys of a paradise restored. This is what we want, but we must wait for it.

But dear brethren and sisters, are we ready? Let us look about ourselves, and see if we have on the wedding garment. If we have, we are ready to meet the heavenly Bridegroom. Then we can wait. But we must not get weary, and lay off our wedding apparel; no, for then we should not be ready. If we are sure we have on the wedding garment, let us keep it on; and let us be careful that we do not engage in any worldly business, which will be likely to soil our garment, and thereby unfit us to join with the company of the redeemed at "the marriage supper of the Lamb." Let us wait and watch till the Bridegroom cometh; then all will be well. Praise the Lord. Yes, all will be well when we are home at last, seated at Father's table, partaking of that rich fruit, plucked from "the tree of life," which God has promised to give to his children, when the supper is made ready. There will be no scoffers in that happy company; and those cold-hearted professors we so often hear saying, "my Lord delayeth his coming," who have begun "to eat and drink with the drunken," they will not be there. No, none but the pure in heart, and those who love the appearing of Jesus, will ever enter the pearly gates of the new Jerusalem, and sit down to the table in the kingdom.

Brother, sister, friend, shall we be there? Well, we hope to be there; but we have a fierce enemy to contend with, one that desires our eternal ruin, and will, if possible, turn our feet from the right path, and lead us down to death and destruction. But while we walk with God, we need not fear; for Satan dares not approach the place where God dwelleth. O how thankful we ought to be that we have such a friend to go with us. One who has promised never to leave nor forsake us. One that is stronger than all the hosts of hell combined. One who will, in his own good time, destroy Satan and all his works, and give his people a peaceable home on the earth renewed.

Let us live to God and abstain from all appearance of evil. "Let all bitterness and wrath and anger, and clamor and evil-speaking, be put away from" us, "with all malice;" and let us be "kind one to another, tender-hearted, forgiving one another, even as God for Christ's sake hath forgiven" us. The Lord help us to live in love and union, strive to do each other good, and when Jesus comes, may we sit down together at the table in the kingdom, where we can all speak face to face, and where all will be love. Pray for your unworthy and afflicted sister,

Magog, C. E. NAOMI COLBURN.

From Bro. B. Spaulding.

BRO. GRANT:—Thank the good Lord I still live and my life is crowned with God's goodness. My tour through Connecticut has been a pleasant one, and I trust profitable. I have enjoyed the hospitality of our friends in that State exceedingly; and they have helped me on my journey after a godly sort. Praised the Lord. Yes, and I praise the brethren and sisters too. They have done all they could to make my labors pleasant. I have had a glad hearing, and have distributed a good many tracts ... [illegible] ... the office of the "World's Crisis" probably from the Publication Society. I feel grateful for the favors which have thus been bestowed upon me. It is a great help to me in introducing myself and the subject to strangers, where I travel; indeed, I do not see how I could get along without. The tracts and papers have generally been bestowed on those outside of the Advent ranks, and I trust good will be done. Light will increase. Yes, light does increase very rapidly too. Truth is omnipotent; it must, it will prevail.

The greatest obstacle that I have found in the way is the worldly-mindedness of the people. Business is very brisk in all the manufacturing districts in Connecticut, and every body is in a hurry. Brethren need heed the caution of Jesus, to not be overcharged with business and cares. I rejoice to see the "World's Crisis" is being taken so generally, and the "Little Pilgrim" is fast becoming popular. O let these increase and abound more and more, is my prayer. I am about to return home, to spend a few weeks, and Chelmsford, Mass., will be my post-office address for six weeks to come.

B. SPAULDING.

Pleasant Valley, Ct., June 25th, 1864.

From Bro. Geo. Dillabaugh.

BRO. GRANT:—It has been some time since I have written for the "Crisis," and some may be ready to inquire where I am, and if I, like many others, am getting more in love with the present fleeting things of earth, than the greatest and most important of all questions revealed by the pen of inspiration; viz., the coming of our blessed Lord to restore all things spoken of by the holy prophets? The latter is my choice. I choose rather to have my name cast out, and spoken evil of, for truth's sake; to be numbered among the few who are in truth and righteousness, looking for the coming of the just one, than to be walking with the multitude, who profess to be the disciples of Christ.

The day of retribution is at hand. The vision will not much longer tarry. Soon, very soon, He, who has promised to come, will come, and speak peace to these warring elements. But who believes it? Who believes that we may be within two or three years of that time? Do all who profess to be looking for that day believe it? If you do, then we beseech you to prepare yourselves to appear before him with the garment of righteousness on. The King will not admit you into the marriage supper, unless you have the wedding dress on which has been kept UNSPOTTED amidst all the filth and pollution of the world.

O what a world of strife, war and bloodshed. How blessed it is to keep free from its spirit. Thank the good Lord, I am where I can breathe free air. I am free from strife and contention. Those who wish to contend about all doctrine and no practice, to the dividing and scattering of the little flock who ought to have one fold and one shepherd, (Christ,) can go on in their work, free from my company. I have made choice of a better way and better work. Where is the church now shining forth like a city built upon a hill? Echo answers, where? O may the Lord hasten the day when all the scattered jewels, which are now almost lost sight of, will be gathered where they will shine forth in beauty like the sun forever. Ye loved ones, do not let the world charm you. Stand ready. Keep free from strife and contention, if you stand alone. Better be like a Noah or a Lot, than to be swept away with the multitude.

Yours, striving to be ready to meet my soon coming Lord with joy and gladness. Isa. 25: 9; 1 John 4: 17-19. G. DILLABAUGH.

Seneca Falls, June 5th, 1864.

From Bro. Isaac Tice.

BRO. GRANT:—I am now in my sixty-ninth year. I have been waiting for the coming of the Lord since 1842. I was then a member of the Presbyterian church in Albany. I was cited before the session for what they called covenant-breaking and adhering to that strange doctrine called Millerism. The session charged me with absenting myself from the church and breaking the vows I had made to sustain and to unite and support in all cases. These charges I frankly acknowledged, and was glad that I had an opportunity to speak for myself. On the above grounds I was suspended for the present, hoping that I might see my error and come back. I was often solicited to give up my delusion and come back, but this I never found repentance for. But I took my bark and sailed, leaving the big ship, with a few good sailors called "Millerites." I have been on the voyage over twenty years, standing stout to the helm and not in the least discouraged. Methinks I almost see land. My course is onward and upward. I stand as firm as when I first embarked. My hope grows brighter and brighter. O! how it makes this pulse beat when I think of the coming of Jesus, and his setting up his everlasting kingdom, superceding all these broken and destructive governments. I pray "Thy kingdom come!" I think the "time of trouble" has fully commenced, and hope Michael will soon stand up and deliver his people. I have often been taunted with,—"Brother, when are you going up?" but nothing can move me. I am on a rock and there I stand. Let the storm rage; my bark is strong; it cannot wreck.

My wife and self are alone here. We read the Crisis and the Bible, and have sweet comfort, believing that the terminus is near. I would like to see some good Advent brother come this way. We wish to be baptized, believing this to be of divine command. We have been sprinkled, but we want to be buried in the likeness of our Savior. Bro. Dow is coming west. I would like to have him stop. If I could get a line from him I would meet him at Dowagiac depot, and constrain him to come and give some lectures to this people. I could not promise much money, but he should have something to eat and a bed to sleep on, and I will pay his expenses while here. ISAAC TICE.

Dowagiac, Cass Co., Mich.

From Bro. F. A. Smith.

BRO. GRANT:—I closed business last spring to go west for my health, and have devoted all my time since then (so far as my health would permit) to preaching the everlasting gospel. I have had first rate times. Sinners are converted and backsliders reclaimed. To God be all the glory. O that my health was better. I pant for the land of rest. I am glad to hear of your success in Montreal. ... [illegible] in the name of your Master, and he will bless you. I would really like to be with you in some of your meetings. Love to all.

F. A. SMITH.

From Bro. E. Stephens:—

Bro. Grant:—We received a number of the Crisis in answer to our letter, and it filled our hearts with joy. We do love the coming of Jesus and all its kindred doctrines. We have no preacher here to preach the gospel of the kingdom. We are in the wilderness, sixty or seventy miles from any of our Advent friends; have not been to an Advent meeting for over eight years, and we have nothing but the popular preaching of the day, in which there is no food for us. O! how glad we would be if one of the many preachers in the States would come to this part of Canada, and give us a series of lectures. There are but three of us, but I think a goodly number would come out to hear. E. Stephens.

Norland, C. W.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Sr. C. Case, North Canton, Ct., writes:—

"About five years since, I and my family commenced reading the 'Crisis,' which was lent us by a sister; while at the same time, we, being Methodists, took the Christian Advocate and Journal, and sundry other papers. Among the whole, not one interested me like the 'Crisis.' Such a variety of short pieces, right to the point, benefited me. While reading them, it was constantly suggested to my mind, you go and write, and perhaps you can benefit some one in return. Well, being placed as I was, I did not feel free to do so; knowing if I was found writing for an Advent paper, much censure would fall upon me.

I began to examine the Advent doctrine, and compare it with the word, and found they harmonized. We have taken the paper two years and a half, and feel as if we cannot do without it. About two years since I felt as if I could not advance any further till I came out, openly and confessed I had changed my views, which I did by being buried with Christ in baptism. Now I feel willing to go without the camp bearing the reproach. I constantly stand ready to inquire, Lord, what wilt thou have me to do? and do it, regardless of the frowns or flatteries of men. After having performed one duty like an obedient servant, I am ready to obey the next command without stopping to confer with flesh and blood. In this way, by being perfectly obedient, I have peace in Christ daily, and joy in the Holy Ghost. My path is like that of the just, which shines more and more unto the perfect day. I endeavored to keep all consecrated to God,—my good name among the rest. I am willing to be lightly esteemed, and have my name cast out as evil for Christ's sake.

Nothing is more common than to hear professors saying, 'I wish I could feel thus free in Christ; I don't feel as I wish to.' How can a child expect the smiles of a parent while continuing in a course of disobedience? They who are free in Christ are free indeed. Christ is a satisfying portion. I have found it so for the last seven years. I rejoice in the prospect of soon seeing Jesus as he is, and being made like him."

Bro. F. Kiss, a German, writes from Beaver, Ohio:—

"My prayer to God is, that your paper may send forth more and more light in this dark hour, such light as will put the false light of Satan in Spiritualism to shame. We are hurrying fast by into the time of Anti-christ and the false prophet; therefore let us stand up firmly for the living God and his saving truth. Those that overcome all will inherit all. The higher and mightier the waves of iniquity roll on toward us, the higher and bolder let us lift up the banner of Christ and his righteous government for the benefit of those that are seeking the right way and know not hardly whither to turn.

One thing, Bro. Grant, I would earnestly recommend,—establish and defend manfully the faith of Christ, the apostles, the prophets, and all martyrs. We need it; we cannot get along with any thing less. The beast must be overcome by the blood of the Lamb and the word of testimony; we can not give stronger testimony than through deeds. Let us earnestly pray for the gifts of the Holy Spirit, so that a division line be formed between God's people and Satan's followers. God be with us, and unite us in his Spirit."

Bro. S. B. Sill, Three Rivers, Mich., writes:—

"Editor of the Crisis—Dear Sir,—Having seen a sample of your paper, while in a distant part of the country, I determined to send to you for it. Enclosed please find $—. I am a professing christian, and a member of the Presbyterian church; but I wish to see if any brother in Christ possesses more light than we are in possession of; and if so, I heartily wish you a God speed in your work, and will gladly avail myself of the assistance I may derive from the perusal of the Crisis. Yours in the love of Christ."

Bro. G. F. Locke, East Weare, N. H., writes:—

"O how I prize our excellent paper. It seems as though I could hardly wait until the day comes round for its arrival. May the rich blessing of God ever rest with you, is the prayer of thy unworthy Bro. in Christ."

Sr. E. A. Tuttle, Westville, writes:—

"I want to thank you for your valuable paper. I think it is the best religious paper in the world. I hail its coming with pleasure. It is all the preaching I have on the second coming of Christ, which is a doctrine I love."

Obituaries.

NAOMI SMITH.

In Addison, Vt., on Sunday, the 12th of June, at 10 1-2 A. M., Mrs. Naomi Smith, aged eighty-seven. "She sleeps in Jesus."

The subject of this obituary was the daughter of Caleb and Freelove Olin, who are numbered among the early settlers of Vermont. The deceased was born in Shaftsbury, Vt., Sept. 15th, 1777,—married Daniel Smith of Adams, Mass., and was the faithful mother of ten children, eight of whom are still living.

Mrs. Smith experienced hope in Christ at about thirty years of age, and was baptized into fellowship with the Addison Baptist church, by Eld. J. Howard, in 1807, retaining her church connection for over fifty years. Mrs. Smith was an active worker in her home-sphere, and her good moral qualities endeared her to all who knew her in life and death. In view of prospective dissolution, Sister Smith was somewhat timid, but during her last brief sickness of seven days, she felt resigned, and ere she died confessed her trust in Christ Jesus as her shield, fortress, and delivering Savior.

Her last moments resembled the languishment of an infant to its undisturbed slumber. Her funeral services were conducted in the Addison Baptist church, June 12th. Sermon by the writer, from Rom. 8: 17. Closing prayer by Eld. Goodspeed. The remains of the departed are deposited in the family cemetery upon the homestead farm, in hope of the promised resurrection.

Rev. F. Gurdon.

HANNAH WOODRUFF.

Died at West Avon, Ct., June 8th, Sr. Hannah Woodruff, aged seventy-five years.

Sr. Woodruff was looking for redemption through the coming of the Lord. No one of our number seemed to prize the privilege of being at our meeting more than did Sr. Woodruff. Although she had been quite feeble for some time, yet [illegible] would be found at our meetings, telling of the goodness of God to her, and exhorting others to get ready to meet the judgment. [illegible] while dear mother will live again. O may they be prepared when that bright celestial morning shall dawn, that they may meet again never to part, but to spend an endless life in the paradise of God.

S. Woodruff.

CHRISTOPHER NEWELL.

Died in Richmond, Me., July 8th, 1864, of consumption, Bro. Christopher Newell.

Bro. N. had been strongly opposed to our faith previous to hearing Bro. Damman preach last Oct., from the text, "Thy kingdom come," when he became convinced that we had the truth. I saw him a few days before he died, and he told me that he believed in the personal coming and reign of Christ on the earth, and the sleep of the dead. He had a good hope of living again.

RACHEL HUNTER.

Died in Richmond, June 24th, 1864, of consumption, Sr. Rachel Hunter, aged sixty years.

She leaves but one son, having buried her husband and several children. Sr. H. was a good woman. She loved the truths of the gospel.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Liverpool July 9th. Queenstown 10th.

The Great Eastern left here to-day for London to take in the Atlantic cable.

DANO-GERMAN WAR. Nothing has transpired as to the alleged peace negotiations.

An engagement took place on the 2d off Ragan Island between five Prussian gunboats and a Danish frigate and steamer. The fight lasted three-quarters of an hour; the gunboats were unable to continue owing to four out of their ten guns being disabled.

The Berlin papers call it a slight encountre, and say the Danes withdrew in a damaged condition.

It was reported that the Austrians had taken possession of the Island of Toler.

FRANCE. The Emperor has gone to Vichy.

The Moniteur announces the satisfactory adjustment of the questions between France and Morocco.

ITALY. Several prominent persons have been arrested in Venice suspected of connection with the Venitian Committee.

SPAIN. Five war vessels were to leave Spain for the Pacific during July.

Liverpool July 14th, Queenstown 15th.

A certain amount of panic was prevailing at Copenhagen, and the war journals were calling for the abandonment of the territories and the concentration of the Danish forces in Jutland.

The Germans have commenced crossing the Lym Fiord.

The advance into North Jutland is apparently begun.

Other continental news is quite unimportant.

The Independence Belge asserts that the King of Denmark has invoked and obtained the intervention of Napoleon.

DOMESTIC.

Washington, July 19. We now hold upward of sixty-two thousand rebel prisoners. Four hundred of these are officers.

New York, July 21. The Commercial's Niagara Falls dispatch states that George Sanders is going to Washington to propose to the President to proclaim an armistice and call a convention of all the States, to which the South will agree and attend.

The Herald's Nashville dispatch of to-day says Gen. Sherman has, by a brilliant flank movement in the teeth of the enemy, in strong force posted at Atlanta, and by a rapid movement, thrown his whole army to the left of Atlanta on the railroad at Decatur, thus severing rebel communications with Richmond.

Near Winchester, July 20. Breckinridge divided his force at Berryville last night, sending Early to Winchester and the other division toward Millwood. I attacked and defeated Early to-day in front of Winchester, killing and wounding over 300 officers and men, and capturing four cannon, several hundred small arms and about 200 prisoners.

The Herald's Washington dispatch says the Secretary of State has determined to make a formal demand upon the British Government for the surrender of the pirate Semmes.

The World's Washington dispatch says the rebel loss in the recent raid will amount to 2000. Montgomery county, Md., is overrun with rebel stragglers. It is reported that the rebels did not go into the Shenandoah valley, but took the route this side of the Blue Ridge to Richmond.

Charleston is being vigorously shelled. Fort Sumpter has been subject to a very heavy fire from Morris Island.

All the troops had returned from the recent expedition.

Washington, July 24. The Government has received dispatches from Gen. Sherman announcing that on Friday the rebels, under Gen. Hood, massed a heavy force against his left wing, consisting of McPherson's division, composed of Logan's and Blair's corps, and made a desperate attack, gaining a temporary advantage. The enemy, after terrific fighting, in which a number of charges were made by both sides, were repulsed with much slaughter and driven into their fortifications.

Major General McPherson, during the battle, became separated from his staff and was killed by sharpshooters firing from an ambuscade.

The loss of Gen. McPherson is deeply deplored by the Government, and will fill the hearts of all loyalists with sadness and gloom.

After Gen. McPherson's death Gen. Logan assumed command of his grand division.

A later dispatch states that our forces had obtained possession of the elevated ground on the northeast of the town, and that siege guns had been mounted which command the place; also that the rebels were burning their stores preparatory to a retrograde movement.

Our troops buried on Saturday 1000 rebels who were left on the field within our lines, besides which the rebels buried many of their own dead near their works. It is estimated that their killed and wounded on Friday exceeded 6000. Our loss reached about 2500 killed and wounded.

New York, July 25. The Herald's Nashville dispatch of the 24th says Hood has been reinforced from Charleston and elsewhere. There is a strong belief that the rebels cannot get away from Atlanta.

CALL FOR 500,000 MEN.

BY THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

A PROCLAMATION.

Whereas, By an act approved July 4th, 1864, it is provided that the President of the United States may call for any number of men as volunteers, for the respective terms of one, two or three years for military service, and that in case the quota or any part thereof of any town, township, ward of a city, precinct or election district, or of a county not so sub-divided, shall not be filled, within fifty days after such call, the President shall immediately order a draft for one year, to fill such quota, or any part thereof which may be unfilled, and

Whereas, The new enrollment heretofore ordered is so far completed as that the aforementioned act may not be put in operation for recruiting and keeping up the strength of the armies in the field, for garrisons and such military operations as may be required for the purpose of suppressing the rebellion and restoring the authority of the United States in the insurgent States,

Now, therefore, I, Abraham Lincoln, President of the United States, do issue this my call for five hundred thousand volunteers for military service, provided nevertheless that all credits which may be established under section eight of aforesaid act, on account of persons who have entered the naval service during the present rebellion, and by credits for men furnished to military service in excess of calls heretofore made for volunteers will be accepted under the call for one, two or three years as they may elect, and will be entitled to the bounty provided by law for the period of service for which they enlist, and I hereby proclaim, order and direct that immediately after the fifth of September, being fifty days from the date of this call, a draft for troops to serve for one year shall be held in every town, township, ward of a city, precinct, election district, or a county not so sub-divided, to fill the quota which shall be assigned to it under this call, or any part thereof which may be unfilled by volunteers on the said fifth day of September, 1864.

(Signed) ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

By the President:

WM. H. SEWARD, Secy. of State.

Washington, July 18th, 1864.

ANOTHER SIGN ATTENDING.—In enumerating the characteristics of the last days, our Savior says "there shall be famines." It has been announced by the public prints, that, in Hungary, the harvest has failed for the last two years. The plains of the Theis, which, from their extreme fertility, have been called the granary of Hungary, are now little better than a desert. The numerous flocks and herds which compose the wealth of this pastoral people have perished. Townships which formerly possessed from 20,000 to 30,000 head of cattle, now have not 1,000 left. Many farmers, for want of fodder, have been obliged to slaughter their oxen, sheep and pigs, and good horses have been sold for 2*l.* or 3*l.* each. The excessive severity of the winter and sickness have further aggravated the sufferings of the people. At this moment starving multitudes are wandering about the country, men, women and children, pale and emaciated, to an extent fearful to behold.

HOG CHOLERA IN ENGLAND.—For several months past, says the Scottish Farmer, pigs have died in large numbers in various counties in England. The disease is the hog cholera so commonly prevalent in Ireland and America; though there appears to be a material difference in its form in different parts of the country. The inspectors of meat in the city of London have seized a very large number of carcasses, which were spotted throughout with extravasated blood. The skin was marked like the human skin in a case of typhus; the subcutaneous fat has been much discolored by patches of extravasated blood, varying in size from a pin's head to a crownpiece. The muscles have been similarly discolored, but greater ravages by blood transudations could be discovered in the heart, lungs and kidneys. Cleanliness and easily digested food constitute the best preventives.

THE DROUTH IN WESTERN MASSACHUSETTS.—The drought is still upon us, and its destructive effects are to be seen on every hand. Fields are drying up, crops of every kind are suffering severely, and speedy rain will save them only partially. The damage to crops can hardly be estimated, but it must be immense. The crop of potatoes will not be half an average one, and the second crop of grass will be exceedingly small. It is admitted by every one that this drouth is more severe than we ever before had in this region. Streams are drying up to the detriment of manufacturing interests, and the cry on every hand is for speedy and copious rain.—Northampton Gazette.

THE TOTAL PUBLIC DEBT.—According to an official statement, the total public debt on the 5th of July was seventeen hundred and ninety-two millions, eight hundred and sixty-seven thousand and forty dollars and fifty-seven cents, against seventeen hundred and forty millions, thirty-six thousand, six hundred and eighty-nine dollars and fifty-three cents on the 28th of June, which shows an increase of fifty-two millions, eight hundred and thirty thousand, three hundred and fifty-one dollars and four cents, for week ending 5th instant. This important difference is mainly caused by requisitions made on the department for money to pay the troops on the first of the month.

PRICES IN THE CONFEDERACY.—The rebel Commissioners of Appraisement for the State of Virginia, after consultation, as they say, with prominent farmers, and the leading millers and business men of Richmond, have agreed upon a new schedule of prices, among which are the following:

"Wheat, $30 per bushel; flour, $150 a $168 per barrel; corn, $24 per bushel; corn meal, $25 50 per bushel; bacon, hog round, $5 per pound; lard, $5 per pound; peas and beans, $30 per bushel; Irish potatoes, $10 per bushel; beef cattle, $40 a $50 per one hundred pounds gross; sorghum molasses, $20 per gallon."

EXAMINE THEM.—A recent emission of spurious fifty-cent notes (the new plate) has been put in circulation. They can be readily detected by observing the following marks: They are an eighth of an inch shorter than the genuine; the words "fifty cents," which surmount the head of Washington, are very pale and indistinct in the counterfeit, while the letters are very black and distinct in the genuine. The bronze circle around the head in the counterfeit can hardly be seen, while the genuine is a deep color. The spurious, though indistinct in all its outlines, is darker than the original.—Philadelphia North American.

WHAT THE REBEL PIRATES HAVE DONE.—The two rebel pirates, the Alabama and Florida, with their tenders, have succeeded in reducing our commercial marine nearly three-quarters within three years. In 1860 the total tonnage of the United States, exclusive of whaling and steam tonnage, was 5,219,181 tons. In 1864 it is in the neighborhood of 1,674,616 tons. That is, we have lost in four years, 3,644,566 tons—not of course by captures alone, but by the transfer of American vessels to foreign flags.

DEFEAT OF THE ENGLISH IN NEW ZEALAND.—The war in New Zealand is beginning to attract attention and excite uneasiness in England. The British troops have sustained a severe defeat, which presents some ominous features, and has given rise to curious surmises. On the 29th April Gen. Cameron attacked unsuccessfully a strong position held by the natives.

☞ It is stated that the rebels have carried off the railroad iron on the track of Manassas Railroad from the junction of that road with the Orange and Alexandria Railroad clear to Strasburg. The Warrenton branch of the Orange and Alexandria Railroad has been torn up, and the iron sent to Richmond.—Boston Journal.

ITEMS.

☞ The directors of the Sixth Avenue railroad, New York, have given orders that colored people shall hereafter be allowed to ride in all the cars of that company. There is now no railroad left in that city from which persons are excluded on account of their color.

☞ Flour rose in price in Washington last week to $20, and other necessaries of life in the same proportion. The markets were nearly destitute of provisions, owing to the devastation of the country northward.

☞ The loss by the great conflagration which has been raging in the lumber country, in the northern part of Wisconsin, will amount to $150,000. In many instances whole villages were destroyed.

☞ The rebels are about to recognize Maximilian the First. A letter intercepted by some of Sherman's soldiers states, apparently upon good authority, that representatives will shortly leave Richmond for Mexico.

☞ The Sultan has appointed two Christians members of the Grand Council, and others have been promoted to high official positions. This liberal tendency on his part is a mark of progress in Turkey.

☞ Miss Lucy Sinclair, belonging in Stratham, Mass., died in Lowell on Tuesday of convulsions caused by drinking too freely of cold water and bathing while in a state of perspiration. She was twenty-two years of age.

☞ At the grand reviews and parades of the French troops, two cries are invariably heard in the ranks: "Long live the Emperor," and "Down with England!" These cries are heard across the channel.

☞ It is proposed to erect a suspension-bridge over the straits of Messina to unite Sicily with the main land. The chains are to be of cast steel, and strong enough to support several railway trains.

☞ The rush of emigrants to New York is unparalled. Within twenty-four hours, ending at noon June 22d, five vessels came in, bringing 3234 passengers, all from Liverpool.

☞ There are now about 140,000 sick and wounded soldiers in the hospitals throughout the country. This includes all those in camp hospitals, of which there are about fifty thousand.

☞ The laborers on the wharves at Boston demand $4 a day, and those working for stevedores fifty cents an hour.

☞ The Crystal Palace at Sydenham has now been open ten years, during which time it has been visited by 15,000,000 people.

☞ Great preparations are being made for cotton culture in Mexico, Central America and the Sandwich Islands.

☞ The city of Atlanta contains about 20,000 inhabitants, 5000 having been added, by refugees and officials since the war began.

☞ The St. Louis papers report a severe drought in Missouri.

☞ Garibaldi has been elected Grand Master of the Freemasons in Italy.

☞ The Rothschilds are to open a bank in Mexico, with a capital of 60,000,000.

☞ Several papers in New York State have suspended on account of the pressure of the times.

Meeting of the Advent Christian Association.

The 5th annual meeting of this Society will be held at Wilbraham Grove, commencing at 4 o'clock P. M., Tuesday, Aug. 23d, 1864.

A full representation from all churches co-operating with this Society, and a full attendance of preachers thus co-operating is desirable at this meeting. Questions too important to admit of neglect or indifference on the part of the churches scattered abroad, or of the ministry, will come before this meeting. Does the Constitution require amendment? Shall there be any change in the editorial management of the Crisis? To whom as officers of the Society shall we intrust the funds and various interests of the same for the coming year? These, among many others that will arise, are questions to be decided at this meeting. Let no trifling pecuniary consideration, nor loss of time, prevent a general gathering of the friends of this Association. Each church (i. e., society of believers in Jesus Christ) co-operating, is entitled to one delegate, and one additional delegate for every fifty members above the number of twenty-five members.

Remember ☞ That all delegates sent by churches to the Advent Christian Association must be furnished with written credentials, or forfeit their right to membership. ☜

H. F. CARPENTER, Clerk.

Rutland, Vt., July 7th, 1864.

Meeting of the Board.

The Board of the Advent Christian Association will meet at Wilbraham Grove, Tuesday, Aug. 23d, 1864, at 9 o'clock, A. M. Punctual attendance requested. H. F. CARPENTER, Clerk.

Wisconsin Annual Conference.

The "Advent Christian Conference" will hold its yearly session in connection with the Wisconsin Campmeeting, at Okee, Columbia Co., Wis., twenty miles north west from Madison, by the way of Sodi, beginning September 11th, 1864.

Let every church send delegates, and every minister be in attendance if possible; otherwise be sure to report by letter. Churches and ministers who have not yet united, should be sure to do so this year, that we may move in order and harmony, and consequently with greater strength for good. Delegates should bring letters of appointment from churches, and ministers with whom we are not acquainted should bring letters of commendation.

Letters may be sent to me at Baraboo, Sauk Co., Wis. W. SHELDON, Secretary of Conf.

THE CONSTITUTION

Of the Advent Christian Association as now revised and amended.

ART. I. This Society shall be known by the name of the Advent Christian Association.

ART. II. The objects of this Society shall be the promulgation of Bible truth and the promotion of vital piety by the formation of a Christian Publication Society for the issue of books, tracts and periodicals.

ART. III. The officers of this Society shall be a President, Vice-President, Secretary, Treasurer and nine Directors, who, together with the Editor or Editors, shall constitute a Board of Managers.

ART. IV. The members of this Society shall consist of all pastors and evangelists co-operating, and of delegates from churches* also co-operating, and of all officers of this Association. Each church shall be allowed one delegate and one additional delegate for every fifty members above the number of twenty five members.

ART. V. The duties of the officers shall be the same as are usually performed by such officers. And the Board of Managers shall by means of Committees whom they shall appoint provide for the discharge of the duties indicated in the second article of this Constitution. A majority of the Board at any meeting duly notified and two-thirds present at any time without notice, shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business. The Board shall also fill vacancies occurring until the next annual meeting of the Society. The Board shall make annual reports of all funds received and disbursed, of business transacted, and of the condition of the various interests of the Society. The Board shall be chosen by ballot at the annual meeting of the Society.

ART. VI. The annual meeting of the Society shall be held at such time and place as shall be declared by adjournment of the Society, or appointed by the Board. Special meetings may be called by the Society, by public notice given at least three weeks previously, at the request of ten members, either preachers or delegates from the separate churches.

ART. VII. This Constitution may be amended by a majority at any regular meeting, when two months' notice of the proposed amendment has been given, or without such notice, by two-thirds of the members present at any annual meeting.

ART. VIII. The Editor or Editors of the World's Crisis shall be chosen by ballot at the annual meeting of the Advent Christian Association, or at any special meeting called for that purpose, provided six weeks' notice be given of the same through the columns of the Crisis.

Proposed amendment for Art. IV. now on the table:—"And each church living at such a distance that they cannot conveniently be represented by a delegate from among themselves, may note by written communication to the Secretary, or may select as their proxy any person whom they may designate, whether he reside among them or not."

NOTE. A church is defined in the words of Wesley, "A Society of believers in Jesus Christ."

Campmeeting.

There will be a campmeeting in Wolcott, Ct., commencing Sept. 5th, and continuing through the week and over the following Sabbath, on land owned by Bro. Hector Smith. This meeting will be in a beautiful grove near the highway, with an excellent spring of water on the ground, and with every other convenience desirable to make it an object for the brethren and sisters to come.

This is an entirely new field, and hopes are entertained that both preachers and brethren and sisters will come filled with faith that God will bless the effort to the saving of some. Bro. Smith and wife have stood almost alone in this place for twenty years witnesses to the truth of the Savior's speedy coming, and now ask the co-operation of the brethren while he makes this effort to benefit his fellow men.

We hope there will be a general rally of all the brethren and sisters from the surrounding towns. Come bringing your tents, and stay through the meeting. Brethren coming by Railroad east or west, will stop at Bristol. This is on the Hartford, Providence, and Fishkill R. R., where teams will be in readiness to carry passengers to the ground. Those coming on the Canal Road will stop at Southington, where they will find conveyance. Other arrangements noticed hereafter.

For the Brethren, RALPH WILLIAMS.

Campmeeting.

There will be a campmeeting in Savoy, commencing Aug. 29th, and continuing one week, on the old battle ground at Bro. Noah Mirick's. Horse keeping will be furnished by Bro. Mirick. There will be a victualing tent on the ground, where food can be had by the week or day, or single meal, or otherwise. As cotton cloth is so high, we do not expect brethren can get tents unless they have old ones. If you have tents, bring them; but come well provided with buffalos, quilts and blankets, and a place will be provided to spread them under shelter.

Come, brethren, let there be a general rally. Come with warm hearts, settle all difficulties, banish all hardness. Our campmeetings are almost done. Soon notice will be given from head quarters to go into camp on the new earth. No preaching brethren are engaged. We want all to come who love God and wait for his Son, and who will give meat in due season—the last crowning truths of the gospel. H. HADLOCK, for the Church.

Notice.

Basket meetings will be held at the following places:

New Hartford, Butler Co., (as the brethren may arrange), Sunday, July 31st.

Three miles west of Forestville, Delaware Co., (as Wm. Smith may arrange), Aug. 7th.

These meetings are designed for two sermons in the grove, to commence at 10 1-2 o'clock, A. M. Each person is requested to bring a basket of provision, and provide himself with a seat. Let the rich dress in plain garments, so the poor will come and hear the gospel preached. Will the friends at the above places designate the spot, post up notices, and circulate the word all around? A collection will be taken up for home mission purposes, that the gospel may be preached in the highways and hedges. PETER S. W. DEYO.

Notice.

To the Brethren in Providence, R. I.—We have been informed if we can get fifty persons from Rhode Island to go to the Wilbraham campmeeting, they will reduce the fare on the Providence and Worcester R. R. Now will some Bro. in Providence be kind enough to see some of the railroad committee, and report the result in the Crisis? [illegible]

To the Friends in the West.

Providence permitting, I shall visit Illinois, Indiana, Michigan, and perhaps Wisconsin, soon after harvest. Friends wishing a visit from me, who have not already written, will please write soon, that I may make out my list of appointments. If you write, I shall try to call on you; but if you do not, I shall not know where you are. I shall go with my team, and make first for Ogle Co., Ill., thence to Dayton, Mich. Address PETER S. W. DEYO, Strawberry Point, Iowa.

Notice.

There will be a meeting in the Western Tabernacle, in Chicago, to commence Aug. 9th, and continue over the following Sabbath. Eld. Miles Grant, of Boston, will be present, and give a series of lectures on Bible Christianity, and its great antagonist—Spiritualism—and other important subjects relating to the signs of the times. Further notice next week.—Voice of the West.

Meeting at Meredith Village, N. H.

If the Lord will, I will preach at the Town Hall, Meredith Village, N. H., where Bro. T. E. Lang may arrange, on Friday evening, Saturday afternoon, and over Sunday, Aug. 5th, 6th, and 7th.

Shall we see a general rally to this meeting? Pray for us. H. L. HASTINGS.

Conference.

The Maine Quarterly Conference of Free Sabbath Adventists will hold its next session at North Berwick, Me., commencing Thursday evening, Aug. 4th, and continuing over the Sabbath and first day. All lovers of truth are cheerfully invited to attend. Also, if it be His good pleasure, I will hold meetings, as brethren at Meredith Village and New Hampton may arrange, Sundays 14th and 21st.

S. C. HANCOCK.

Notice.

The Christian Easterly Maine Conference is appointed to be held at North Searsport, to commence Thursday, Aug. 18th, at 5 o'clock P. M., and continue over the Sabbath.

By order of managers, M. YOUNG, Clerk.

Campmeeting in Wisconsin.

Probably our Wisconsin campmeeting will be held at Okee, Columbia Co., Wis., beginning on Sunday, Sept. 11th. Tents to be erected on Saturday, the 10th. Despite the hard times, we look for a grand rally. Particulars in time.

For the Committee, W. SHELDON.

Alton Campmeeting.

A campmeeting will be held at Alton, N. H., to commence Aug. 29th, and hold over the following Sunday. Also a meeting on the ground Sunday, the 28th. Particulars hereafter.

For the Committee, J. G. SMITH.

Campmeeting.

A campmeeting will be held in Etna, Me., on the same ground where it was in 1863, to commence the first week in September. Arrangements will be made accordingly. More hereafter.

ISRAEL DAMMAN.

We would say to our preaching Brethren that it is necessary we should receive their appointments as early as TUESDAY MORNING, as our paper goes to press about noon, otherwise they will not be inserted till the week following.

From Bro. E. Stephens.

Bro. Grant:—We received a number of the Crisis in answer to our letter, and it filled our hearts with joy. We do love the coming of Jesus and all its kindred doctrines. We have no preacher here to preach the gospel of the kingdom. We are in the wilderness, sixty or seventy miles from any of our Advent friends; have not been to an Advent meeting for over eight years, and we have nothing but the popular preaching of the day, in which there is no food for us. O! how glad we would be if one of the many preachers in the States would come to this part of Canada, and give us a series of lectures. There are but three of us, but I think a goodly number would come out to hear. E. Stephens.

Norland, C. W.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Sr. C. Case, North Canton, Ct., writes:—

"About five years since, I and my family commenced reading the 'Crisis,' which was lent us by a sister; while at the same time, we, being Methodists, took the Christian Advocate and Journal, and sundry other papers. Among the whole, not one interested me like the 'Crisis.' Such a variety of short pieces, right to the point, benefited me. While reading them, it was constantly suggested to my mind, you go and write, and perhaps you can benefit some one in return. Well, being placed as I was, I did not feel free to do so; knowing if I was found writing for an Advent paper, much censure would fall upon me.

I began to examine the Advent doctrine, and compare it with the word, and found they harmonized. We have taken the paper two years and a half, and feel as if we cannot do without it. About two years since I felt as if I could not advance any further till I came out openly and confessed I had changed my views, which I did by being buried with Christ in baptism. Now I feel willing to go without the camp bearing the reproach. I constantly stand ready to inquire, Lord, what wilt thou have me to do? and do it, regardless of the frowns or flatteries of men. After having performed one duty like an obedient servant, I am ready to obey the next command without stopping to confer with flesh and blood. In this way, by being perfectly obedient, I have peace in Christ daily, and joy in the Holy Ghost. My path is like that of the just, which shines more and more unto the perfect day. I endeavored to keep all consecrated to God,—my good name among the rest. I am willing to be lightly esteemed, and have my name cast out as evil for Christ's sake.

Nothing is more common than to hear professors saying, 'I wish I could feel thus free in Christ; I don't feel as I wish to.' How can a child expect the smiles of a parent while continuing in a course of disobedience?

They who are free in Christ are free indeed. Christ is a satisfying portion. I have found it so for the last seven years. I rejoice in the prospect of soon seeing Jesus as he is, and being made like him."

Bro. F. Kiss, a German, writes from Beaver, Ohio:—

"My prayer to God is, that your paper may send forth more and more light in this dark hour, such light as will put the false light of Satan in Spiritualism to shame. We are hurrying fast by into the time of Anti-christ and the false prophet; therefore let us stand up firmly for the living God and his saving truth. Those that overcome all will inherit all. The higher and mightier the waves of iniquity roll on toward us, the higher and bolder let us lift up the banner of Christ and his righteous government for the benefit of those that are seeking the right way and know not hardly whither to turn.

One thing, Bro. Grant, I would earnestly recommend,—establish and defend manfully the faith of Christ, the apostles, the prophets, and all martyrs. We need it; we cannot get along with any thing less. The beast must be overcome by the blood of the Lamb and the word of testimony; we can not give stronger testimony than through deeds. Let us earnestly pray for the gifts of the Holy Spirit, so that a division line be formed between God's people and Satan's followers. God be with us, and unite us in his Spirit."

Bro. S. B. Sill, Three Rivers, Mich., writes:—

"Editor of the Crisis:—Dear Sir,—Having seen a sample of your paper, while in a distant part of the country, I determined to send to you for it. Enclosed please find $—. I am a professing christian, and a member of the Presbyterian church; but I wish to see if any brother in Christ possesses more light than we are in possession of; and if so, I heartily wish you a God speed in your work, and will gladly avail myself of the assistance I may derive from the perusal of the Crisis. Yours in the love of Christ."

Bro. G. F. Locke, East Weare, N. H., writes.—

"O how I prize our excellent paper. It seems as though I could hardly wait until the day comes round for its arrival. May the rich blessing of God ever rest with you, is the prayer of thy unworthy Bro. in Christ."

Sr. E. A. Tuttle, Westville, writes:—

"I want to thank you for your valuable paper. I think it is the best religious paper in the world. I hail its coming with pleasure. It is all the preaching I have on the second coming of Christ, which is a doctrine I love."

Obituaries.

Naomi Smith.

In Addison, Vt., on Sunday, the 12th of June, at 10 1-2 A. M., Mrs. Naomi Smith, aged eighty-seven. "She sleeps in Jesus."

The subject of this obituary was the daughter of Caleb and Freelove Olin, who are numbered among the early settlers of Vermont. The deceased was born in Shaftsbury, Vt., Sept. 15th, 1777,—married Daniel Smith of Adams, Mass., and was the faithful mother of ten children, eight of whom are still living.

Mrs. Smith experienced hope in Christ at about thirty years of age, and was baptized into fellowship with the Addison Baptist church, by Eld. J. Howard, in 1807, retaining her church connection for over fifty years. Mrs. Smith was an active worker in her home-sphere, and her good moral qualities endeared her to all who knew her in life and death. In view of prospective dissolution, Sister Smith was somewhat timid, but during her last brief sickness of seven days, she felt resigned, and ere she died confessed her trust in Christ Jesus as her shield, fortress, and delivering Savior.

Her last moments resembled the languishment of an infant to its undisturbed slumber. Her funeral services were conducted in the Addison Baptist church, June 12th. Sermon by the writer, from Rom. 8: 17. Closing prayer by Eld. Goodspeed. The remains of the departed are deposited in the family cemetery upon the homestead farm, in hope of the promised resurrection.

Rev. F. Gunnison.

Hannah Woodruff.

Sr. Woodruff was looking for redemption through the coming of the Lord. No one of our number seemed to prize the privilege of being at our meeting more than did Sr. Woodruff. Although able [illegible] while dear mother will live again. O may they be prepared when that bright celestial morning shall dawn, that they may meet again never to part, but to spend an endless life in the paradise of God.

S. Woodruff.

Christopher Newell.

Bro. N. had been strongly opposed to our faith previous to hearing Bro. Damman preach last Oct., from the text, "Thy kingdom come," when he became convinced that we had the truth. I saw him a few days before he died, and he told me that he believed in the personal coming and reign of Christ on the earth, and the sleep of the dead. He had a good hope of living again.

H. D. Reed.

Rachel Hunter.

She leaves but one son, having buried her husband and several children. Sr. H. was a good woman. She loved the truths of the gospel.

H. D. Reed.
